VARIETY

THERE is a standard of variety in STANDARD PRINTS. The quality never varies, but the effect, the character of the photography, differs with almost every picture. The ability of our organization to give producers, directors and cinematographers in their prints the photographic atmosphere they deem most suitable to the story, is the secret of our success. The reputation of STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES has been built, not upon any one phase of laboratory work, but upon the ability to help makers of pictures bring to the screen their conception of the photoplay in its most effective and convincing form.

THIS versatility of our organization is giving the foremost producers of the West an entirely new realization of a laboratory's potential helpfulness. These producers no longer have a laboratory problem in making their pictures; instead they have ready co-operation from a group of photographic experts. When they have determined the character of laboratory work they want, they are then assured the highest possible quality of negative and prints. They have learned through experience that STANDARD PRINTS look better, wear longer, and save them money.

Chicago says:

PRISCILLA DEAN is splendid in this! Here is the best picture the Universal studios have turned out in some time, and one of the most vivid and entertaining productions we have seen this season. Priscilla Dean is an actress whose ability seems to grow with each succeeding picture, and I am sure you will be one of her admirers after you have seen this picture.

CHICAGO EVENING POST

AGAIN Priscilla Dean proves her right to the title "one of the screen's best actresses." She furnished the silver sheet with another brilliant bit of impersonation that will live to her credit. As a photoplay it is mighty interesting. CERTAINLY you are going to love Miss Dean. The sets and scenery are splendid. So is the acting. So is the direction.

CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE

BRISTLES with the dramatic! A climax that is suspenseful to the last degree. Fine entertainment for any screen. A strong fast-moving story that should jar any audience with the force of its appeal and its excellent characterizations.

Millions are Eagerly Waiting for "THE MESSAGE OF EMILE COUÉ"

To the American Public:

Despairing of being able to carry my message of self-help through autosuggestion to all those who waited for it here, I accepted the plan of my friends and gave it to the cinema which reaches millions throughout the entire country.

I found a sympathetic group of men who make moving pictures, and working with them, I have endeavoured to place my message on the screen in such a manner as would be understood by everyone. Before the picture was made, I went over the scenario time and again and made sure that each point was brought out in the clearest possible way.

The completed picture carries my message in the most graphic manner possible and I am glad to endorse it and give it my approval as the best possible picturization of what I have taught for a score of years and will teach until the end. Anyone seeing the picture will be able to understand, and I feel sure that hundreds of thousands will be helped to help themselves by seeing the lesson it tells.

I consider the picture a masterpiece and I have no hesitation in entrusting to it the task of carrying my message to the people of America and the world, knowing full well that it will instruct millions where I can only reach hundreds. The message of helpful autosuggestion must go on and I feel sure this picture will carry it to every home in this country. More than this, I feel sure that the message will be properly carried and will give the greatest possible help to all who see it.

SCIENCE has been finding out a lot of things lately. For example, that a man can starve to death eating tons of food that lacks VITAMINES.

Many exhibitors are wondering why they have been starving to death on a full program. Now they know.

Their program needs VITAMINES.

Well, we sell MOTION PICTURE VITAMINES. And we sell them reasonably. You don't have to buy two pounds of Caviar à la Gratin or Welsh Rarebit à la Cheese to get your VITAMINES from us.

We don't make you buy the restaurant when all you want is a good meal.

BIG ROMANTIC APPEAL-

The Supreme Passion

"The Supreme Passion" tells a story as poignantly beautiful as the poem that inspired it.

It revolves around a beautiful young girl who finds that love is too frequently inspired by mere physical beauty. As she wishes to be loved with a deeper affection, one that will never fade, she puts her lovers to a severe test to prove their sincerity.

Besides romance the picture has stirring moments of action and speed.

Mr. Thomas H. Ince,
Culver City, California.

Sir:

Permit me to express my unqualified appreciation of your splendid comedy production "The Hottentot." Real comedies are so scarce that one is sometimes tempted to believe that there "Aint no such animal." "The Hottentot," however, is a refreshing contrast to the usual picture manufactured for laugh-producing purposes. It is genuinely funny, contains suspense, abounds with thrills, and, best of all, tells a good, clean, wholesome story. The acting is excellent, photography flawless, and scenic effects a treat to the eye. On the whole, "The Hottentot" is a masterpiece that will linger in the memory. It has proved an exceptional box-office attraction for the Tivoli—have been playing it for two weeks to packed houses.

Here's hoping that you may long continue to turn out such worth-while entertainment.

Very sincerely yours,

I. E. Phelps, Manager,

The Big Leak

J. D. WILLIAMS, addressing the advertising men of the trade last week, took some shots at distribution; and the eager and intelligent questioning that followed showed clearly enough that his hearers whose job is the advertising, which means the selling of pictures, are doing a lot of thinking about distribution waste.

So, too, is every thinking man in the trade. And the handwriting is pretty clearly written on the walls of the industry.

Something is going to happen—some reordering of middleman cost and activity—just as the very same thing has happened in every other manufacturing—distributing—retailing field of broad interest to the public.

The domestic box office income of this business last year (U. S. and Canada) was, roughly but quite definitely, four hundred million dollars.

Of this sum about one hundred and twelve millions went to the distributor.

And from this sum the producers received not more than seventy-five million dollars.

In other words, the distribution cost totalled fully—as we estimate it—forty million dollars or over thirty-five per cent of the producer-distributor income. It is, of course, a well know fact, that in the case of some producer-distributors, the distribution cost has exceeded fifty per cent.

It isn't necessary to argue that this whole cost is intolerably high.

It is easy enough to explain the situation. Back of the present distribution system are those human ambitions, impulses and mistakes that attend the sudden development of any industry made suddenly great by popular demand.

But let explanations go. The fact to face is bulk distribution cost—around forty million a year.

Here's a hole that would swamp any other business today.

How long can this business stand it?

The main fault with the distribution situation today is the producer-owned exchange system—in itself and also in the excessive number of them.

Some are successful. These are efficiently run for one thing—as to selling and advertising. But principally they succeed because of product—because it is good enough and there is a sufficient volume of it. And there's always the chance—but only a chance—that one or more great popular successes will come in the cards. There are, in other words, superior production sense and resources back of these distributing concerns—and maybe, some luck.

But that doesn't change the basic truth—which is this: that producer-owned distribution tends to put the cart before the horse, in that it encourages volume of production so that the distribution cost per picture may be minimized. And volume of production as a basic policy is contrary to quality production.

In other words, the large tendency of distribution today is for overproduction. It makes overproduction. It clutters the market with too many pictures made for distribution ends and not necessarily for successful exhibition.

It works against the ideal situation of the industry, namely, fewer pictures and better pictures so that the theatres will give longer runs and thereby use to advantage the greatest force this business has—advertising.

Centralized distribution in the way of physical handling is a step forward.

But it is not the complete answer.

Just what that answer is we leave to those whose job it is to act.

But we predict that there will be changes; and they will come about this year.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

"THE Age Factor in Selling and Advertising" is the title of a book put out in pamphlet form by its publishers, "Photoplay Magazine." It will be distributed gratis to anyone interested. The publication features the subject of Youth and its influence on selling. Among its pages will be found tables and charts, existing material bearing upon the various products which fall within the age groups of the customers, the influence which young people have on the buying of their elders and vice versa, and a research program pertaining to merchants and advertisers. The book is not a theoretical treatise as its material comes from leading stores and from national advertisers.

WE are not speaking out of turn when we invite your attention to the remarkably fine pantomime expressed by Emil Jannings and Werner Kraus in Shakespeare's "Othello." Jannings as the Moor and Kraus as Iago carry out faithfully one's conception of the immortal characters. The growing jealousy of Othello who is a plaything in Iago's hands is definitely outlined.

As the creeping shadows of suspicion flit across Othello's face—as the diabolical cunning of a master mind (Iago) manifests itself through satanic expressions of carriage, gesture and facial pantomime—one feels that Shakespeare has not been misinterpreted.

It is the writer's opinion that the Bard can be done on the screen even though the eloquence of his lines is silenced. It's all in catching the psychology of his plots and characters. Messrs. Jannings and Kraus have not failed.

THE vogue in theatricals this year is Russian entertainment. Last year found it "getting dark on old Broadway" as they sing it in the Follies. The outstanding musical hit was "Shuffle Along," played by colored people, while most of the cabarets featured life on the ol' plantation. We predict that next season will find New York paying homage to old Tut of Egypt.

HERE'S good casting for you! John Barrymore has been engaged by Warner Brothers to appear in Clyde Fitch's "Beau Brummel."

THE Reverend Henry Bowlby who carries the colors of the Lord's Day Alliance is making preparations for the siege of New York. A little skirmishing in General William A. Brady's sector has inspired that fighter to give no quarter to the enemy. While he is marshalling his forces for a flank movement against Bowlby's anticipated attack on Sunday theatrical shows, it behooves the officers of the film divisions to throw up a smoke screen which will guide them to safety against the assault from the blue laws camp. Roosevelt said it. So did Ludendorff. "In times of peace prepare for war. The best defense is a good offense."

He intends to pay particular attention to the Russian novelties which have proved so successful this year.

NEWS item: Meighan To Return To Legitimate Stage. Screen patrons who read this note, undoubtedly, registered pathos, for the Paramount star is now firmly established as one of the favorites of the silent drama. His last picture, "Back Home and Broke," has made such a hit with the film public, that George Ade, the author, is making preparations to adapt it for the stage.

We agree with Tom Meighan that a spoken version of the film will prove popular. The central idea upon which the story is based, the excellent local color, and the rich characterization should be as human and vital upon the stage as they were upon the screen.

Tom Meighan will be missed when he returns to the footlights. Viewing the film horizon with our field glasses we cannot discover anyone capable to taking his place in the type of stories which have featured him of late.

WHEN the Twentieth Century Limited steamed into the Grand Central Station Tuesday morning it brought back E. Kendall Gillett, the treasurer of the NEWS. When interviewed by a member of the editorial staff concerning his trip to the Coast, Mr. Gillett remarked: "Los Angeles and San Francisco are good towns, but I'm glad to be back as I surely missed the boys who park themselves at high noon in front of the 729, Seventh Avenue."

ARTHUR H. SAWYER left Los Angeles the other day for Chicago where he will confer with his partner, Herbert Lubin, over "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

AT the Little Theatre, New York, an entertaining little play about movie people, "Polly Preferred," is packing them in at every performance.

It's about a chorus girl who became a picture star, because a live wire, even though impoverished, young promoter "sold" her to some hard boiled Broadwayites and because a director, not without his faults as men go, knew talent when he saw it.

Not much of a plot and not so new either, but the show's a hit. Why?

Because it's human, clean, likeable, pointedly humorous, and not so far fetched as one who didn't know the history of the picture business, might think.

They take a crack at some of our weaknesses and hold up for inspection, in a nice friendly way, a few of our w.k. vanities, too. And that won't hurt the industry either. Seeing ourselves as others see us, may serve as a lesson.

Maybe it takes a wise-cracker Broadway audience to appreciate this comedy—maybe picture people like it better than it deserves, but we hope it has a long run, in New York and elsewhere, so people may have a chance to see and hear something about the business besides—well, what they get in "dope" pictures and plays or wildly exaggerated stories of life in Hollywood as it isn't.

CHARLES RAY upon the completion of "The Courtship of Miles Standish," will present the reproduction of the Mayflower to the Los Angeles Museum, and it will then be removed to a park, where it will be placed permanently. Owing to the extensive and thorough research undertaken before building this, the reproduction has great historical value.

THE rumor that Cosmopolitan Productions were to be released through Goldwyn was confirmed this week. This is a big deal and looks as if it would be a satisfactory arrangement for both parties. It is known that Mr. Hearst has plans even more pretentious than anything he has yet attempted. The success of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" has convinced him that the big pictures are not only the artistic but also the financial successes, and neither money or talent is to be spared in turning out this sort.

It is assumed that "Little Old New York," now in production, will be the first Cosmopolitan production to go through Goldwyn.

ANOTHER ex-Motion Picture News man has made a further step upward in the industry. He is Earl J. Hudson, with First National for some five years in various capacities, who has gone out to the Coast to be general right hand man to Richard Walton Tully in connection with First National's production plans.

Earl has always wanted to get into the production end of the industry, and we know that he will be happy and successful in his new job. Best of luck.

CHARLES L. O'REILLY, president of the M.P.T.O. of New York State, was the speaker at the weekly luncheon of the A.M.P.A. Wednesday. Mr. O'Reilly discussed the uniform contract and severely criticised those "film politicians," as he called them, for their objections to "fancied wrongs" in the contract. He expressed it as his opinion that progressive exhibitors could not fail to see the advantage of the new form over the old.

In his address O'Reilly touched only the high lights of the contract and pointed out to the advertising men the benefits the exhibitor would derive from it.

Continuing, O'Reilly blamed high rentals on the disorganized condition of exhibitors, and though praising the Hays organization generally, declared that the organized producers and distributors had brought about increased rentals in almost the same ratio as theatre attendance had decreased. He placed that figure at 25 per cent.

NOT even a half million dollar fire was able to hold up the work of Cosmopolitan Productions. Four hours after the fire was discovered, last Sunday, a new switchboard and new telephone wires had been put in, and work was resumed in the offices on Monday morning as usual, despite several inches of water on the floors. Sets were hastily erected in the old Jackson Avenue studio and work started on the larger sets at the Tilford studios, formerly the eastern Famous Players plant. Duplicate costumes were ordered to replace those destroyed or damaged and on Wednesday studio work was going on as usual. Hence, only two days were actually lost, and there will be no delay in the production schedule whatever—a great tribute to the efficiency of the Cosmopolitan organization.

SOME interesting sidelights on the possibilities of production in Russia are given in an article in this issue by Huntley Carter, who has been writing for Motion Picture News on conditions abroad. There seems to be little cause for worry, just at the moment, on the part of American producers in regard to possible competition from that source. As long as these pictures are made under the supervision of the Soviet regime, from a propaganda angle, they are not likely to achieve any great popularity in this country. Once they get away from this sort of thing, however, they may be able to produce pictures with a distinctive appeal. The Chauve Souris, an artistic Russian vaudeville show, has been running for more than a year in New York, and now the Moscow Art Theatre, unquestionably the world's greatest repertoire company, is enjoying a highly successful run. At the moment, however, Russian films would not appear to be a serious factor in the American market.

N. Y. Censorship Hearing Due Mar. 6

Four Bills Calling for Repeal of Law Promise Warm Committee Session

IN what will probably be one of the biggest hearings held during the present session of the New York State Legislature scheduled for March 6 at the State Capitol, advocates of censorship and those who oppose the same, will have their innings before the Assembly Ways and Means Committee, in connection with the four bills already introduced calling for the immediate repeal of the present censorship law.

The hearing will take place during the afternoon, the hour depending on when the Legislature cleans up its morning's grist. Assemblyman Joseph McGinnies will preside. Either the Assembly or the Senate chambers will be pressed into service in case the crowd is so large that it cannot be accommodated in the committee room.

The greatest interest is being shown in the hearing. Legislators who are in no way connected with the committee, are planning to drop their work for the day and attend the hearing.

It is expected at Albany that all three members of the New York State Motion Picture Commission will be on hand and that Joseph Levenson, the secretary, who has been doing most of the talking for the Commission, will address the committee along lines that seek to justify the Commission's existence.

Rev. O. R. Miller and others who were prominent in years past in their efforts to bring about censorship in New York State, are already busy assembling their forces. Senator James J. Walker, as the introducer of one of the bills, will be in charge of the program in so far as the speakers are concerned who will appear in support of the bills.

While there is no question but that the bills will be reported out of committee and go to a vote on the floors of the two houses, there is a question as to their ultimate passage.

The whole fight will be staged in the Assembly. Here there is a majority of five Republicans. And what is more, the Speaker of the Assembly comes from the home town of the chairman of the Motion Picture Commission. Whether or not the Republicans can marshal and hold their forces and defeat the bills as a party measure is a grave question.

Last fall many of the Assemblymen were re-elected by scanty margins. They are more inclined today than ever to heed the voice of their constituents back home. They can not afford to take any chances. If the word comes from back home, and particularly if this "back home" means the small towns and country districts, that the Assemblymen should oppose the repeal of motion picture censorship, party lines may be swept aside. The same thing holds true with the Assemblymen who come from New York City and are on the Republican side of the house. These will probably be in favor of repealing the law.

Whichever way it comes out, there is no question but that the days to come will witness one of the most bitter fights of the year, hinging upon the question of motion picture censorship.

Immediate Action is Urged on Iowa Tax Proposal

UNLESS the exhibitors of Iowa get busy immediately they will find themselves under the obligation of shouldering a ten per cent tax on admissions. A proposal to this effect is now awaiting action by the State legislature. Walter F. James, owner of the Coliseum, Cherokee, Iowa, calls attention to the situation and issues a warning of the need for immediate action on the part of the theatre-owners of the State. He writes:

"Iowa is the only State that I know of that is thinking of such a thing and unless the individual exhibitor gets busy it will go through. It means that it will close up about fifty per cent of the houses in the State, for an additional ten per cent tax on top of the taxes we already have would be the proverbial straw, and I for one am no camel at that."

Mr. James further recommends that exhibitors call upon their bankers and local editors and request them to write their respective representatives and set forth actual conditions and the results of the passage of such a measure. Mr. James declares that ignorance is responsible for the adoption of such proposals.

$200,000 Crash Feared in Buffalo Houses

C. F. Martina, of Buffalo, claims that some 700 stockholders in Buffalo and vicinity stand to lose some $200,000 in a threatened crash of General Theatres Corporation. He has taken the matter up with the district attorney, it is said. Martina says the entire corporation has passed into the hands of Joseph A. Schuchert, who held two mortgages and issued the leases on the theatres controlled by General. These houses are the Central Park, Star, Allendale, Marlowe, Ellen Terry and Circle.

Under the leadership of John T. Gilbert a meeting of stockholders has been called to make an attempt to repurchase the property from Mr. Schuchert, who is willing to return the property providing the interest on the property is paid and his interests are protected. Schuchert demands $10,000 before he will assume the other obligations of the company, which, it is alleged, amount to $65,000. Since James Wallingford became manager of the organization last August, succeeding Harry Marsey, Martina claims the company has been making money, although he says there was a deficit in 1920, '21 and '22.

Theatre Amalgamation Is Reported in New Jersey

An important theatre amalgamation reported during the week concerns the Haring and Blumenthal Enterprises and the Frank Hall motion picture houses in Jersey City, Hoboken, and Union Hill, N. J. By the terms of the deal Haring, Blumenthal, and Hall are said to have become joint and equal holders of the theatre interests owned by these organizations. This would mean that the following houses will hereafter be operated under joint jurisdiction of the principals involved: The Haring-Blumenthal group—Central, Tivoli, National and Monticello in Jersey City; the Union Hill, Roosevelt and Lincoln in West Hoboken; Frank Hall chain—The State, the Ritz, Jersey City; the Strand in Hoboken, and the State and the Capitol, Union Hill.

Missouri Censorship Bill Meets Quick Death

BY a unanimous vote, the house committee on criminal jurisprudence at the Missouri legislature Wednesday night killed the proposed Missouri censorship bill, sponsored by the committee of fifty, composed of religious organizations. This is the second consecutive censorship bill the Missouri legislature has killed in two years.

Despite the winning fight made by Missouri exhibitors in opposing the bill, it freely acknowledged that a large delegation of Kansas City women and ministers who went to Jefferson City, the state capitol last week, and publicly denounced political censorship, were the "last straw" factor in the victory.

Seattle Exhibitors Fight New Tax Bill

Theatre men of Seattle and the entire state of Washington were making plans in February to unite against a bill recently introduced into the state legislature, meeting for ten weeks in Olympia, the capital of the state. According to the provisions of the bill, a 15 per cent tax would be levied on all theatre admissions, in addition to the 10 per cent tax now being charged for the national government war fund.

The 15 per cent tax would be given to the state, to be placed in the general expenditure fund, and would merely be used as a means of increasing the state's revenue during the year.

Feeling among the theatre men and a great majority of the citizens of the state ran high against the measure. A motion picture theatre charging an admission price of forty-five cents, plus the war tax, totaling fifty cents, would be forced to raise its price to sixty cents, according to the bill, and passage of the measure would be fatal to a great number of show houses, it was believed.

N. Y. Governor Is Now Real Picture Fan

Governor Alfred E. Smith has become a real out-and-out movie fan.

With the installation of a projecting machine at the Mansion, Governor Smith can now sit back in an easy chair after dinner, smoke a cigar and with family and friends about him, enjoy the pictures.

And the enjoyment has become so pronounced that the Governor is only satisfied with a dozen or more reels. He always demands a comedy, one of the type that has a laugh every moment or so, for the Governor has found that there is nothing quite like a good comedy for erasing the cares that are bound to come to the Chief Executive of the Empire State.

Southern Enterprises Sells Theatres

Southern Enterprises, Inc., has sold to E. J. Sparks, of Jacksonville, Fla., the following theatres: the Jefferson and the Orpheum at St. Augustine; the Beacham, the Grand and the Phillips at Orlando, and the Auditorium and the Casino at Lakeland. It has also sold to C. R. Bamford the Majestic theatre at Asheville, N. C.

U.S. Amends Trust Charge Against Famous

Trade Commission Alleges Intended Monopoly in Restraint of Trade

AS the result of the recent preliminary investigation of the activities of the Famous Players-Lasky film producing, distributing and theatre owning interests and subsidiaries, since 1914, the Federal Trade Commission at a regular session in Washington, issued an amended complaint charging certain violations of the Act of September 26, 1914 (creating the commission) conspiracy in restraint of trade and unethical practices in forcing theatres to book their (Paramount) product so heavily that no independent producer could secure profitable dates.

All the respondent individuals and corporations have, the commission alleges, conspired together to "unduly hinder competition in the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion picture films in interstate and foreign commerce and to control, dominate, monopolize or attempt to monopolize the motion picture industry."

The complaint in substance as follows::

"Prior to the organization of the Famous-Players company, Paramount Pictures of New York, was engaged exclusively in the business of distributing films, and under the provisions of certain written agreements on or about March 1, 1915, between it and said Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Famous Players Film Company, and Bosworth, Inc., the Paramount Picture Corporation was given exclusive rights for 25 years to distribute all pictures produced by the three producers. This agreement was in force as late as July 1, 1916. At that time the name "Paramount" was widely known to the trade and theatregoing public through national advertising, and possessed the only exclusively nation-wide distributing organization in the film trade.

"Pursuant to the policy of this trade domination conspiracy, Adolph Zukor and Jesse Lasky in 1916 acquired the stock and share of Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play, Famous Players Film Company, and Bosworth, Inc., dissolving the three corporations and assimilating them into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Through the organization of Arteraft Pictures Corporation under New York laws, the respondents on July 29, 1916, sought to cater to independent exhibitors who did not want to deal with Zukor-Lasky, et al., but wanted the box office popularity of stars developed under the three units absorbed by Paramount. After a brief period of competitive distribution, the physical assets of Arteraft were absorbed by the respondents into The Famous Players-Lasky organization.

"To further the policy of control of production and trade outlets in the United States and abroad, certain independent studios and and producers have been associated with Paramount, to secure distribution for their product, but in all such releases the name "Paramount" pictures is nationally advertised and displayed. This effectually chokes any other outlet for the producing activities of the affiliated producer who calls himself 'independent.'

"To further extend the alleged conspiracy, Messrs. Zukor and Lasky incorporated in Delaware on or about May 28, 1919, the Realart Pictures Corporation, 10,000 shares no par value, issuing 5,000 shares, held by the Famous Players-Lasky, and the home office of Realart was to be in New York City. This subsidiary opened exchanges purporting to be in competition with Paramount throughout the country, and led exhibitors to believe that it was a bona-fide competitor. Since the complaint of the Trade Commission was filed, the concern was merged into the Zukor interests, and is no longer operating.

"Through the respondent theatre owning associate, Black New England Theatre, Stanley Company of America, Southern Enterprises and Saenger Amusement Company, and the individuals in charge, a 'progressive program was consistently adhered to, of acquiring or controlling by purchase or otherwise, motion picture theatres throughout the United States and more particularly first-run theatres, and of compelling and coercing exhibitors of the United States to book and exhibit all the motion pictures produced or distributed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and of inducing and compelling such exhibitors to book a substantial number or "block" of films by refusing to lease a given film or films, unless the exhibitors also book a substantial number of "block" of other films the exhibition of all of which will take up the whole or a large part of the available exhibiting time, thus effectually closing the house to product of Paramount's competitors.

"Millions of dollars was procured to the Zukor company to finance and make the success of this program. This, it is alleged, has resulted in unduly hindering competitors from securing first runs, and this cumulative series of acts has built up for the respondents a dominating control over the industry, and having a dangerous tendency to give them a complete domination therein. They are now the largest theatre owners in the world, in one week of 1920, more than 6,000 American theatres, approximately one-third of the motion picture theatres then operating in the United States, showed Paramount pictures exclusively, and about 67 cents of every dollar paid to enter motion picture theatres went into Paramount theatres.

"Further results of the progressive attempt to acquire or control motion picture theatres, the conspirators are alleged to have coerced or intimated exhibitors by divers means and methods, as follows: (a) Threatening to build or lease and operate theatres in competition with exhibitors who refused to sell or lease their theatres; (b) Threatening to cut off or interfere with the film service of such exhibitors who refused to sell or lease such theatres; (c) Secretly offering higher rentals, effective upon expiration of leases held by exhibitors who refused to sell or lease such theatres; (d) Temporarily reducing the price of admission charged by theatres owned or controlled by the respondents, below that charged by exhibitors who refused to sell or lease their theatres.

"In insisting that exhibitors book their pictures the respondent conspirators have coerced and intimmidated and attempted to coerce and intimmidate exhibitors by various means and methods, among which are the following, to wit:

"(A) Threatening to build or lease and operate theatres in competition with independent exhibitors who refused to book and exhibit such films;

"(B) Interfering with the film service of such independent exhibitors and causing the cancellation of contracts for service between such exhibitors and producers;

"(C) Disparaging independent exhibitors who refused to exhibit such pictures by means of advertisements placed in newspapers circulated throughout the territory in which such independent exhibitors' theatres were located;

"(D) Inducing and seeking to induce, independent exhibitors who had contracts of release for the exhibition of motion picture films produced by competitor producers to cancel such contracts, by offering to give and giving such exhibitors, motion picture films produced and distributed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for nominal sums of money, or free of charge.

"And in furthering and executing this policy of conspiracy, the respondents resorted to other fradulently unfair trade practices to exclude competitors from producing, distributing or exhibiting their motion picture films, it is alleged."

In conclusion it is alleged that these acts and practices referred to in the complaint have unduly hindered the freedom of competition in the production and distribution of film in interstate commerce and have a dangerous tendency to set up a monopoly in the motion picture industry, all of which is in violation of the Federal Trade Act, as stated in the body of the complaint.

"Rosita" Temporary Title of Pickford's Next

MARY PICKFORD'S next picture will be from an original story by a European dramatic critic, temporarily titled "Rosita." It has been adapted to the screen by Edward Knoblock and is now being cast. Ernst Lubitsch will direct and Clara Eames will play an important feminine role.

Mary will take the role of a dancing girl, an emotional part. The story has an historical background, being laid in the fifteenth century in Spain.

While "Rosita" is being filmed, sets will be built for "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," and later "Faust" will be filmed.

A studio official states that the story of the proposed Pickford-Fairbanks world tour is pure press-agentry on the part of a steamship company.

Schertzinger Heads Producing Unit for Preferred

Fire Damages Cosmopolitan Plant

Loss Probably $500,000; Negatives Saved; No Production Delay Caused

DAMAGE which will probably amount to half a million dollars was done to the Cosmopolitan Productions studios at 127th street and Second avenue, New York City, early Sunday morning. Early reports placed the damage at $1,000,000, and while no exact figure will be available until the inventory is completed, the final figure will probably not be far from $500,000. The place was fully covered by insurance.

No negatives were lost. The studio stages were completely destroyed, as well as Marion Davies' costumes, being used in "Little Old New York." Considerable damage was done to the restaurant, dressing rooms and much of the company wardrobe. The entire building was flooded. Many valuable "props" being used for "Little Old New York" were destroyed.

The fire started in a driveway between the main office building and a storehouse about 3 a. m. Sunday. At 7 a. m. twelve trunk wires and a new telephone switchboard had been installed, and on Monday work continued in the office, despite several inches of water on the floors.

Production work was resumed early in the week at the old Jackson avenue studio, and within a few days the larger sets will have been rebuilt, this time in the Tilford studios on Forty-fourth street. No delay will be caused in the production schedule.

Workmen this week began the reconstruction of the studio, which is expected to take about two months to complete.

At the time of the fire, "Little Old New York" was two-thirds completed and the Negatives were saved. Negatives of "Enemies of Women," "The Go Getter" and "The Nth Commandment," work on all of which pictures had been completed and which are now being prepared for early release, were also saved. "Enemies of Women," which is a picturization of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's romance of the same name, will serve as Cosmopolitan's next super special.

Many Colleges Enter for Laemmle Scholarship

THE Laemmle Scholarship, a college endowment offered by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation for the best motion picture scenario written by an undergraduate in American Colleges and Universities, promises to be the incentive for one of the greatest forward steps in the history of the screen. This is the concensus of opinion of college presidents from coast to coast.

Already almost one hundred colleges and universities, among them most of the leading institutions in the country, have definitely lined up for the competition. They have a combined student body of more than 200,000 undergraduates.

Among the best known educational institutions which will compete for the Laemmle Scholarship are Brown University, the University of California, Carnegie Tech, Center College, the University of Chicago, Colgate University, Columbia University, Drexel Institute, Hamilton College, Iowa State, Lehigh, University of Maine, University of Maryland, Mississippi A. & M., University of Missouri, University of Montana, University of Nevada, University of North Carolina, Notre Dame, University of Pennsylvania, Oberlin, Purdue, Rensselaer Polytechnic, Syracuse, Union College, Vassar College, Washington State College, Williams College, and Yale.

Dangerous Kansas Bills in Unfriendly Hands

What seemed like a bright outlook for Kansas exhibitors last week, as far as three radical measures now in the Legislature are concerned, suddenly has reverted into a serious situation. The Sunday closing bill and the measure requiring all persons less than 18 years old to have a written permit to attend theatres, have been transferred to the state of affairs committee, a committee which sponsors of the bills discovered would be more friendly towards the proposed laws. Prior to the transfer of the bills, both of them virtually appeared doomed for the "axe."

The third bill, one that would establish a welfare board in each county to supervise the licensing of all theatres, seems to be headed for the slaughtering block and is causing exhibitors little worry. Should the two former bills be passed, however, Kansas exhibitors have expressed fear that the industry in the Sunflower state would be wrecked, especially in Kansas City, Kans., where it would be necessary for theatres to increase admittance charge and at the same time compete with Kansas City, Mo., theatres that operate on Sunday.

Associated Branch Sales Chief Passes Away

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, received a telegram a few days ago advising him of the death in Salt Lake City of Lawrence J. Baratte, Associated's branch sales manager in the Utah capital. Mr. Baratte was ill several months and spent some time in the Mayo institution at Rochester, Minn. When he returned to Salt Lake City a few months ago his friends believed he was well on the road to recovery, and the news of his death came as a severe shock.

Though a young man, Mr. Baratte was one of the veterans of Associated's sales organization. He was well known in the picture world as a highly successful salesman and had a host of friends.

Bogus Check Passer Poses as Roy Stewart

In a statement wired east by Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, warning is issued against a man reported operating in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., who poses as Roy Stewart, the Universal star, and attempts to cash checks signed with Roy Stewart's name. Stewart, who is at Universal City and who has been there for many months, working in Universal serials and short dramas, is enraged at the imposter, and, in conjunction with Universal officials, is exerting every effort to bring the "fake" movie star to justice.

Late News Notes from the West Coast by Wire

IRVING THALBERG this week took up his work as vice-president and manager of productions at Louis B. Mayer's studios.

Anna Q. Nilsson and John M. Gunnerson, Los Angeles shoe dealer, were married on February 16th.

Winfield Sheehan was expected at the Fox studios this week after a two weeks' illness in San Francisco.

Malcolm Boyland, for nearly two years publicity director of Universal City, has resigned. Ben Westland, former San Francisco exploiteer and recently of the Universal City advertising bureau, succeeds him.

The Joseph Schenck organization this week moved to the United studios. The first subject which will be started is "Dulcy," with Constance Talmadge. Director Sidney Franklin is now in New York conferring with Emerson and Loos on the script. Norma's next will be "Ashes of Vengeance" directed by Frank Lloyd.

The Cinema Distributing company, organized by Charles H. Cook, H. Y. Romayne, C. A. Pedrick and others, is to build a Cinema Center building for exchanges and accessory dealers on film row on South Olive Street near Tenth. It will have centralized shipping, storage and inspection quarters for exchanges. Estimated cost, $400,000; architect, Alberg C. Martin.

S. F. Beauties Are Tested for Stardom

With visions of stardom before them, sixty young San Francisco women selected from photographs submitted for the Bulletin-Warfield-Graf Motion Picture Contest, are being given studio tests on the stage of Loew's Warfield theatre. The tests are being recorded under the most perfect studio conditions.

The lights have been brought from the Pacific studios at San Mateo, well-known directors are alternating in the posing of the subjects and the photography is in charge of John Arnold, Metro staff cinematographer, who has photographed all of Viola Dana's starring productions during the last eight years.

Practically all of the young women who are posing for the tests are going before the camera for the first time. For this reason they are being made up for the screen by a studio expert, and are being instructed in color value so they will know what to wear.

California Assembly Gets Censorship Bill

Authentic word has just been received from Sacramento, California's capital, that a bill providing for motion picture censorship in California was offered to the Assembly.

The bill would create a board of motion picture review, headed by the State superintendent of public instruction, with four associates nominated by his department and appointed by the Governor.

They would be empowered to pass on all films to be exhibited in California after August, 1923, and on all reissues after that date of films made before then. Films made in the interim would be free from their inspection.

New Russian Producers After World Market

Amalgamation Formed with Object of Exploiting Product for American Sale

By Huntley Carter

BERLIN is fast becoming the shop-window of Soviet Russia. This tendency has lately been increased by the action of the Soviet Government in condemning the French invasion of the Ruhr. As a result many German papers that were hostile to the Bolshevist regime have changed their tone and opened their columns, just as the business houses have opened their doors, to admit the claims of Russia to complete trade recognition and co-operation. So a monopolist kino amalgamation has been formed with the object of exploiting and finding a world-wide market for the production of two State kino societies in Moscow and Petrograd. The amalgamation is called the German-American Film Union and, as its title implies, it is designed to operate in America with Russian goods.

It is expected that the first production of this combine will be on the international market shortly in the form of the first specimen of the new Russia (i. e., Soviet) "filmart" to be exhibited simultaneously in America, Germany and France.

During my present travels I was shown this new film privately by the Russian Kino Department. The impression I got was that Moscow and Petrograd are capable, when the requisite capital flows in, of producing first-class goods, but that these goods will contain peculiar features which belong to Soviet Russia. For this reason the film work which Russia, in conjunction with Germany and America, proposes to put on the world market deserves to be described.

Perhaps the word that best describes this kind of film is proletarian. That is, it is meant to show some of the causes which led up to the change in Russia from a bourgeoise society to a proletarian one. To make what I mean by proletarian quite clear let me quote a sympathetic German critic of established repute. Writing on the "Proletarisches Kino," he says that the kinema has for many years been used for propaganda. All over the world many millions of human beings have been influenced by it. But this influence has been, according to this writer, a bad one, because it was exerted by capitalists. The latter have got possession of the kino and, for this reason, the human race is swallowing capitalist poison. But there is salvation. It is to be found in the proletarian film which, while continuing the work of propaganda, will also safeguard the interests and souls of the downtrodden mass; that is, the mass which has got in a mess through going to capitalist kinos.

At the same time it must be remembered that capitalist countries strongly guard the capitalist film and oppose any change. From this we may infer that the proletarian film will only see daylight, or filmlight, in a country that has become wholly proletarian, or red, to give it the proper color. It will never be seen in a capitalist country unless the capitalists are asleep or, better still, dead. So the writer remarks.

When one comes to the "plot" of the proletarian film as described by this writer, one imagines that the film will never get into a capitalist country unless it is dropped from an airship. He says that this proletarian film—the one that is coming or is already here—"is an adventure film in the highest meaning." It exhibits the history of Unrest, and Revolution, of Reverse and Victory, and reveals the appearance and reality of these things. It exhibits the slaves' revolt under Spartacus, the heroic struggle of the Paris Commune, the blood and martyrdom of the German Spartacus' struggle, and the victory of the proletarian revolution in Russia.

Expert Tells of Production Activity in Russia

HUNTLEY CARTER, who in the past has contributed entertaining and instructive series of articles to Motion Picture News on motion picture conditions in Soviet Russia, herewith submits an equally interesting contribution on the organization of a concern that will exploit and attempt to create a world market for the Russian films. The character of the productions is also outlined by Mr. Carter, who is still making a careful study of conditions over there.

It will not pass over the brutal assassinations by the American Trusts, but will show, however, more and more how the suppressed rise up, and have risen up, and got rid of their fetters, and the dream of the one-class society has become real. The hero of this proletarian film will not be a personality—not a Charlie Chaplin, or Will Rogers, or Fatty Arbuckle, or Douglas Fairbanks. None of these popular heroes will strut their brief hour on the silver screen. But it will be a mass hero, that is, the proletariat themselves acting in the lump, so to speak, who will take the stage and wallow in historical gore to their hearts' content.

"Where is the country," asks the writer of the bright stuff, "in which such films can be shown? Where is the country in which they can dodge the censor?" He replies: "At present there is only Russia." But he hastens to point out that as Russia is now at peace with Germany, we may expect that the production and exhibition of the ideal film will very soon cover a wide territory. He is candid enough to add that he does not think that the latest film can be exported even to Germany without a compromise of some sort.

In the film that I saw a compromise had been attempted so as to fit it for the world market. The subject and treatment are what Western Europe audiences are fairly accustomed to. But underlying the subject is a purpose which may be said to be new to the film. The purpose is to show the iniquity of the old ruling classes in Russia and its dire effect on the peasant population, and by this means to stir up sympathy for much that has taken place in Russia within the last five years. But on the whole, the film is really a big one. It is an adaptation of Tolstoi's "Polikushka."

It contains many arresting pictures of Russian life before the abolition of serfdom in Russia 100 years or so ago, and as its purpose is, it presents very strong contrasts between the land-owning class and the serfs, for whose terrible condition they were mainly responsible. It also exhibits some very powerful acting and very few signs of the producer's hand—signs that so often spoil the dramatic value of magnificent films.

Some of the parts are played by professionals, and many of the smaller ones, and the crowds by workers. The acting of Polikushka, as played by J. M. Moskvin of the Moscow Art Theatre Company, now appearing in America, is spontaneous and in no way governed by those hard and fast technical rules which make film acting appear like mathematical e ercises—the sort of exercises indulged in by Duse, who always seems to have her stage movements chalked out as on a chess-board. Likewise the scenes of the play, both nature and crowd, move with an ease and freedom which suggests that the camera has wandered among the people in the village of Pokrovskoje and neighborhood, where the action takes place in 1830, and helped itself to whatever it likes.

The film is in six parts. It is produced by the Motion Picture Co-operative Society, Russia, Moscow. The proprietors of the world monopolies are the Industrie und Handels, A. G., International Workmen's Help for Soviet Russia and Motion Pictures Department for Soviet Russia. It should perhaps be said that the artistes of the M. P. C. S. Russian produced this work while suffering the pangs of hunger and cold during Russia's worst period of want. Very often they had nothing but a plateful of thin soup and a few frozen potatoes, but in spite of this they worked long after midnight in studios which were not heated, although the winter was the worst on record, and neither wood, peat nor coal could be obtained.

F.I.L.M. Club Announces Spring Dance

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York City announces a spring dancing party to be held at the Automobile Club of America, 247 West Fifty-fourth street, New York City, on Saturday night, March 17th, 1923.

Dantzig and his famous Slippery Elm Jazz Band will furnish the music. Novelties, dancing and a buffet luncheon will be some of the features.

Indications are that one of the largest crowds that ever attended a F. I. L. M. Club dance will be in attendance.

The committee in charge is: W. E. Raynor, chairman; Tom Murray, Geo. Dillon and A. Weinberger.

A large delegation from the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce and other exhibitor bodies, including the Salesmen's Club, will be in attendance.

Sunday Concerts Popular in Detroit Houses

One of the most interesting innovations of motion picture showmanship that is only commencing to receive the notice it merits is the policy of Sunday concerts adopted by the John H. Kunsky Theatrical Interests in Detroit, Mich. The new procedure and the method upon which it has been built up has only recently been revealed by George W. Trendle, vice-president of the Kunsky interests, who is representing Mr. Kunsky for two weeks in New York as a member of First National's Rotating Committee. That very little has been said about this departure from Detroit theatrical custom is due to the fact that the Sunday concert idea was begun as an experiment. Conceived in showmanship, it has endured to the point where it is a permanent part of the weekly program.

Mr. Kunsky's interests include the Madison, Adams and Capitol theatres, each of which have their own orchestra.

Under the leadership of Eduard Werner, leader of the Capitol theatre musicians, the three orchestras, totaling 75 pieces, are combined for a concert at the Capitol commencing Sunday at 12:15 and lasting until one, after which the three orchestras disintegrate, the other two going to their respective houses.

Following the completion of the orchestral program the regular film offerings are put on and the audience for the concert remains for the picture show.

One of the features of the concert has been the introduction of two or three jazz numbers.

Miss Talmadge's next picture will be "Ashes of Vengeance."

Ontario Will Censor All Picture Advertising

The Government of the Province of Ontario has definitely decided to apply censorship to all moving picture advertising matter, according to notifications received by managers of film exchanges at Toronto, Ontario, from Major Alex. Hamilton, chairman of the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors.

A Provincial law authorizing the censor board to pass upon all billboards, advertising displays, newspaper readers, handbills and all other forms of advertising used for the presentation of moving pictures in theatres has been on the statute books for a year, but it has not been enforced because of seeming difficulties in the way of censoring advertising displays for use in daily newspapers, particularly in cities outside of Toronto. As the offices of the censor board are located in Toronto, exhibitors in Ontario cities would have some trouble in forwarding proofs of newspaper advertisements for current presentations to Toronto for approval before the ads could be published locally, it was felt. Some exhibitors are 300 miles or more from Toronto.

In spite of the possibility of considerable confusion and resultant loss of business, the Ontario Board of Censors has issued notice that the law is to be invoked at once. The matter, however, has aroused the attention of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association and a stay in enforcement of the law has been asked.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan in Merger

Gigantic Deal Completed in Which Distribution Plans Involve Millions

Confirming a rumor of several months' standing, a merger of Cosmopolitan Productions and Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has been effected whereby all the future productions from the Cosmopolitan studios, except those already announced for distribution by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, are to be released by Goldwyn.

A contract to this effect was signed Wednesday by F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn and William Randolph Hearst, president of the Cosmopolitan company. Details in connection with the merger have not been completed as yet but it is said that not only will Goldwyn distribute the Cosmopolitan product, but that the consolidation is an enterprise that will assume gigantic proportions.

According to information at hand, the arrangement is that there will be twenty productions a year from Cosmopolitan and twenty from Goldwyn, each to be a super-production on the scale of such pictures as "The Christian," "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and other recent Goldwyn and Cosmopolitan productions.

It is said that both Cosmopolitan and Goldwyn have a wealth of film material which will be put into shape for production at once and that the combined efforts of the merging organizations will be centered in productions that will be history making in scope.

F. J. Godsol expresses the greatest satisfaction over the deal and proclaims it his crowning achievement in the motion picture industry.

Mr. Hearst and the Cosmopolitan executives are equally pleased over the consolidation.

Almost unlimited resources are behind the merged companies with the Godsol, Dupont and Kendall interests on one side and the Hearst capital on the other.

With the Cosmopolitan productions added to those Goldwyn has already scheduled the Goldwyn program becomes doubly interesting from the angle of the exhibitor.

It is assumed that the first picture which Goldwyn will handle is "Little Old New York" now in production with Marion Davies as a star.

No announcement is forthcoming from either company in this connection, however.

Among the Cosmopolitan pictures, not yet released that have been announced for distribution by Famous Players-Lasky are "The Go Getter," "Enemies of Women," and "The Nth Commandment."

Charles Brabin to Direct "Six Days" for Golwdyn

F.B.O. Announces Anniversary Drive

P. A. Powers, Managing Director, Outlines First Annual Competition

FILM BOOKING OFFICES OF AMERICA, which one year ago this month came under the control of P. A. Powers, announces this week its First Anniversary Drive, which will continue until the end of March. This drive is being carried on under the personal direction of Mr. Powers, F. B. O. managing director, and will bring the year-old producing-distributing corporation in touch with every exhibitor in the country.

According to the plans as outlined by Mr. Powers, $7,500 will be distributed to F. B. O. branches in the form of prizes. These cash prizes have been proportioned so that every member of the three prize-winning exchanges will share in the award. In addition to the cash prizes, a huge silver loving cup, standing three feet high, will be presented to the exchange showing the best record of bookings during the sales drive. This cup will remain as the possession of the winning exchange until the ensuing year, when it will pass into the hands of the new leader. It will become the permanent possession of the exchange winning it three times.

Film Booking Offices of America came under the control of P. A. Powers late in February, 1922. J. I. Schnitzer became vice-president and Nat G. Rothstein advertising and publicity director. In July Harry M. Berman took over the office of general manager of distribution, and at the same time the name of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation was abandoned and the name of Film Booking Offices adopted.

Immediately upon assuming control Mr. Powers announced that his new company would be a high powered sales exploitation medium of the best grade pictures. In addition to a thirteen-story home office building, there are thirty-one exchanges throughout the country, and a huge studio, known as the R-C studios, in Los Angeles, where F. B. O. productions are filmed. In its year of production and releasing activities F. B. O. has acquired such stars as Harry Carey, Ethel Clayton, Jane Novak, Johhny Walker, Ralph Lewis, George O'Hara, Ella Hall, Warner Baxter, Derelys Perdue and Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, besides Dan Mason, whose comedies are produced by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation of San Francisco.

F. B. O. directors include Chester Bennett, Emory Johnson, Mal St. Clair, William K. Howard, James Horne, Wesley Ruggles; produced two Ethel Clayton pictures; Val Paul, directing Harry Carey, and Emil Chautard, who will produce "Daytime Wives."

Emil Offeman is in charge of production at the R-C studios, with Edgar Forrest and Wyndham Gittens at the scenario end. The studio publicity is handled by Hyatt Daab, formerly of the home office.

Arthur Friend Talks on Distribution

Arthur Friend, President of Distinctive Pictures, Inc., was the guest speaker at this week's luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

Mr. Friend forecast the time, not so far away, when the motion picture industry's most serious problem — distribution — would be solved by a man or a combination of men who possessed two qualifications, defined by Mr. Friend as follows: (1) Guts, (2) money. Neither is any too plentiful in the industry, according to Mr. Friend.

"When the time comes when distribution can be secured at a reasonable cost," the speaker said, "the producers' income will go up and the exhibitors' expenses will go down. Both of them today," he said, "are feeding too much money into the middle."

Mr. Friend emphasized his thought that the ills of the industry today were chiefly economic and not faults of morality. He illustrated his points with a wealth of experience gained in his own considerable service in the industry.

Earl J. Hudson and Richard Walton Tully

Richard W. Tully's Status Defined by First Nat'l

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., issued a statement during the week setting straight the status of Richard Walton Tully's connection with that firm and correcting erroneous rumors and stories which have been current for some little time past.

Richard A. Rowland, Associated First National's General Manager, explained that Mr. Tully is to produce two pictures for Associated First National release, the first of which will be "Trilby." While in Paris, Mr. Tully shot a number of scenes for the picture. It has been reported that "Trilby" will be directed by James Young. Wilfred Buckland will be the art director. Mr. Tully's relations to the company will be much the same as those of other independent producers releasing through Associated First National in so far as his own productions are concerned.

Mr. Tully will also become production manager of two new companies which will make several pictures from popular novels and stage successes for First National release next season. Earl J. Hudson, long a member of the executive staff of First National's New York office, will be associated with Mr. Tully as business manager of the two new units.

Mr. Tully left New York for Los Angeles last week, accompanied by his daughter. Mrs. Tully, who is recuperating from a serious illness, will follow him in about a month. Also making the journey to Los Angeles will be Philip V. Kroha, Tully's production manager, and E. Ray Coffin, his publicity director.

Mr. Tully's activities will in no manner affect the other independent producers distributing through Associated First National.

Universal Announces a New "Leather Pushers" Group

UNIVERSAL announces a new series of "Leather Pushers" based on forthcoming stories by H. C. Witwer. This will be the third group of such subjects to be released by Universal. Production work will begin on the third series within a few weeks, it is stated, and the first of the new group is expected to be in the hands of the exchanges by the middle of April.

The six new stories for the spring series are in process of preparation, according to word from Universal's home-office, and will appear every other week in Collier's, beginning some time in May. A combined exploitation campaign will be carried on by Universal and Collier's during the run of the pictures, it is stated. Universal plans to release the subjects of the new series simultaneously with the publication of the stories.

The banquet was staged in the Crystal Room of the Ritz-Carlton.

Harry Reichenbach acted as toastmaster. Harry himself was introduced by J. G. Bachmann, treasurer of Preferred Pictures. Other speakers were: Joseph Dannenberg, Dr. A. H. Editors Approve of Short Subjects

Pathe Quiz of Newspapers Show Majority in Favor of One and Two-Reelers

WHAT the thoughtful element of the motion picture industry has for some time accepted as a demonstrated fact, the editors of representative home newspapers throughout the United States have declared ratified by the picture-going public.

This means that there can be no further question of the popularity and increasing value of short pictures.

It is well known that no individual serving in a public capacity stands closer to the people than does the editor of the home newspaper. To both these editors and to the motion picture industry it is well known that Pathe, under the general management of Elmer Pearson, has, for more than two years past, been a consistent force in the intensive cultivation of the short subject producer and exhibitor field.

Accordingly, when Pathe sent letters to some hundreds of representative newspaper editors requesting their views on the present status of short subjects in general public estimation, the answers were prompt and to the point.

Out of a list of 350 selected newspapers printed in typical smaller cities and towns covering all sections of the country, up to January 15th, 231 answers had been received. The letters of inquiry mentioned no specific brand or item of short subjects. Two questions were asked:

1. "Is the value of short subjects increasing?"

2. "Do patrons favor a complete bill of 'Shorts'?"

To the first question, 226 editors answered, "Yes"; 5 answered, "No."

To the second question—to which an affirmative answer would necessarily eliminate the dramatic long feature entirely— 56 answered, "Yes"; 175 answered, "No."

In regard to the situation, Elmer Pearson said:

"These newspaper editors justify their enviable reputation for knowing and reflecting the sentiments of their readers. They confirm what was already known to us who had committed ourselves to due development of the short subject field, and who have never relaxed our efforts to meet the existing patron demand for more and better short pictures. To solve this big problem of the industry has demanded unswerving faith and incessant labor. But exhibitors are now seeing the light, and it is inevitable that producers and distributors of more and better short pictures will receive their due reward."

Metro Appoints Girl Scenario Chief

Winifred Dunn last Saturday assumed the duties of scenario editor at the Metro studios. The appointment was announced by Joseph W. Engel, first vice-president of Metro and general manager of that organization's West Coast studios.

Miss Dunn is believed to be the youngest scenario editor in the industry. She went to the coast more than a year ago to take charge of the scenario department for Sawyer-Lubin productions for Metro. The new editor is now working on the script of Robert W. Service's "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," filming being scheduled to start as soon as the story is finished.

Another of her many duties will be the preparation of the stories for the special productions starring Viola Dana, the first of which will be made as soon as the little star recovers from the operation which confines her in the Good Samaritan Hospital. She is expected to be before the camera again in about six weeks.

Variety Leaven of the Program

Entertainment the Thing that Satisfies Craving for Something Different

By ELMER PEARSON
Gen'l Manager, Pathe

ENTERTAINMENT is that thing that satisfies that universal craving for something different.

The word "different" is just another definition for "variety."

Every showman from Barnum to Clem Deneker knows that the public give their patronage to the show that offers the greatest variety.

Not only should we strive to offer the greatest possible daily variety, but we should offer as great a difference as possible between each successive change of program.

For instance, let us discuss a given case of an exhibitor troubled with ingrown featuritis. Changes program seven times per week and each one consists of a dramatic feature of five or six reels, a one or two-reel comedy, an occasional news reel, or something of that nature to make up about eight reels.

About the only thing he advertises is his five-reel feature. Naturally his patrons come to look upon that as his principal bid for their attention.

Now everybody knows that all drama construction is limited to about eleven (?) or seventeen (?) basic principles; consequently, a sort of sameness manifests itself to a public who are asked to look at 365 dramatic feature pictures per year.

Is it any wonder that the public gets a sort of picture ennui, many of whom get out of the picture habit entirely, or come only once or twice per week?

How much more refreshing to the public and the box office it would be if every exhibitor would get entirely away from that featuritis for at least two changes out of every seven and offer his patrons an entire diversion.

Such a program can be made up in numerous variations from the many short subjects on the market, and will bring the patrons out for an additional night of the week upon which you book it.

The person who gets all the feature drama he desires on two visits per week to a theatre will be delighted with an opportunity to come a third time for such a program as above.

How else do we account for the popularity and success that the serial picture enjoys?

Ask one of the regular serial exhibitors; he will tell you without hesitation that the serial adds from 15% to 25% to his weekly box office receipts, money that he could not get into his house in any other way.

Don't you just see that his patrons would not come that additional day to see an additional typical feature picture, but since the serial and attendant program is another variety of entertainment, out they come.

In many cases that same serial exhibitor is making use of a short subject program on another change of his week, and is thereby adding some more money to his week's receipts.

Principal Starts Foreign Sales Department

Principal Pictures Corporation announced the establishment of a foreign sales department. This department, which will be under the supervision of Eastern Manager Irving Lesser, will be in charge of Max Roth and will function from the New York offices.

One of the most important foreign deals recently closed involved the British distribution of Principal pictures in England and provinces by S. L. Newman of London. Mr. Newman's concern already is handling the first two big Principal releases, "Environment" and "The World's a Stage." This week Mr. Roth announced that he had closed with Luise R. Searenno and R. Gonzales Soto of Mexico City for the Mexican rights to "Environment."

"Has the World Gone Mad?" is the title of Daniel Carson Goodman's picture (State Rights), from which the above scenes are taken.

"Just a Song at Twilight," the Producers Security picture starring Richard Barthelmess, also names Evelyn Greeley and Pedtro de Cordoba in the cast.

"The Exciters" Under Way at Long Island

Production of Martin Brown's stage play, "The Exciters," which was adapted for the screen by John Colton, author of "Rain," has been begun at the Paramount Long Island studio under the direction of Richard Ordynski.

Agnes Ayres and Antonio Moreno, who recently arrived in the east from the west coast, will be in the picture, and other members of the cast are Burr McIntosh, Ida Darling, George Backus, Jane Thomas and Alan Simpson.

Laura La Plante to Play Leads for Universal

Universal announces the elevation of Laura La Plante to leading roles in Universal features. Her first leading woman work in Universal Attractions will be in support of Hoot Gibson in "Dead Game," a hilarious story written by Edward Sedgwick, who will also direct it.

"Alimony" An Early F. B. O. Production

FILM BOOKING OFFICES OF AMERICA this week announces that "Alimony," a screen story by A. T. Locke, has been purchased and will be put into production at an early date.

Among the other story material recently acquired by F.B.O. is "Flaming Waters," a western drama by E. Lloyd Sheldon, and "The Miracle Baby," an American Magazine story by Frank Richardson Pierce.

Conrad Nagle for Lead in "Lawful Larceny"

Announcement was made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that Conrad Nagel, who arrived in New York during the week from Los Angeles, would play one of the leading roles in "Lawful Larceny," the picture of Samuel Shipman's play which Allan Dwan is to produce for Paramount with Hope Hampton in the leading feminine role.

On his arrival Mr. Nagel immediately began preparations for the picture, which is scheduled to go into production next week at Paramount's Long Island studio. Mr. Lasky also announced that Lew Cody is on his way from California to take a leading part in the picture.

Mildred Harris Screen Return Planned

Mildred Harris, the former wife of Charlie Chaplin, is to return to motion pictures. Miss Harris has been signed by Graf Productions to enact the leading feminine role in "The Fog," which they are to produce for Metro release. Paul Powell will direct this William Dudley Pelley story, and it will be filmed under the personal supervision of Max Graf at the San Mateo studios.

Besides Miss Harris those signed for parts in "The Fog" to date are Cullen Landis, Ralph Lewis and Frank Currier.

Opera Troupe to Tour with "Bohemian Girl"

John L. Hunter, of Canadian Releasing Corporation, returned to Toronto last week after completing arrangements in New York for the tour of the opera company which will present "The Bohemian Girl" in conjunction with the Harley Knoles picture production of the same name distributed by American Releasing Corporation.

Beginning April 16 at the Royal Alexandria theatre, Toronto, the company will cover all of Canada, the tour lasting all summer.

Seattle Girl Wins Goldwyn Opportunity Contest

The Screen Opportunity contest which was conducted jointly by Goldwyn Pictures Company and Photoplay Magazine, has brought another promising actress into the fold of Goldwyn Players. A long-term contract has just been signed with Miss Jean Haskell, of Seattle, Wash., as a result of that search for new screen faces.

Miss Haskell was the winner in the contest which was opened on February 1 and ran to July 1.

"Othello" Is Presented at Private Showing in N.Y.

On Sunday evening February 18th, Ben Blumenthal's screen importation, "Othello," was presented at a private showing held on the Century Roof, New York. A special musical program arranged by Hugo Riesenfeld was rendered, together with several numbers from the repertoire of the Moscow Art Theatre and the Chauve Souris. Dancing followed the showing. The affair was largely attended by film folk prominent in the industry.

Cast Signed for "Wife in Name Only"

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., formally announces the signing of Mary Thurman, Edmund Lowe, Arthur Hausman, Florence Dixon, William H. Tucker, Edna May Spooner and Ora Jones to enact some of the principal roles in its filming of "Wife in Name Only," which was started last week under the direction of George Terwilliger at the Pyramid studio in Astoria, L. I.

This will be the sixth of the Pyramid specials to be released through the exchanges of American Releasing Corporation.

Goldwyn Acquires Theatre Guild Production

To Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has fallen the screen rights to one of the outstanding theatrical offerings—the Theatre Guild's production of Karel Capek's novel play, "R. U. R."—in other words, "Rossom's Universal Robots."

The play was written by Karel Capek, a young Czecho-Slovakian, who, with his brother, wrote "The World We Live In" (called in the original "The Insect Comedy"), which William A. Brady presented in New York this season.

"The Christian" Retained at the N.Y. Capitol

"The Christian," Goldwyn's film version of Hall Caine's novel, was retained by S. L. Rothafel for a second week's engagement at the Capitol theatre, New York, owing to the heavy attendance during the premier showing of the special last week.

Holubar's Next Is Titled "Slander the Woman"

"Slander the Woman" has definitely been selected as the title for the next Allan Holubar production through First National, starring Dorothy Phillips. "Slander the Woman" will be released early in April.

Two Oceans Pictured at Once for Feature

Few people have been privileged to look upon the Pacific and Atlantic oceans at the same time. After Thomas Meighan's latest Paramount picture, "The Ne'er-Do-Well," is shown to the public, however, the number will be greatly increased, for one of the aeroplane views of the Panama Canal to be shown in the picture gives a view of both oceans.

During the filming of exterior scenes for Rex Beach's novel in Panama, Director Alfred E. Green sent William Miller, cameraman, into the air to get certain scenes of the locks for use in the picture. While high in the air Miller was able to get a shot which gave a glimpse of both the Atlantic and Pacific.

Laurel Signs as Comedy Star for Pathe

The latest important new product announcement made by Pathe is the completion of arrangements with Hal Roach for the further enrichment of its short comedy output. General Manager Pearson is authority for the statement that Stan Laurel has been engaged to star in one-reel comedies made at the Hal Roach studios, production starting immediately.

The Stan Laurel comedies, Mr. Pearson says, will be released alternately with those featuring Paul Parrott. The one-reel comedy releases will be one each week, as heretofore.

Pacific Mail Vessels Will Show Goldwyn Pictures

Goldwyn pictures will be shown exclusively on every vessel operated by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. George C. Parsons, manager of Goldwyn's San Francisco branch exchange, has just closed a contract with the Pacific Mail line.

The first picture to be shown on any vessel of the steamship company will be Rupert Hughes' "Dangerous Curve Ahead" and it will first be screened on the President Taft.

"Tents of Allah" Is Set for March 4th Release

"The Tents of Allah," formerly announced for release on February 25th, has been scheduled for March 4th. This is a seven-reel production made by Edward A. MacManus for presentation by Associated Exhibitors. The story and the direction are by Charles A. Logue. Monte Blue and Mary Alden are starred.

Goldwyn Announces Branch Manager Changes

GOLDWYN announces three changes in managers of its branch exchanges as follows:

Effective Feb. 26th, P. M. Desbon assumes charge of the New Orleans office, succeeding J. W. Pope, Jr.

Beginning Feb. 19th, H. W. Starrett took charge of the Atlanta exchange, succeeding J. L. Marentette. Mr. Starrett was promoted to the resident managership in Atlanta from the Cleveland branch exchange.

A. B. Lamb is now in charge of Goldwyn's Los Angeles branch exchange, having succeeded Seth Perkins on February 19th.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Racing Hearts—
Went across very nicely. Pleased the majority. (Middle West.)

Back Home and Broke—
Entertaining and pleasing feature which admirers of Meighan liked very much. Business hurt somewhat by zero weather and heavy snows. (Middle West.)

Adam and Eva—
Elaborate production and interesting, but somewhat improbable story. Did good business. (Middle West.)

The World's Applause—
A lively week's business with this one, which pleased most of the patrons who saw it. (Middle West.)

Thirty Days—
This picture of Wallie's would not have gotten by very well, but under the circumstances was sympathetically viewed. Business was just fair, although cold weather may have had its effect. (Middle West.)

My American Wife—
Running in competition with Douglas Fairbanks in "Robin Hood," this feature did a pleasant week's business. Drew the men as well as the women to both evenings and matinees. It has class. (Middle West.)

Good picture and business very good. Business partly helped by Victor Herbert's appearance. (East.)

Gloria Swanson is a prime favorite at this house and box office recorded fine totals at end of each day. (East.)

Dark Secrets—
Fair picture. Exploited well, and therefore did fair business. (East.)

Drums of Fate—
Picture and business only fair. (East.)

When Knighthood Was in Flower—
Great picture. Played to fine business on two weeks' run. Best thing Marion Davies has ever done. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Voice from the Minaret—
Both stars popular here; picture good, very satisfactory business. (Middle West.)

Norma Talmadge, plus entertaining story, well produced put this one over big. Business good. (Middle West.)

The Deuce of Spades—
Charles Ray gained many more friends with this one, which played to large crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

Fury—
Great picture. Excellent business. (East.)

Bell Boy Thirteen—
Very good; all the ear-marks of a real motion picture. (Middle West.)

The Sea Lion—
Typical Hobart Bosworth picture. Business uneven. (East.)

The Hottentot—
Very good picture and business to match. (East.)

This one proved a good drawing card and played to good crowds all week. (Middle West.)

Was expected to go over big and did not disappoint. Patrons liked it very well. (West.)

Mighty Lak a Rose—
This is the kind of feature the public wants. Did great business despite extremely cold weather. (Middle West.)

Omar, the Tentmaker—
Our audiences didn't think this picture was convincing. They appreciated it, but didn't enjoy it. Name of star and name of play brought the business, but they were not satisfied with the picture. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The Headless Horseman—
Good picture. Played to fine business. Story popular among school children. Teachers brought classes in a number of instances. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Gentleman from America—
Nice picture that did more business than we expected. Good entertainment all through. (Middle West.)

The Flirt—
Good picture that opened to one of the biggest Sundays of the season, but fell down later in the week. (Middle West.)

The First Degree—
A fairly entertaining program picture. Business about average. (East.)

Excellent drama, well acted. Drew excellently. (Middle West.)

The Flame of Life—
This another sure fire winner with Priscilla Dean in her best role. Robert Ellis has some following also. Business excellent. (Middle West.)

Certainly did good business on this one, result of one patron telling another not to miss it. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—
Jamming them in as fast as we can at slightly advanced admission price. Wonderful box office attraction. (Middle West.)

There were no big jams at the box office, but this is attributed to cold snap and the idea that picture was on for a run. Also keen competition at legitimate houses. Enthusiasm was expressed by those who came, and crowds gained all week. (Middle West.)

Wonderful picture, broke all records for attendance this season. (East.)

The Man Who Played God—
They don't know George Arliss and they must have a star's name to draw them it seems for this picture was highly praised by critics, but did poor business this week. Picture has general appeal. (Middle West.)

One Exciting Night—
Played to capacity houses for three weeks. (Middle West.)

Those who came to see another "Way Down East" were disappointed. Our audiences not up to farce. (West.)

METRO

June Madness—
Mediocre picture, business bad. (East.)

Trifling Women—
A very good entertainment. Business good, everything considered. (Middle West.)

Quincy Adams Sawyer—
Did not get over here to any extent. (West.)

FOX

The Town That Forgot God—
Splendid production any way you look at it. Big business both afternoon and evenings. (Middle West.)

A 100 per cent picture. Did splendid business with strongest possible opposition. Patrons liked it so well, am holding it over for a second week. (Middle West.)

Tom Mix in Arabia—
Picture and business both fair. (East.)

Youth Must Have Love—
Picture and business both mediocre.

F. B. O.

The Third Alarm—
Spectacular feature with great deal of heart interest. Went over big; backed by cooperation of fire department and by exploitation campaign. (Middle West.)

One of the best pictures from an exploitation angle we ever used. Can't stop it, when tied up with Fire Dept. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

When Danger Smiles—
A nice little picture with a star whose popularity is growing. Did very well for us. (Middle West.)

The Ninety and Nine—

WARNER BROTHERS

The Beautiful and Damned—
Pleasing picture and business satisfactory. (East.)

Fair. Doesn't do to over-exploit it and have patrons say it's not so much. (West.)

Heroes of the Street—
Did good business with this one as Wesley Barry is a good drawing card here. (Middle West.)

AL LICHTMAN

Thorns and Orange Blossoms—
Picture and business only fair.

A well produced picture which, supplemented by the personal appearance of a popular stage star, kept the ticket sellers busy. S.R.O. all week. (East.)

GOLDWYN

The Christian—
Certainly brings home the bacon. (West.)

Doing splendid business with this on second week. (West.)

Strong picture for weak season. (East.)

Broken Chains—
Plenty of thrills in this one and well liked by patrons. Did exceptionally good business all week. (East.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Around the Trade

PRESIDENT AL STEFFES of the Minnesota Motion Picture Theatre Owners, John Campbell, Harry Dryer and Joe Friedman, prominent Minneapolis exhibitors, and members of the organization, were in Chicago last week for a visit with the local theatre men. There was considerable discussion of the national convention, which is scheduled to be held here May 19th to 27th, and President Steffes declared it his belief that it will be one of the most largely attended conventions in the history of the organization as exhibitors generally are beginning to show great interest in the meeting. Two of the questions which, undoubtedly, will be of leading importance at the sessions, according to Mr. Steffes, will be the uniform contract, details of which have recently been published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and the exhibitor distributing organization. Mr. Steffes will also introduce a resolution at the convention to change the constitution and by-laws, so that the constitution can be amended on the floor at future conventions without going through the somewhat elaborate process now necessary to change the basic law of the organization.

W. D. Burford and John Silha are scheduled to leave Monday night for Detroit, where they will be guests at the second annual Motion Picture Day Celebration, which will be observed with a banquet by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan and the F. I. L. M. Club of Detroit, in the Hotel Statler ballroom, Tuesday evening. It is expected that Sidney Cohen and other eastern officials of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will also attend the meeting and President Cohen will probably address the gathering on the theatre owners distributing corporation plan.

R. C. Williams, of the Majestic theatre, Streator, Illinois, plans to leave for California the middle of March and expects to remain on the coast enjoying a vacation for three weeks.

R. A. Warren, of the Palace theatre, Chillicothe, Illinois, died of pneumonia last week. Mr. Warren had been an exhibitor for many years and enjoyed wide friendship among motion picture men. He at one time operated the Bluff theatre at Bluff, Illinois.

Harry Thornton, of Springfield, Illinois, was visiting Chicago last week, making contracts and booking for the Princess, Gaiety and Vaudette theatres. He reports conditions in the state capital are improving and business fairly good.

The Majestic theatre at Spring Valley, Illinois, recently burned to the ground and Manager Louis J. Murphy is working on plans to erect a new ground floor theatre on the old site and a lot which he has secured adjacent to the land occupied by the burned house.

Another theatre, which was recently destroyed by fire, was the Opera House at Tampico and Manager Sheres proposes to replace the Opera House with an up-to-date motion picture theatre shortly.

Watterson R. Rothacker, who is at present vacationing in Florida, is expected back at his Chicago headquarters the first week of March. He is expected to stop in New York a few days en route

The Automatic Ticket Register Corporation, of New York, has opened a Chicago branch at 732 S. Wabash Avenue, and D. H. Finke has arrived from New York to take charge of the Chicago office. The sales department, working out of the newly opened branch, will cover the Middle West on both registers and tickets. Mr. Finke states that an expert service department has been installed, in which it will be possible to give service on all styles of ticket machines that are being used, and that the latest 1923 Gold Seal Automaticket model is now on display in the sales room of the Chicago branch.

Melvin M. Hirsh, general manager of the Aywon Film Corporation, was in Chicago last week in the interest of the "Big Boy Williams" series, now being produced on the coast by Charles R. Seeling Productions, and other pictures. Mr. Hirsh reports closing contracts in Pittsburgh and Chicago, and states that after visiting a number of cities in the east and central west, he is convinced that the state-right outlook is very much improved, and that this branch of the industry is in for a season of prosperity.

The Court theatre at Danville is having the finishing touches put on it and Manager Davidson expects to open this new four hundred seat house at an early date.

The new Capitol theatre, of Whiting, Indiana, is scheduled to open on March 1st, and Manager Obrisk will have reason to be proud of this thousand seat moving picture house which is an up-to-date de luxe house in every respect.

C. S. Cohen has disposed of the Grand Opera House at Wausau, Wisconsin, to F. T. Welter, who is remodelling the house and expects it to be open for business very shortly. Mr. Welter was formerly located at Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin.

The Ben Hur theatre, at Cicero Street and Jackson Boulevard, has been purchased by E. H. Christie, owner of the Elmo theatre.

The Avenue theatre, at 3112 Indiana Avenue, has been taken over by Walter Beadell, who will run it under the policy of pictures and vaudeville.

The theatre project started by the late John Best, of Galva, Illinois, will be carried through by his heirs and that city is assured of a handsome, new motion picture house in the near future.

The Swain theatre at Zionsville, Indiana, has been purchased by G. S. Bimley, who has renamed it the Zionsville theatre.

The Booker T. Washington Theatre, at 31st and State Streets, which will be a house for colored patrons, will be opened about March 1st. It will give this neighborhood another up-to-date picture house.

The Chicago Lodge of Elks passed a formal resolution thanking the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners for their offer to co-operate with the Elks in their fight to overcome dope and narcotics, and has made an appropriation for slides and trailers which the motion picture theatres will run on their screens. Samuel Abrahams, Adolph Powell, P. F. Murphy and Patrick L. McArdle were appointed a committee to secure the trailers and slides and arrange for their distribution to the theatres.

Among the Exchanges

THE many friends of Roy Alexander, Universal's Kansas City manager, will sympathize with him in the loss of his mother, who passed away as a result of paralytic strokes, which she suffered a week or ten days previously. Mr. Alexander hastened from Kansas City to Chicago on receipt of news of her illness and was with her at the end.

Manager Jack Sampson, of Film Booking Offices, Chicago, has recently added three salesmen to his staff. They are: A. J. Gallas, formerly with Select, who is covering northern Illinois and Indiana; J. J. Clark, who comes from Paramount's Wisconsin territory to cover northern Illinois; and Joe Duskin, who is traveling southern Illinois and comes from Cleveland, where he is a well-known state-right exchange man.

Hal Olver, formerly Boston representative of First National, has arrived in Chicago to assume the duties of assistant to Al Sobler, the hustling First National exploiteer and publicist. Mr. Olver had made a fine record in the headquarters of culture and beans, and is expected to be a valuable addition to the Chicago staff.

Edwin Johnson has been made assistant to Country Sales Manager I. Gettelson, of F. B. O. Mr. Gettelson recently returned from a swing around the key centers in his territory and is proud over the record he made with "Fighting Blood," and "The Third Alarm," which has been booked one hundred per cent in these key centers.

H .A. Spanuth has made arrangements with the Aywon Film Corporation to distribute "The Lure of the Orient" in northern Illinois and Indiana. He also has taken over the national distribution for Newhafer Productions, of the series of single reel moving pictures, based upon world famous songs. The first seven completed are "Mighty Lak' a Rose," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Take Me Back to Old Virginia," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Coming Through the Rye," "Believe Me if all Those Endearing Young Charms," and "The Moonlight Sonata." "The Moonlight Sonata" has already played at McVicker's theatre and the Ascher Circuit has just booked the entire series.

District Manager Seery, of First National, returned from New York Monday, where he has been for the last two weeks in conference with the New York executives.

Bill Brimmer has resigned from First National, but has not as yet announced his future plans, although it is said he has a fine connection in view.

"Dr. Jack" Teaser Campaign is Put Over in Baltimore

Baltimore, Md.—Co-operating with the management of the New theatre, the Pathe home office exploiteer had a large portion of Baltimore's population wondering just who "Dr. Jack" was, a week before the opening of that picture at the New.

The small army of physicians attached to Johns Hopkins University "sat up and took notice" early on receipt of the now famous letter of challenge from "Dr. H. L. Jack, Specialist," about to arrive in the city with "Nature's best remedy." Meantime the newspapers carried the equally famous series of teaser ads notifying the general public to the same effect, the final one containing "Dr. H. L. Jack's" local address, turning out to be also that of the New theatre ,with its Lloyd lobby display letting the cat out of the bag.

There were ingenious teaser ad tie-ups with other advertisers, including bromo-seltzer, and much paging of "Dr. Jack" at the leading hotels and clubs. The Mayor and other leading citizens were harmlessly, and effectively, tied up with exploitation stunts of this description. Meanwhile a huge motor truck ballyhoo displaying a "Dr. Jack" 24-sheet on each side with the New theatre's announcement, caught every eye on the main thoroughfares.

Uses Fan Fotos to Exploit Run of "Thirty Days"

ANNISTON, ALA.—When the play date for "Thirty Days" arrived, Manager Roy C. Smart of the Noble theatre had on hand about 100 Fan Fotos of Wallace Reid. He knew that interest in these would be unusually high, so he decided to cash in on them.

He advertised that the first 100 adults presenting themselves at the Noble on opening date would be given one of the photos of Reid. When the appointed time came there was a long line waiting for this last opportunity to get a photo of their favorite.

Atmospheric Prologue Staged by Plunkett for "Fury"

New York, N. Y.—Managing Director Joseph Plunkett of the New York Mark Strand theatre staged an atmospheric prologue for "Fury" that was thoroughly in keeping with the picture. The sea atmosphere of the picture and St. Valentine's day, which came during the run, were both embodied in it.

Following the overture, "Scene de Ballet," there came a "Festival Dance and Valse of the Hours" and a "Valentine Dance." The latter was interpreted by Mlle. Chabelska and M. Bourman, the former as a ballet dancer and the latter as a mandolin playing suitor. The curtains opened on a cameo effect shadow box in black and white with the dancer seated in the middle of it. As the mandolin player entered and began his song, the dancer ran down the steps from the shadow box and danced to his accompaniment.

For the prologue to "Fury" a backdrop was used representing a typical wharf scene. The Strand quartet sang two numbers, "Three for Jack" and "Eight Bells." The predominating feature of the singing was a strong basso voice and the realism obtained from the striking bell to coincide with the chorus of "Eight Bells." Interspersed between the two songs M. Bourman did a sailor's hornpipe.

Book Tie-Up Proves Effective On "Quincy Adams Sawyer"

Chicago, Ill.—Bert Ennis, of S-L Pictures, and E. C. Ketcham, Chicago representative of Grosset and Dunlap, arranged more than a hundred bookstore window displays for "Quincy Adams Sawyer" in Chicago and its suburbs, in connection with the run of the picture at the Chicago theatre.

Marshall Field and Company permitted the use of one of their most important windows for a display. In addition to this store, displays were also obtained in The Fair, Rothchild's and every prominent downtown book store.

Messrs. Ennis and Ketcham furnished special aids to these stores in the way of a cut-out of the book standing six feet in height, in which the leading characters in the film stepped forth from the pages, together with specially posed art photographs of Barbara La Marr, and Blanche Sweet. This material was used in conjunction with displays of the 11 x 14's, which were attached to cards describing the book and picture, the illustrations being affixed to the top of the explanatory matter.

Discovery Concerts Popular at Rothchild Theatres

San Francisco, Cal.—The Granada and California theatres, two of a chain, operating under Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., are presenting every Sunday Discovery Concerts, which are holding the attention of the public and motion picture people as well.

These concerts were inaugurated by Managing Directors Roth and Partington for the purpose of giving young artists a chance to prove their ability in the estimation of the public. They have brought to the music lovers of San Francisco many a young artist who has never had a chance to appear before the public and get a chance for recognition. Professional artists of growing and established popularity are appearing on the same program.

These concerts have been so tremendously successful that the management of these respective theatres have seen fit to present them every Sunday as a special and distinct musical attraction.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" Is Given Special Front

GALVESTON, Texas — Manager Charles E. Sasseen advertised "Quincy Adams Sawyer" at the Queen theatre with a special hand-painted lobby display, consisting of cut-outs from the six-sheet showing the rescue scene and two smaller cut-outs of Lon Chaney and Elmo Lincoln.

The entire entrance to the theatre was enclosed in beaver board excepting for the entrance and exit openings. This beaver board enclosure was painted in striking colors and carried the title of the picture, the cast and sales lines about the picture.

On top of the marquise Mr. Sasseen arranged a 24-sheet which was illuminated with five 100-watt lamps.

A local book store arranged a very attractive window display to advertise the book and the picture.

Front of Theatre Masked for "White Masks"

ATLANTA, Ga.—When Manager G. M. Phillips played "White Masks" at the Strand theatre, he built a huge white canvas mask, through the glaring eye-sockets of which one entered or left the theatre. The mask covered the entire front of the theatre and was most realistically painted.

On the inside of the lobby was an interesting collection of antique weapons.

Clock Face with Starting Hours Proves Popular

SUMTER, S. C.—When playing "The Face in the Fog," Manager Oscar White of the Rex theatre wanted to get his patrons in at the start of the picture.

A large clock face, five feet in diameter, was built for the lobby. This was covered with black cloth and the numerals were cut out of compo board, painted white and tacked on. The hands also were white. Attached to the bottom of the clock face was a compo board banner, billing the picture and referring to it as "A whirlwind romance with hair-trigger thrills." The clock was always kept set to the time of starting of the next show.

This big clock attracted so much attention and made such a hit with his patrons that Mr. White received a number of requests to leave it in place and use it on all attractions.

Russian Roubles Find Use in Stunt on "Nobody's Money"

Greely, Colo.—An ingenious and appropriate exploitation measure was employed by F. K. Davis, of the Sterling theatre, when he played "Nobody's Money."

He got about fifty dollars worth of German marks and Russian roubles through his banker and enclosed one bill in each envelope, carrying just the title of the picture.

He then tied up with the department stores to distribute the envelopes. The newspaper advertising then announced that the foreign currency would be redeemed at the box office for its exchange value toward the purchase of a ticket.

This got a good laugh, of course, and most of the money was saved as souvenirs.

Balances "Fury" with Program of Light Music and Dance

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, in planning his presentation for "Fury," decided that a picture of this type, being a sea drama and hence somewhat heavy in theme and action, should be surrounded with music and specialties of a light nature, to balance the program.

The overture was a combination of five selections from five Victor Herbert operettas, beginning with "March of the Toys" from "Babes in Toyland." While the orchestra played this, two dancers of the ballet corps emerged from square boxes and went through eccentric dances, to the finish of the number. The second selection was "Kiss Me Again" from "Mlle. Modiste," which was played by the orchestra while the stage was being set. On the draw curtains vari-colored lights were played, a remarkable color harmony. Then the music swung to "Thine Alone" from "Eileen," and when the draw curtains were parted a special set revealed a home in the beautiful Irish hills, with a river in the valley. Eldora Stanford and Everett Clark sang "Thine Alone" in the yard of the cottage.

As the curtains were closed the orchestra changed to "I'm Falling in Love with Someone" from "Naughty Marietta," and played this through with the color harmonies changing and interchanging to the finish.

The fifth and final selection of the Herbert overture was "Gypsy Love Song" from "The Fortune Teller." This was in a special pastoral setting, with white-blossomed trees and sheep in the meadow as background. Two gypsy girls were playing cards on the ground while Jackson Kinsey, baritone, sang the number. He was also costumed as a gypsy. Following the first chorus the girls were joined by another from off-stage and the three danced around the singer. This furnished a very effective and strong finish to the overture, and it at least put that happy-go-lucky feeling into the audience to fortify them against the "heavy" feature to come.

Shadow-Box Built in Lobby for "Singed Wings"

AUSTIN, Texas—Manager E. B. Roberts of the Majestic theatre made use of an effective shadow-box in advertising "Singed Wings."

The display consisted of a large wooden frame around which was built out of beaver board a jungle setting showing futuristic trees with Spanish moss hanging from them. In the distance was a water scene showing the moonlight above it.

A small cut-out of Bebe Daniels in her dancing costume stood in the center of the display. A large butterfly acted as a base for the shadow-box and on the wings of this butterfly was painted the name of the star and the title of the picture.

Merchant Induced to Put on a "Kick In" Sale at Store

Anniston, Ala.—A short time before "Kick In" was to open at the Noble theatre, Manager Roy C. Smart located a merchant who was going to put on a big sale. So Mr. Smart induced him to make it a "Kick In Sale" and tie-up closely with the engagement of the picture. The idea was that he was willing to "kick in" with the bargains because he had to "kick in" to his creditors pretty soon.

The merchant started a week in advance with teaser ads on every page of the paper except the front page. These were increased in size until each ad was four inches. Then on Friday before the picture opened Monday, and again on Sunday, the merchant ran a half-page in which the picture coming to the Noble was prominently mentioned.

The merchant covered the entire front of his store with banners dominated by the words, "Kick In." This was done about four days in advance, getting a Sunday showing. The sale opened day and date with the picture.

For all of this advertising Mr. Smart gave the merchant 500 passes, good only from 1 to 3 on opening day.

Animated Cutout Is Used for "Hottentot" Attractor

Seattle, Wash.—Strong use of cutouts was made by the Liberty theatre during the run of "The Hottentot." On the marquee a cutout was used from the 24-sheet of a jumping horse, about to leap over the edge of the marquee to the street below. Bits of shrubbery, easily gathered together, were placed in front of the cutout. It added a touch of realism and gave an opportunity to hide a pair of electric lights that illuminated the display at night.

A real shrubbery hurdle was placed in the lobby in front of a cutout from the one-sheet of a horse about to take the jump. The horse was put on a rocker base so that it kept constantly in motion.

The hurdle cutout from the one-sheet was effectively used in making merchant tie-ups; and a street ballyhoo was used of four horses and jockeys in brightly colored suits during the picture's run.

A logical angle for tie-ups on "The Hottentot" that found favor in Seattle was that with riding academies.

Advance Drive for "Little Church Around Corner"

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Immediately upon booking "The Little Church Around the Corner," Manager Reid of the Strand theatre set under way one of his heaviest newspaper and exploitation campaigns.

Fifty of the best twenty-four sheet boards in the city were secured. Manager Reid also utilized the local dailies by running for a number of days pictures of the prominent members of the cast in character poses clear across the page. Mercantile co-operative cut-out cards were placed in leading store windows, door knob hangers, regulation window cards, and heralds were distributed throughout the city.

Framed Cut-out is Used in "Making a Man" Lobby

HOUSTON, Texas—Manager E. E. Collins of the Capitol theatre exploited "Making a Man" with a very commanding lobby display. It consisted of a large frame cut and designed most artistically.

The center of this frame was left open and in this space Mr. Collins placed a large head cut-out of Jack Holt, and directly in front of this head cut-out was a smaller cut-out showing the skyline of New York City.

"Tess" Tickets Made School Awards of Merit

CALGARY, Alta.—The management of the Capitol theatre, when showing "Tess of the Storm Country," gave a preview to which the school children and teachers of Calgary were invited, admission being on a card of identification from the school principal.

In addition to this, the theatre management announced that any teacher in the city could offer a free ticket to "Tess of the Storm Country" to the best pupil in the class, the teacher to set the conditions and time under and during which the competition was to take place. This plan worked surprisingly well, and aroused great interest among the school children. The letter sent by the theatre management making this announcement was taken from one given in the "Tess of the Storm Country" press book.

Minister Speaks in Connection with "Rose of the Sea"

Sandusky, Ohio.—A new measure for fighting censorship and Sunday closing has been evolved by George J. Schade, owner and manager of the Schade theatre.

He has invited the Rev. N. H. R. Moor rector of Grace Episcopal church, to deliver a short sermon each Sunday as part of his picture program. The Rev. Mr. Moor is interested in pictures and believes that he can fight for better screen entertainment by co-operating with the exhibitor rather than making a stand against picture houses.

During his second "sermonette" the Schade theatre was showing "Rose of the Sea," and the minister used part of this story to show that if picture goers thought a little more of the purposes of pictures instead of just wanting to be amused they would soon force theatre managers to show on the screen only those pictures that contributed to the betterment of civilization.

Varied Publicity Program for Showing of "The Flirt"

Bellingham, Wash.—Manager Fred Walton, of the American theatre, and Robert Bender, Universal exploiteer, put over an energetic and varied campaign for the showing of "The Flirt."

A type of ballyhoo that was never seen on Bellingham streets before was arranged by Mr. Bender with the Bellingham automobile concern that handles the Maxwell car. All during the day and evening a young lady, elegantly dressed, with her face partially covered by a mask, drove about the streets of the town in a sedan. On each side of the car, in small letters, were the words, "This was the car 'The Flirt' wanted; did she get it?" The ballyhoo was used for several days before the run of the picture, as well as during the engagement.

Another plan was the tie-up with a Bellingham newspaper in regard to a "What Is a Flirt?" contest. The paper printed the best letters from its readers on the subject, and cash and admission prizes were awarded by the theatre for the best answers to the contest question.

A tie-up with the Owl Drug Store, on the main corner of the town, attracted a great amount of attention. The Owl's window was dressed to represent a boudoir. Before a dressing table a life-size figure of "The Flirt," made from a billboard cut-out, was seated on a chair, in the act of applying some form of cosmetic. Other drugs and cosmetics were placed around on the dressing table, with several pictures of "The Flirt" in frames.

Chain Guessing Contest Is "Broken Chains" Stunt

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.— Goldwynner H. T. Snowden arranged a tie-up with the Indianapolis Light & Heat Company for the showing of "Broken Chains" at the Ohio theatre which struck a new note in stunts on this picture.

It consisted of a guessing contest as to the number of links in a chain which was displayed in the window together with an electric washing machine. A large card was placed in the window offering $10 in cash for the person whose guess as to the number of links in the chain was the nearest correct.

The same guessing contest was used in two other window displays tie-ups—at Goldsmith's drug store and at the Edison Shop.

All three firms occupy shops located on busy streets where thousands of persons pass every day. The displays remained in each window for four days.

Telegrams to Doctors Used in Campaign for "Dr. Jack"

El Paso, Texas.—An advance teaser campaign of the type being used throughout the country was employed on "Dr. Jack" by Manager J. M. Edgar Hart of the Palace theatre.

This campaign consisted of a series of teaser ads to be run in the newspapers on five consecutive days. In advance of these ads the doctors received a special letter calling their attention to the arrival of Dr. Jack and of his intended headquarters and office hours; then ten of the doctors received telegrams just before they received the letters, advising them of Dr. Jack's arrival. These telegrams were sent from Dallas so as to make the proposition appear real.

This advance campaign created such a sensation that the local Chamber of Commerce wired Los Angeles if there was any such doctor registered there by the name of "Jack."

Mr. Hart followed up his teaser campaign with regular announcements stressing Harold Lloyd.

For a lobby display Mr. Hart built a huge physician's handbag out of beaver board, on which was painted some of "Dr. Jack's" methods of curing. Beside this huge handbag was a hand-painted cut-out of Harold Lloyd.

"Minnie" Causes Disturbance Among Atlanta Husbands

Atlanta, Ga.—Manager Willard Patterson of the Metropolitan theatre caused considerable excitement among the married men of Atlanta with the personal note stunt in his campaign to exploit "Minnie."

The following message was sent in an envelope marked "Personal" and addressed in delicate feminine chirography:

"My Dear: Sorry to have missed you Saturday afternoon. Please meet me Monday afternoon 2:15 at Broad and Luckie streets. Your Minnie."

Did such a message get by friend wife? At least a dozen irate Atlantans are ready to swear it didn't. They rushed to Broad and Luckie streets to trail down this brazen hussie and demand an explanation; but all they found was the electric signboard screaming "Minnie" to every one. Then they demanded an explanation of Manager Willard Patterson. Suave and smiling, he explained that he had been sick.

"I guess they were written while I was sick," he said, "and nobody ought to try to be funny while I'm sick. Besides, I guess I haven't been married long enough not to have sense enough to know better."

"I agree with you;" said one of the irate husbands; but the others, commencing to see the humor of it, joined in the fun.

Fuzzy Woodruff, columnist of the Atlanta Georgian, heard of it and wrote it up in his own humorous style for two columns on the front page.

Makes Hit With Children With Andy Gump Matinee

Fort Smith, Ark.—Manager Hugo Plath held a special matinee for children at the Palace theatre on a Saturday morning to popularize the theatre, tying the idea up with a series of cartoons of Andy Gump that the local newspaper, The Southwest American, was then featuring.

Mr. Plath advertised that Andy Gump himself and maybe little Chester with his pony and cart, too, would be at the Palace theatre to talk to every boy and girl of school age who attended the Andy Gump show as the guest of The Southwest American and the Palace theatre.

The newspaper had worked up considerable interest in advance by issuing special Andy Gump buttons and pins to the children who called at the newspaper for them.

As a result of this advertising, more than seven hundred and fifty kids were guests of the Palace theatre for this special matinee. Mr. Plath took advantage of this opportunity to advertise the coming attractions at the Palace theatre, by giving out heralds—displaying photographs and poster paper in the theatre lobby and with slides on the screen.

Newspaper Stunt Features "Poor Men's Wives"

NEW YORK, N. Y.—During the run of "Poor Men's Wives" at the Criterion theatre, an excellent publicity hook-up was obtained with the Daily News. This paper conducts a daily column under the heading, "The Inquiring Reporter," in which a reporter asks several people, picked at random, their opinion on some question of the day.

On a certain day, the question asked was in regard to the relative chances for happiness of poor men's wives and rich men's wives. A 30 by 40-inch enlargement of this was made and posted in front of the Criterion, with a line across the top, "What do you think?" This attracted great attention.

Illuminated Heart Cut-Out for "Peg O' My Heart"

MUSKOGEE, Okla.—Manager Ollie Brownlee of the Palace theatre, for his "Peg O' My Heart" lobby built a large heart cut-out of beaver board and then painted it crimson.

Against this scarlet background was painted a picture of Laurette Taylor, the title of the picture and the star's name. The heart was illuminated with tiny electric lights placed at intervals around the edge. Red ribbons extended from the heart to the edge of the marquise.

"Peg o' My Heart" Helped by Merchant Tie-Up

MACON, Ga.—In exploiting "Peg o' My Heart," Manager E. C. Kingman of the Rialto theatre started his trailer ten days in advance and at the same time posted five 24-sheets on illuminated stands. He also placed a 3-sheet and display of photos in foyer.

Macon's "Annual Dollar Day" sale was held on Wednesday before the picture opened on Thursday, so Mr. Kingman tied-up with six merchants on a cooperative page, allowing each of the merchants to sell 10 tickets for 1c. each, good for the first day's showing. All sixty of the tickets were sold and all came in at the doors. This helped the picture off to a good start.

Special Showings Aid Run of "Tess" in Texas City

Austin, Texas.—Manager E. B. Roberts of the Majestic theatre began his campaign to advertise "Tess of the Storm Country" with a special showing of the picture on Sunday before the picture opened to an invited audience composed of the most influential people in the city. Mr. Roberts sent out special invitations for this advance showing, requesting that the people reply if they could not be present. The newspaper representatives were also invited. In addition to the special showing of the picture the management served punch and cakes; thus turning the affair into an informal reception.

About five days in advance of play date there appeared in the newspapers a contest which was also advertised on the theatre's screen asking the public to send in to the theatre their reasons for liking Mary Pickford. The essay was limited to two hundred words.

Mr. Roberts was host to the winter graduating class of the high school on the second day of the picture's showing. The Mothers' Club of Austin gave this party to the high school students.

"Town That Forgot God" Gets Hook-Up with Shriners

Denver, Colo.—When "The Town that Forgot God" was booked in at the Isis theatre, Louis K. Sidney, managing director of the William Fox theatres in Denver, made arrangements whereby the picture was played under the auspices of the local chapter of Shriners, which assumed the responsibility of sponsoring the picture in order to raise money to send the Shrine Patrol Band and Drum Corps to the Shrine convention in Washington next June.

There are 4,500 members of the Shrine in Denver, and every member sold tickets for the engagement of "The Town That Forgot God" at the Isis. The Shrine band of seventy and the drum corps of si ty paraded every day during the showing of the picture, inaugurated on the opening day by the biggest parade Denver has ever seen. In this parade the Shrine Band, Patrol and Drum Corps, and every Shriner who had an automobile participated. Practically every business concern in the city which had an auto truck placed their trucks in the parade, carrying banners reading: "Our Employes Are Going to See 'The Town That Forgot God' at the Isis Theatre and Help the Shrine," etc. It is estimated that 1,000 automobiles were in line.

City officials co-operated in making it a gala day, placing American flags at every street corner, while most of the business houses on the route of the parade were profusely decorated with bunting, flags, etc.

For several days prior to the opening day the best oratorical talent of the Shriners spoke at every business man's luncheon's club in the city, comprising such clubs as the Lions, Kiwanis, Rotary, Optimists' and Gyro clubs, their subject being "The Town That Forgot God" and what this enterprise, which would prove one of the most potent factors in bringing the 1926 Shrine convention to Denver meant to them.

Tickets for the showing were placed on sale in all leading establishments in Denver and special committees were appointed to sell tickets.

Approximately 2,000 stickers for automobiles, half-sheets, one-sheets, etc., were used. Twelve trucks in the parade were decorated with twenty four-sheets, six-sheets and three-sheets.

The Denver newspapers backed up the proposition to the limit, giving it the maximum amount of space.

A personal letter was sent to every minister and Shrine member in Denver, citing the fact that the clergy of New York City had endorsed "The Town That Forgot God" as one that would make a strong moral appeal.

Tie-Up Made with Laundry on "Shadows" Herald

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Newman theatre tied up with a local laundry on a unique herald to exploit "Shadows," 3,100 of which were inserted in as many packages of laundry.

The copy on the one side read: The difference between the old Chinese laundryman and this great, modern laundry is as great as the difference between the ordinary picture-play and "Shadows" at the Twelfth street theatre. A cut of Lon Chaney was used at the right of this, in the character of the Chinese laundryman. The reverse side of the herald bore straight selling copy for the picture.

"Mandalay" Used as Prologue to "Voice from Minaret"

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre built his prologue for "The Voice From the Minaret" around a well established and ever popular song, "On the Road to Mandalay," sung by Carlton Gerard, basso.

For this song and prologue Mr. Gerard was dressed as an English army officer in India. The set as a background consisted of two ground rows attached, on which were painted East Indian temples, with one large temple in the center. Leading from this temple was a walk or promenade, and on each side of it at the stage center were placed evergreen trees.

The front lighting consisted of Mestrum floods of medium blue covering the entire stage, with Kliegs of medium blue on the orchestra. The transparent windows at either side of the stage (a permanent set) were lighted a medium green. Green foot lights were used on the small stage, upon which the prologue was given. Four arch spot lights were focused on the draw curtains, two being rose pink and one orange and the fourth medium green.

This prologue held the spot on the program just preceding the feature picture.

First 1,000 Women in Free to "What's Wrong with Women?"

Seattle, Wash.—A special free matinee for the first thousand women to come to the theatre at 10 a. m. on the opening morning was one of the ideas successfully used by Publicity Manager Vic Gauntlett in putting over a run of "What's Wrong with the Women?" recently at John Hamrick's Blume Mouse theatre in this city.

The matinee was advertised several days in advance, and newspapers devoted space to the fact that the first 1,000 women were to be admitted free to the attraction. The picture was played up in the advertising and exploitation put over for it along the line of a criticism of modern woman, and the question asked in the name of the picture was made an important part of the publicity used.

Various special feature articles and straight news stories describing the picture as one that would successfully answer the question asked by the name, and would be of interest to every woman, no matter whether she was single or married, young or old, succeeded in arousing no little interest among the "weaker sex" in Seattle.

Male Quartette Aids Effect of "Quincy Adams Sawyer"

FORT WORTH, Texas.—In exploiting "Quincy Adams Sawyer," Manager Barry Burke of the Palace theatre worked to create a suitable atmosphere both inside the theatre and outside.

First, he engaged a quartette for the week and dressed them to represent the rural characters in the picture. They appeared during the song scene in the picture and rendered suitable selections. The doorman and ushers were dressed in country boy style which created comment from the patrons.

In the lobby of the theatre, Mr. Burke had a cut-out showing the five principal characters in the picture with a sales line above the cut-out that read as follows: "Hark and Hear the Eagle Scream." At the bottom of the cut-out was the title of the picture and the name of the stars.

Miniature Tenements Make "Kick In" Display

AUSTIN, Texas—Manager E. B. Roberts of the Majestic theatre advertised "Kick In" with an atmospheric lobby display.

It was a miniature and made of beaver board, showing a "model" tenement district such as was seen in the picture.

The houses were illuminated from the inside by tiny electric lights. In the streets were seen various rough-looking characters. There was represented a pawn shop, a second hand store, a saloon and the old style lamppost.

This entire set was made by Mr. Roberts and his assistants, thus reducing the cost to only the material used.

Net Strung Across Street for "Broken Chains"

HAMMOND, Ind.—James Craidon, manager of the Parthenon theatre, and Walter D. Nealand, Goldwynner, erected a striking sign for "Broken Chains."

They erected a large sign above the marquee with the cut-out figure of Colleen Moore from one of the posters above it. And then across the street in front of the theatre, a large net was spread. On the net were fastened five bars of beaverboard which advertised the theatre, the picture, the featured player and the date of showing.

An attractive lobby display was also arranged, and extra space taken in the newspaper.

Print of "The Christian" Put in Bank Safety Vault

Richmond, Va.—Goldwynner William N. Robson obtained plentiful publicity space for "The Christian" here, through the police guard and bank vault stunt.

When he learned that "The Christian" was to receive its premiere in Richmond, he boarded a train for that city, taking with him the first print of the photoplay. He was accompanied by William Busch and announced that they were special representatives from the studio. They were met at the station by Manager Tucker of the Colonial and three uniformed policemen to guard the film.

With this escort Messrs. Robson and Busch were taken to the Broad Street Bank, where the film was turned over to the vice-president and two of his associates. They placed the film in the vault of the bank for safe keeping until time for it to be turned over to the theatre.

Needless to say, a photographer was at the railroad station and at the bank to get pictures of the arrival of the studio representatives with the film and the placing of the two cans containing it in the vault. This made good "news" for the daily press and aroused the curiosity of the readers.

Tie-Up with Newspaper Planned on "Front Page Story"

Milwaukee, Wis.—The fact that "A Front Page Story" has a newspaper angle has been utilized to make possible a tie-up between the Milwaukee Journal and the Strand theatre, which will result in extensive co-operation with the picture by the paper during its run.

The campaign will begin with a picture and story of Edward Horton, who plays the leading role, and a series of teaser ads.

The following day there will be a story about "Buddy" Messenger, who has an important role, and a continuation of the teaser ads.

The next day there will be a newspaper story on the teaser want ads distributed throughout the paper.

"Covered Wagon" Is Given Advance Campaign

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.—George Carpenter, Salt Lake City exhibitor, and Kenneth O. Renaud, Paramount exploiteer, have already started their campaign on "The Covered Wagon" with a valuable window, although the dates are not yet announced.

The display consists of attractively mounted stills, 11 by 14 inches, depicting the phases of the 2,000 mile journey which made both history and the picture. The added local-interest angle—and the picture was made in Utah by a Utah man, James Cruze—was played up in the window card.

Renaud went around to the newspapers and planted stories of the display and the coming attraction. The fact that "the dates will be announced later" lends an air of dignity to the proceedings and has distinct teaser values.

The day after there will be a story on the three hundredth anniversary of the newspaper industry and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the film industry.

Next day the Journal will carry a story on Edith Roberts and will continue the teaser ads.

Then there will be a story on the Milwaukee Journal picture and a newsprint picture and its significance in connection with "A Front Page Story."

On the opening of the picture there will be a story by Mary Mac, covering the review on the entire show.

There will be a large display advertisement and a news story. There will be window display tie-ups showing the three mediums of recording expression of thought, that is, the newspaper, the films and the phonograph. There will be a specal Saturday morning matinee for newsboys with a parade to the theatre, and the Journal will carry a cartoon on the newspaper industry shaking hands with young film industry, etc.

On the same day "A Front Page Story" will start a contest. Prizes will be offered each day for the best story on a prominent man or woman of Milwaukee. The story must be true, and the best one will be published on the front page of the Journal each day.

Jewelry Store Tie-Up Used to Advantage on "Pink Gods"

Fort Worth, Texas. — Manager Harry Gould of the Hippodrome theatre, with the assistance of a local newspaper man, arranged a tie-up with a local jewelry store to advertise "Pink Gods," to excellent advantage.

The jewelry store gave the picture special display in their windows, allowing the management to place photographs of the stars, neatly printed cards telling about the picture and the display to be shown in the lobby of the Hippodrome theatre. During the week previous to the run of the picture ads appeared in the newspapers advertising the display of diamonds to be seen in the lobby of the Hippodrome theatre in connection with the regular ads of the jewelry company.

The day the picture opened, Mr. Gould had in the lobby of the Hippodrome theatre a very attractive display built to resemble a show window — and in this display the Mitchell-Greer Jewelry Store placed $50,000 worth of real diamonds. These stones were guarded by special police all during the day and at night were carried to the jewelry company's vault.

The newspaper pushed the stunt by giving the picture and the display a full page tie-up in the paper.

Girls used to ballyhoo "The Flirt" for its showing at the Randolph theatre, Chicago. They appeared in many public places, reading the book

"The Bolted Door"

Universal—4126 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

UNIVERSAL has been giving Frank Mayo some first rate picture material and the high level has been so consistently maintained that we've wondered just when the law of averages was to be obeyed—with a story not up to his good standard. "The Bolted Door" fails to hit the high spots of "The First Degree" and some others we could mention. In the first place it is based upon the marriage of convenience or rather the wife-in-name-only theme and the motivation is covered, not by a working out of the situations, but by the captions.

We learn that the haughty niece does not favor her uncle's choice for a husband—even though the young people were erstwhile playmates. He is a mechanic—not afraid of work. She is a social butterfly with a fondness for dancing men. However, the uncle dies leaving a will which stipulates that the mechanic and the girl must marry or forfeit his estate. So they make a marriage of convenience. She bolts the door and makes herself a wife in name only. From the wedding night until a reconciliation is effected, the spectator sees nothing of the 'give and take' conflict.

There isn't any humor, nor any subtlety of situation. The husband sits on the other side of the door registering disappointment. Not even the fact that he is a mechanic is clearly established as providing an argument between them. He leaves the house eventually, taking quarters near his plant. Then comes a telegram stating that one of the trustees of the estate has squandered the fortune. The girl motors over to meet him and reads it. A subtitle indicates that she is going home to brood. Yet the subsequent shot shows her giving a reception at the house. The fortune hunter casts her aside when he learns the contents of the telegram, but not before he is punished.

The fight of the rivals in evening dress is uncalled for. It smacks of two naughty boys quarreling over their marbles. Might better reserve the fisticuffs for outdoor pictures—in the open spaces where men are men. A reconciliation is effected. Mayo is sincere in his portrayal. Phyllis Haver is too conventional as the haughty bride. The picture is staged well enough. The story lacks detail and incident.

The Cast

Brooke Garriott.....Frank Mayo
Oliver Judson.....Charles A. Stevenson
Natalie Judson.....Phyllis Haver
Rene De Land.....Nigel Barry
Natalie's Chum.....Kathleen Kirkham
Attorney Bronson.....Frank Whitson

By George Gibbs. Scenario by George Randolph Chester. Directed by William Worthington.

The Story—Rich man dies, leaving will that orphan he has adopted should marry his niece, an erstwhile playmate of the youth. The young man is a mechanic and the girl scorns him. But they marry according to the terms of the will. However, the bride bolts the door against him. She is a wife in name only. The husband is occupied with his inventions, but at a reception he demands marital obligations. And the wife learns to respect and love him.

Classification—Domestic drama based upon unrequited love—a marriage of convenience.

Production Highlights—The good work of Frank Mayo. The scene when wife bolts the door.

Exploitation Angles—Best angle is to exploit Mayo who has been given some first rate productions. Feature the marriage of convenience used here for a plot and make the most of it for a teaser campaign.

Drawing Power—Best suited for program houses—in downtown or neighborhod districts.

"South of the Northern Lights"

Wm. Steiner—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE production values of this picture furnish the only highlights, for the plot is the familiar Northwest Mounted formula which has been enjoying a well earned rest among the producers. It offers no variations here—simply being a conventional story treated in an unusually conventional way. The stock tricks are employed just as they were five or fifteen years ago and everything is worked out according to schedule.

We have the righteous hero who is believed to be a fugitive from justice and who is pursued by the posse; we have the customary scene of the youth seeking refuge in a lonely cabin because of the raging storm. And to expose the other ingredients we have the outlaws who manage to keep just out of reach of the long arm of the law. And to provide the punch, Neal Hart, who wrote, directed, and played the role of the hero, indulges in the usual assortment of fights.

It is all perfectly obvious—this action—and you can spot the climax from the start when the villain confesses his guilt before he dies, thus squaring the hero in the eyes of his sweetheart. The title is explained through the Aurora Borealis, visible in the far north country—and just over the border from the locale of the story. But the Northern Lights really have nothing in common with the action.

The title is colorful, however, and probably will invite patronage in some localities. The picture is burdened with captions and none of them get anywhere in establishing anything. On the credit side, however, are some picturesque backgrounds. And the fights are vigorous enough.

The Cast

Jack Hampton.....Neal Hart
Corp. McAllister.....James McLaughlin
Chick Rawlins.....Ben Corbett
Jane Wilson.....Hazel Deane

Written by Neal Hart. Directed by Neal Hart.

The Story—Youth unjustly accused of murder, is forced to flee. Pursued by posse, he takes refuge in cabin during storm. Eventually proves his heroism and his innocence is established when villain confesses before he dies. Happiness with the girl.

Classification — Northwest Mounted story carrying on the customary pursuit of innocent man accused of murder. Melodrama and romance.

Production Highlights—The picturesque backgrounds. The melodramatic action.

Exploitation Angles—Might exploit some "copy" concerning title—explaining some facts about the Aurora Borealis. Play up Neal Hart if he has a following in your town. If your crowd hasn't tired of Northwest Mounted plot, tell them that such a plot is featured.

Drawing Power—Best suited for localities where patrons aren't "fed up" with Northwest Mounted formula. Might go well in small town houses and second and third class downtown houses.

"The Little Church Around the Corner"

Warner Brothers—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

WARNER BROTHERS have made a very faithful screen version of this famous old Charles E. Blaney stage melodrama of yesteryear. It is evident that there was a large expenditure of money in order to erect a mining town and mine in scenic form on the West Coast. These mining scenes are so good that it is doubtful whether even a resident of the Pennsylvania mining districts could distinguish a flaw in their mounting.

The big feature of the picture is an explosion in the mine which gives opportunity for some of the best camera work seen on the screen in some time. The shots as the rescuers tunnel their way to the entombed workers are unusually well done. The mob scenes are also excellently worked up. In fact they carry a deal of real heart appeal at times, especially as the women folks await the bringing up of the men from the cave-in.

The producers have given the picture a good cast, what with Kenneth Harlan, Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Walter Long, and Pauline Starke in the important roles.

The interiors of the Morton home are quite elaborate. The mining town atmosphere is very realistic. The picture has a goodly number of thrills. The underground scenes might be toned down with many shots of the dead and dying eliminated.

William A. Seiter deserves praise for his direction of the material. Olga Printzlau has prepared the scenario in a manner that takes full opportunity of all the dramatic situations offered. Certainly the picture is one of the best depictions of a mine disaster ever screened. But whether this is what modern screen audiences want on their celluloid menu is problematical. The picture has a big asset in its title, which is really a household phrase.

The Cast

Leila Morton.....Claire Windsor
David Graham.....Kenneth Harlan
Morton.....Hobart Bosworth
Hex.....Walter Long
Hetty.....Pauline Starke
Rev. Bradley.....Alec Francis
Mrs. Graham.....Margaret Seddon
Jude.....George Cooper
Doc Graham.....Winter Hall
Mark Hanford.....Cyril Chadwick

Adapted from the play by Charles E. Blaney. Story and scenario by Olga Printzlau. Directed by William A. Seiter.

The Story—David Graham is an orphan. His father was killed in a mine. He is helped in a financial way by the mine owner to educate himself for the ministry. The owner refuses to better working conditions for his men. David accepts the pulpit of a wealthy church of which Morton is a member, but quits and returns to his own people when Morton refuses to listen to a delegation of miners who demand that a shaft be repaired in the mine. There is a terrific explosion in the mine and a number of men are trapped. David saves Morton and convinces the miners to forget and forgive.

Classification—A thrilling adaptation of a Charles Blaney romantic melodrama which has been seen by millions of theatregoers.

Production Highlights—The excellent mine set, which is a fine replica of a Pennsylvania colliery. The explosion in the mine and the scenes attending the attempt to rescue the entombed workers. The well staged mob scenes.

Exploitation Angles—Might put a ballyhoo on the street, showing a couple dressed as bride and bridegroom in a cab with large sign on back—On our way to the Little Church Around the Corner. Play up the "names" in this cast.

Drawing Power—Should be acceptable in first run downtown theatres.

"Othello"

Ben Blumenthal-Howells-Export & Import—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S been argued that Shakespeare cannot be adapted to the screen. There's no question that this argument has been inspired through the inability of producers to translate properly his tragedies (we are not speaking of his comedies because most of these have been lifted to provide material for less gifted dramatists) and bring forth the eloquent style and force of his verse. Then again there were no happy endings in them and producers, doubtless, were also governed by the fact that the reading of the immortal lines would be silenced.

The Germans, however, have always taken the Bard seriously. And his "Othello," the tragedy of jealousy, is certainly something to write encomiums over. The Russian, Buchowetzki, has approached the work with a deep appreciation, and deserves credit for adapting Shakespeare in a language that can be understood by everyone. There is food for thought as well as food for the emotions. No one should stay away from this picture thinking that boredom will be the result.

The spectator will see pantomime at its highest expression—the pantomime of the mind rather than action. He will see the cunning machinations conceived by the most despicable villain in all literature flashed forth in a manner that will invite the strictest attention. Iago, ever scheming to destroy the power of Othello—to sow seeds of jealousy and bring about his downfall, to destroy his romance with Desdemona, is played by Werner Kraus of "Dr. Caligari" fame—and what a performance! The screen has never shown anything finer than his diabolical cunning, expressed through eloquent shadings which flit across his face, and the consummate grace of his gestures. He is the devil incarnate. Emil Jannings is an ideal Moor, big of stature, perfect in make-up and thoroughly in character. And a simple child in the hands of Iago who possesses the more fertile imagination. The entire cast is splendid with Ica Lenkeffy as Desdemona and Lya de Putti as Emilia, the maid, charming in their interpretations.

The picture has been staged with a minimum of detail. But the atmosphere and settings are in perfect harmony. The production editor, Don Bartlett, has wisely incorporated Shakespeare's dialogue in most of the subtitles. After all who could improve on the Bard as a title writer? The picture needs exploitation for those who cannot subscribe to Shakespeare's plays upon the screen. This picture is proof positive that he can be done. —and done exceedingly well. Patrons will never see finer acting than what is exhibited here. And they'll be royally entertained.

The Cast

Othello	Emil Jannings
Iago	Werner Kraus
Rodrigo	Ferdinand Alten
Brabantio	Frederick Kuhne
Montano	Magnus Stitter
Desdemona	Ica Lenkeffy
Emilia	Lya de Putti

By William Shakespeare. Directed by Dmitri Buchowetzki. Photographed by Carl Hasselman. Edited by Don Bartlett.

The Story—Othello, powerful general, takes Desdemona as wife after his triumphal return to Venice. He appoints Cassio as his lieutenant which inspires Iago to plot his downfall and ruin. Iago succeeds, but is killed by Othello. The Moor takes his own life when he realizes that his wife, whom he has killed, was innocent.

Classification—Adaptation of Shakespeare's tragedy "Othello," the spirit being retained.

Production Highlights—The marvelous acting by Werner Kraus, Emil Jannings, and the others in the cast. The fine appreciation for Shakespeare's lines, characters and situations. The splendid staging.

Exploitation Angles—Deserves wide exploitation. Link up with women's clubs, reading societies, schools. Put on dignified campaign.

Drawing Power—Properly exploited, should draw. Once seen will be passed around by word of mouth. Get them in.

"Tight Shoes" is the title of the one reel comedy featuring Paul Parrott (Pathe) from which the above scene is taken.

"None So Blind"

Burton King-Arrow—6211 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

WHILE "None So Blind" is, in the main, a story of the Hebrew, it differs in an important manner from the other pictures of Jewish family life we have had, in that it portrays the barriers of race being removed by love and that it parallels this family with a Gentile family.

The theme of the picture—that love is stronger than racial barriers—is somewhat daring, but we will believe that, as it is handled, it will find favor with audiences generally.

It is primarily a picture of heart appeal, rather than sensational melodrama, and it is made interesting by its intimate portrayal of family life among two classes—on the East Side in New York and New York society.

The central character is that of a man whose life is dominated by the desire for revenge against the man whom he feels has cruelly wronged his daughter. His entire life is devoted to this purpose, although, on the other hand, none is more charitable or philanthropic than he. In the end, love conquers his hatred. This man, as played by Dore Davidson, is a picturesque figure—during the day, he is Isaac Goldsmith, a harsh moneylender; at night, he becomes himself, Aaron Abrams, beloved in the community.

His granddaughter, Ruth, gives a rather refreshing portrayal of the girl who is willing to marry the man of her grandfather's choice, but is really in love with another. She makes this girl a very appealing figure.

Maurice Costello, always interesting, is seen as the man against whom Abrams directs his hate, and Edward Earle gives a characteristic performance as his ward.

The Cast

Aaron Abrams	Dore Davidson
Rachel Abrams Mortimer	Zena Keefe
Roger Mortimer	Anders Randolf
Ruth	Zena Keefe
Sheldon Sherman	Edward Earle
Rebecca	Sonia Nodell
Saul Cohen	Bernard Siegel
Louis Cohen	Robert Bentley
Russell Mortimer	Maurice Costello
Hazel Mortimer	Gene Burnell

By Kathlyn Kerrigan. Adapted by Leonia Morgan. Directed by Burton King. Burton King Production.

The Story—Rachel Abrams runs away and marries Russell Mortimer, New York society man. Mortimer's father interferes and breaks up match. Her father, Aaron, takes the $10,000 which the elder Mortimer gives them and founds a business with which to ultimately wreck young Mortimer. Rachel dies giving birth to a daughter, Ruth, whom Aaron raises. He wishes her to marry Louis Cohen, but she loves Sheldon Sherman, Mortimer's ward. Mortimer, in turn, wishes Sheldon to marry Hazel, his daughter by a second marriage. Abrams finally gets Mortimer in his power, financially, and is about to crush him, when love softens his heart.

Classification—Heart interest drama of New York life.

Production Highlights—The work of Dore Davidson as the money-lender. The Jewish wedding.

Exploitation Angles—Title suggests tie-ups with oculists. Play up the general heart interest angle in selling copy.

Drawing Power—Suitable for program houses.

"Safety Last"

Hal Roach Production—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

ANY human being that can sit through Harold Lloyd's latest and not find in it a barrel of good, old fashioned laughs, and real enjoyment—well that person might just as well be like old Tut-Ankh-Amen-well embalmed. "Safety Last" is crammed full of merriment. Although it is seven reels in length, it doesn't seem half that long. It is action personified. In a way this is a production for the ladies. Much of its action takes place in a department store—where most women spend half their lives and all their husband's long green. Here we see Harold as a clerk who also poses as the general manager in order to make a hit with "the only girl"—of course, she is Mildred Davis.

The fun starts with Harold being late for work. He has a terrible time trying to get a ride to the store and finally lands on a stretcher in an ambulance. This gets him on the job. He rigs himself up as a style dummy, is carried in, sets back the time clock and punches himself in on time. Summoned to the boss's office for waiting on the counter "en deshabille" he first combs his hair—using a customer's bald head as a mirror. On his way to the office, the girl enters. He puts up a bold front. She thinks he is the big boss and insists on seeing his office. Harold gets her in and has a terrible time when he sits on the bells on the desk and all the employees in the plant rush to his service. He tells the girl it's only a fire drill. After a lot of fun in trying to carry out the role of boss, Harold overhears the manager offer to give $1,000 to anyone for a new idea that will attract crowds to the store. Harold succeeds in persuading the manager to give him a chance to earn that coin. He gets his pal to consent to climb the outside of a skyscraper. There is an immense throng on hand to see the thrilling stunt, but there is also a cop waiting to grab the climber. In order to circumvent the cop, the climber arranges with Harold to do the "human fly" stuff while he tries to get rid of the "dick." Harold starts in. So does the laughter. So does the excitement. New gags and new thrills follow in rapid-fire order. It is a picture that will probably attain the laugh record of the year. Harold, of course, is the whole works, but he is assisted by a very capable cast. Mildred Davis is demure and pleasing, as always, as the girl who inspires Harold to his feats of daring. Bill Strother is seen as the boy's pal, and Noah Young is the officer of the law who causes so many complications.

The Cast

The Boy	Harold Lloyd
The Girl	Mildred Davis
The Pal	Bill Strother
The Law	Noah Young
The Floorwalker	Westcott B. Clarke

By Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Tim Whelan. Directed by Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor.

The Story—In order to win one thousand dollars so that he can marry the girl, the boy, a department store clerk, hits upon the idea of having his pal climb the outside of a skyscraper. Circumstances force him to do the climbing himself. On the way up he meets with obstacles. At the top the girl is waiting for him. Happiness.

Classification—A Harold Lloyd comedy of feature length. Nufsed.

Production Highlights—The amusing scenes in the department store. The thrills provided by the "human fly" stuff on the side of a skyscraper. Harold is the "human fly." The excellent camera work. The originality of the plot.

Exploitation Angles—The star. The title. Get a "human fly" to climb a building in your town and tie up with the newspaper on the similarity of the stunt in the picture. Arrange with the police department to use the slogan "Safety Last," in some way as a warning to motorists.

Henry Murdock in a scene from "A Hula Honeymoon," an Educational-Christie comedy.

"The Shreik of Araby"

Mack Sennett Production—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Charles Larkin)

CAN you imagine Ben Turpin as a sheik? The mere announcement that Ben is appearing in the role made famous by Valentino should bring fun lovers to your box office. One thing is sure, most folks will get a lot of laughs out of this burlesque of the son of the desert.

Ben is a bill poster. The ballyhoo used by a theatre "goes dead" on the job and is fired. Ben is given the job, because the manager thinks that folks will get so sick of looking at his face that they will just naturally want to get inside to see the show. Then the story unfolds.

Ben finds himself aboard ship. He gets in a fight with a "native" fortune teller and is cast into the sea with a canoe and paddle as his only means of conveyance. He finally lands in the Sahara desert on an ostrich nest. This bird gets sore and gives Ben a swift ride over the hot sands. He is captured by a gang of bandits and taken before the powers that be, charged with annoying the royal ostrich. He is about to be decapitated when he is saved by the timely arrival of the Sheik himself. The Sheik is the guy who was fired off the ballyhoo job in America. The Sheik puts Ben on his throne while he goes for a vacation in Bagdad. Then ensues in broad farce the story of the Sheik and his romance with an American girl.

Ben, as a lover, is all to the mustard. Of course, there are some beautiful Sennett girls in the cast and also Charles Stevenson who will be remembered for his work as the bully in "Grandma's Boy." The action soon becomes fast and furious and there is a lot of laughs as Sheik Ben dashes to the rescue of his bride. Then he wakes up. A cop is tapping him on the shoulder with his club. Ben has been dreaming. He moves down the street astride a horse with his sheik costume and advertising sign held aloft. Kathryn McQuire is the girl. She is attractive and wears some striking costumes. The picture offers opportunity for some effective music accompaniment.

The Cast

A Bill Poster	Ben Turpin
The Girl	Kathryn McGuire
Presto	George Cooper
Luke Hassen	Charles Stevenson

Directed by F. Richard Jones. Allen McNeil, film editor. Photographed by Homer Scott and Bob Walters.

The Story—A burlesque on "The Sheik," following the story fairly closely in an amusing manner.

Classification—Pure farce comedy with fun as its only purpose.

Production Highlights—Ben Turpin as the Sheik. His rides on ostriches, camels and Arabian steeds. His strong arm wooing of the American girl.

Exploitation Angles—The title of this one is good for playing up in black face type. The title has been on everyone's tongue for many moons. Advertise it as a burlesque on the Valentino hit. Put a ballyhoo on the street dressed as a sheik carrying suitable advertising.

Drawing Power—Good for a program house.

"Lights of New York"

Fox—Six Reels

THERE are two distinct stories in this picture, each taking up three reels. The first deals with the adoption of an infant into a pawnbroker's family, the growing up of the boy and his association with companions who lead him into evil ways. The tale ends with the robbery of his father's safe and the shooting of his foster parents—but it's all a dream. Through this dream the youth sees the light and the family troubles end.

The next episode takes us into the home of a son of a wealthy family. He is celebrating his bachelor dinner, but there are 13 guests at the table. Being superstitious he decides to invite in the first man who passes in the street. A human derelict comes along, is invited in and persuaded to tell his life story. This tale is then unfolded on the screen. The man tells of the time when he, too, was celebrating his bachelor dinner, in the midst of which he received a note informing him that his sweetheart had eloped with another man. This shock started him plunging in Wall street. He lost a fortune and soon became a bit of driftwood in the human maelstrom of Gotham. His sweetheart prospered. But to give a happy ending, the boys at the club, who were being told of this tale, were informed that the day's papers announced the wedding of the sweetheart of other days and the human derelict. The episode mentioned, a subtitle then explains it having taken place two years previous. You are led to believe that the derelict prospered or started up in some way. It's far-fetched and unconvincing.

The production has been staged in the exact locale of the story. There are some fine views of New York, some being shot from an airplane. The photography by George Lane is attractive and very artistic in the night shots. Charles J. Brabin has well directed the material at hand.

There is just one thing that should be changed and that is the title. It should be "Shadows of New York." There is no gay life shown. Marc MacDermott and Estelle Taylor appear in the principal roles, but the former does most of the work. Frank Currier is good in the first episode. The rest of the cast is adequate.

The Cast

(First Episode)

Robert Reid	Clarence Nordstrom
Mrs. Reid	Marguerite Seddon
Daniel Reid	Frank Currier
Mary Miggs	Florence Short
Jim Slade	Charles Gerard

(Second Episode)

Charles Redding	Marc MacDermott
Mrs. George Burton	Estelle Taylor

Directed by Charles J. Brabin. Photographed by George Lane

The Story—Deals with two episodes of New York life. The first shows the rise of an East Side youth, after a dream has pictured to him the evil of his ways. The second story tells of the downfall of a financier when his bride-to-be jilts him as he is holding his bachelor dinner. He tells his life story at another bachelor dinner to which he is invited from the street, when the host finds there are 13 guests at the table.

Classification—Semi-melodramatic story of two chapters from the pages of alleged Gotham life.

Production Highlights—The work of Marc MacDermott in the second episode. The excellent photography, especially some of the night shots. The attractive interiors.

Exploitation Angles—A sky line of New York built up and painted on beaver board through which lights can shine in windows, etc., might be used as a good background for various store window displays. These articles direct from New York could be slogan for style tieup in such a window setting. The title suggests many stunts.

Drawing Power—Good for any downtown program theatre.

Scene from the Fox Sunshine two reel comedy, "The Four Flusher."

"Gun-Shy"

Phil Goldstone—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS Franklyn Farnum feature may be catalogued as something different from the general run of offerings which have presented the star. In the first place it is treated from a humorous angle and does not bank so heavily upon the conventional western ingredients. One may call it a fair-to-middlin' picture in so far as entertainment values are concerned. Farnum does not rely upon the customary heroics here.

"Gun-Shy" is not a story of action so much as it is a story of the governing processes of the mind. The protagonist is a physical coward. Hence the title. We see a timid character who is afraid of his own shadow. He is an Easterner who bobs up in the deserted town of Los Palos. Since he is mistaken for the U. S. marshal it is up to him to stop the raids of the lawless gang operating in the vicinity. The hero has his work cut out for him, and one may appreciate the predicament in which he finds himself when confronted by the outlaws. The girl, who must be introduced for romantic purposes, inspires him to overcome his cowardice. Suffice to say that he discovers his courage, aids in capturing the outlaws, and carries on the love interest.

"Gun-Shy" does not offer much suspense, consequently there isn't a great deal of action. The comedy element, however, is dominant throughout. The making over of a coward has been used several times on the screen, but it hasn't been done so often as to become shopworn. As the central idea of a western it takes the picture away from the conventional, even though the incident is of a familiar brand. The usual exteriors are shown; these are adequate enough. The offering, however, might have been edited in a better manner. There are times when the continuity becomes slightly uneven.

The Cast

James Brown	Franklyn Farnum
Betty Benson	Florence Gilbeert
Pop Benson	Andrew Waldron
Buck Brady	Robert Kortman
The Undertaker	George Marion
Bill Williams	William Dyer

Directed by Alvin J. Neitz.

The Story—Easterner comes to western town. He is a tenderfoot, mistaken for a U. S. marshal. The young man is extremely timid, so much so, that he is afraid of his own shadow. He falls in love with sheriff's daughter, who returns his affection. She inspires him to overcome his cowardice. The result is he aids the real marshal in capturing the outlaws.

Classification—Western melodrama with a comedy twist.

Production Highlights—The comedy values which keep this picture from the regulation pattern. The good exteriors. The climax. The competent work of cast.

Exploitation Angles—This picture presents a good ballyhoo title which might be exploited in various ways. Also play up that it is different from the usual type of western. Play up theme.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class downtown houses. Also suitable for small-town houses. An average program offering.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Babies Welcome"

(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)

THERE has been no equal to this comedy, for all-round appeal and general merit, in some time. Dorothy Devore, in the leading role, is at her best, showing quite some talent as a "stuntster," in accordance with the story, sharing honors only with a beautiful baby, who plays the most important part, unconsciously perfect. Women, who are not usually slap-stick comedy enthusiasts, will welcome this one, because it is above the usual variety, and may be more accurately described as farce. Besides, it shows the interior of a room where an annual Baby Show is being held, the prize $500 for the most unusual baby.

Dorothy Devore, a prospective bride, loses the money her fiance hands her in an open envelope, with which to go to the jeweler's and call for her engagement ring. Realizing her predicament when she hands the clerk the envelope and is told it is empty, she rushes out to try and find the taxi-cab in which she lost it. She jumps from one into another, throwing out the cushions, but fails to find the right one. She then appeals to her father for a loan, and is refused. Just outside the residence, however, the janitor's baby reposes in a perambulator. Dorothy borrows the baby and enters the little stranger in the baby contest, just in time to win $500. Meantime, the parents discover the absence of their child and newspaper men and detectives make life miserable for Dorothy, who tries to return the baby unseen. It so happens she finally sees the taxi in which she lost the money, and recovers it in time to adjust everything.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Message of Emile Coue"

(Educational—Two Reels)

IF offered as an "added attraction," or billed as a "special," with proper exploitation, this two-reeler is as near "sure-fire" as subjects of this length usually get. It has triple drawing power in that it will bring those who have read and adopted Coue methods of applying auto-suggestion, those who come as open adversaries, but want to get a better look at the French eminent than newspaper cuts supply, and also those who are distinterested as regards his teachings but consumed with curiosity.

Do not expect story value, nor hope to present the teacher as an actor. The subject is simply parts of his lecture, illustrated by motion picture scenes, beginning with presenting the speaker to an audience, then flashing a spoken title, followed by an illustration bearing out his statement. One depicts how auto-suggestion applied to stammering relieves the impediment of speech; another indicates what a sleep walker will do, illustrating how the unconscious mind acts, others show how auto-suggestion works in cases of burns, falls and accidents.

The direction is none too good. More convincing examples might have been employed, but that does not say they would have been any more entertaining. Taken for exactly what it is worth, a motion picture version of E. Coue's lecture advocating the use of auto-suggestion for the improvement of various conditions . . . a current, much talked of process, an exhibitor is almost insured against disappointing any of the three classes of patrons mentioned above, who will surely make box office receipts "better and better," while the picture remains.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Oh, Sister"

(Educational—One Reel)

NOT above the average and offering nothing new or novel in the way of slap-stick variety of entertainment. It concerns two sisters, who work in a boarding house, each in love with the star boarder and hoping he will find it out.

The star boarder (Jimmy Adams) is unaware how closely he treads upon danger of becoming a benedict. He only believes his charms responsible for his popularity as a food consumer.

One of the sisters (Virginia Vance) is pretty and bright. The other is just the opposite. The latter, of course, supplies some of the comedy, while a great deal of footage is wasted in attempts to get laughs upon the worn table vulgarities, which crowd the reel into the ordinary class.

The boarding house "Sheik" sees the less attractive sister take her life savings out of its hiding place. He does not know how much the bag contains, but immediately confesses to a wild affection for the owner. He suggests they elope, but when she is convinced that the man only wanted her money, and is saved by the star boarder from being robbed, she unselfishly offers the money ($37.50) to her pretty sister, suggests a wedding and that she shall come to live with the happy pair.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Before the Public"

(Pollard-Pathe—Two Reels)

SNUB POLLARD, as an unpopular entertainer, sings his way to eggs and cabbages in a small town motion picture theatre. The populace decide to give him a trip out of town by staging a popularity contest and fixing it for Snub to win. It means a trip to Hollywood, where Snub finds employment as a motion picture actor, and becomes a star of western melodrama. Eventually, he comes back home to make a personal appearance at the house where he was once only a vocal artist, sits out in front with the girl he left behind and makes a killing in general.

While the idea has been used before in several distinct instances, yet there is sufficient comedy in this to make it above the average, with Pollard as funny as he usually gets. After seeing Snub ride in the pictures, he is voted to ride "Nito" a wild horse at the horse show, which he is obliged to do against his misgivings, that leads to the confession that for the fast riding in pictures he always used a "double."—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Four Orphans"

(C. C. Burr-W. W. Hodkinson—Two Reels)

WHEN a new comedy is founded upon very old situations and given no semblance of novelty, it cannot be expected to be any different from many slapstick comedies that have gone before. It is one of those tales about a couple without children. The wife receives a letter from an uncle whom she has never seen, who states that he will arrive for a visit and hopes to find a number of "kids" to leave his money to. Follows the usual procedure of providing a temporary family. The young husband (Raymond McKee), has no luck in trying to abduct babies from perambulators on the street, while the young wife (Mary Anderson), fares better by borrowing a family of four youngsters from an orphanage.

Meantime, an ex-actor who has been arrested for something indefinite, is thrown out of court, wanders near the station where Uncle arrives, happens to pick up Uncle's bags, is picked up by the expectant couple and taken to their home. His remark that he is glad there are no children starts complications.

In the end, the real uncle invades the premises and proves his identity. Then the nephew is sorry he sent the borrowed children back so soon to the orphanage. But the wife whispers something that makes all three smile simultaneously. And that is the end of a two reel comedy.

The fault is with the lack of story, not with the cast. The three principals are decidedly clever and do as well under the circumstances as any others could do. In a few scenes Charles Murray gets over some comedy in spite of the direction, Mary Anderson looks pretty and Raymond McKee is not to blame.

Do not depend upon this two reeler getting any more laughs than the principals upon their individual merits get for themselves, or any more entertainment than the ordinary slap-stick variety is bound to get.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Big Show"

(Our Gang-Pathe—Two Reels)

WHERE is the person, grown-up or not, who, in his secret self does not enjoy the circus? In "The Big Show" there are two circus entertainments, the first a real one, from which the children without funds are barred. They get into a lot of comical trouble trying to peep through knot-holes in the high-board fence. The second circus is one the children put on, using decorated domestic animals and fowl to represent the wild specimens they caught glimpses of when the real circus played their town.

It is easy to imagine what happens with Sunshine Sammy, little Farina, Mickey Daniels and the rest contributing special "acts" and at the same time keeping tab on the box office receipts.

Every child will find delight in this amusing two reeler, which may serve, also, as a panacea for the grouch, the tired business man and busy housewife. There are laughs for every member of a family, from baby to grandpa, laughs that are not forced by over-done, unnatural things, but sparkling, fast and merry comedy. "The Big Show" is the kind of two-reeler that may safely be advertised as an "added attraction."—LILLIAN GALE.

"Days Afield With Rod and Gun"

THESE will be particularly entertaining to men, especially those who hunt or long for the privilege of getting away from town and city duties to where the gun, the fishnig pole and hunting dogs are useful as well as ornamental.

The first is titled "The Goose," and shows how the flocks of wild geese that fly over territory touching upon the lower Mississippi, are tricked into flying over places where the hunters hide, with shot prepared to bring down as many of the unfortunate birds as possible. Dummy birds are placed in the swamps to attract the flocks and decoy them into flying low.

The second, "The Quail" shows "Bob White's" haunts in the Sedge and Pine Woods of the Mississippi and the proceedings the hunters follow in order to bring home as many quail as they can "bring down."

The third, "Salmon Fishing" brings to view the beauties of the Restigouche River in New Brunswick, Can., and shows how salmon are caught by sportsmen who make this kind of outing a lark.

All of these have good backgrounds, are well put together and make pleasing entertainment, since they are not too long and touch only the the high-spots of the three different sports.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Waggin' Tale"

(Carter De Haven-F. B. O.—Two Reels)

THE Carter de Havens, who have been giving the screen a series of highly amusing comedies, are still maintaining their standard. "The Waggin' Tale" is ingenious enough and sufficiently funny to be classed as one of their best efforts. It presents a tricky little story, the usual dig at matrimony, and because it skirts the boundary line of marital misunderstanding without relying upon shopworn slapstick tricks, it is certain to be put down as a comedy of refinement.

What of the title? It has to do with a dog—or rather two dogs. The happy, yet quarrelsome couple own a little Boston bull. Hubby does not register elation over wifey's pet. In fact his indifference precipitates one of those meal time spats. Next door lives a couple who own a dog of the same breed and size. In fact they are identical. Carter sends a note home by the dog and it falls into the hands of the husband next door. The latter believes it intended for his wife. Peace is declared when the two couples and the dogs are assembled. The brindle pup shows rare intelligence and deserves a place in all the de Haven comedies.—LAURENCE REID.

"Broke"

(Educational—One Reel)

RATHER fast comedy describing the troubles of a young man out of luck, portrayed by Jimmie Adams, who, in the vernacular of his occupation is "broke."

To satisfy his curiosity as to how well dressed men in uniform ride on the back of patrol wagons, without paying fare, he gazes within the wagon and lingers a minute too long, since the police have raided a crap game, and roughly push the players into the patrol, bumping Adams in first. His attempts to explain do not register, so he is placed in the "lock-up."

Following his escape, he only finds himself back in jail again, and the picture is a sort of continuation of getting in and getting out of trouble, without getting any money or food. Commands some hearty laughs and is not below the average.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Ex-Kaiser in Exile"

(W. W. Hodkinson—Two Reels)

THOSE who have wondered what kind of a place the ex-Kaiser was supplied in which to spend his life-exile, may have this query gratified by seeing the two reels which not only show the grounds, castle and surrounding country, but actually brings the ex-Kaiser into camera focus, the autocrat unaware of being photographed.

Consequently, the views showing Wilhelm are not varied. They show him walking toward and from the camera, and about the only semblance of his former self is his haughty carriage. His beard is long and his hair very grey. He is certainly fortunate in having been assigned so beautiful a place to spend his seclusion and judging from what the camera caught, he is standing it very well.

It is safe to promise views of the ex-Kaiser, when using this subject, but not to indicate that he is seen very close up or in varied poses. The main interest is in the place, the location in Holland and the town of Doorn.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Artist"

(Fox—Two Reels)

NOVELTY slap-stick, deviating considerably from that usually accompanying a comedian on the order of Clyde Cook. It gets away from the common variety, keeps an even tempo of humor and remains on the safe side of propriety when angling for laughs.

Clyde Cook in the role of a rich man's son is imbued with an affection for liquid refreshments, outbalancing either fear or regard for an irate father. After going through many amusing trials and laughable tribulations, endeavoring to reach home, he arrives only to be "ousted" by his father, who asks for Clyde's resignation as a son. This action makes up about the first half.

The second lapses to some time later, when the son is living in Paris in the Latin quarter, eking out an existence as sort of "general man" to a so-called artist. The things Clyde and his cat innocently do to paintings, statuary, etc., provoke laughs in rapid succession. One particularly funny sequence is in a questionable French rendezvous, where Clyde attempts to become a hero, gets in a peck of trouble, but finally is understood by the girl he endeavors to protect, and her grateful father. Good direction, adequate supporting cast. A good comedy.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Do Your Stuff"

(Parrott-Pathe—One Reel)

BACK in Chinatown. The action takes place in the Chinese quarter of San Francisco. After their show, a theatrical company are bent upon a frolic, decide to "do Chinatown," but are told by their leading juvenile that there is nothing in Chinatown but "Punk Chinese and Chinese Punk." However, they go. The company decide to change the gentleman's mind and plan to have his girl abducted suddenly, make up as Chinese and give him a good scare and make "something doing." That is about all it amounts to, trick stairways, trap doors and partitions, and finally the company without their make-ups, letting the hero in on the joke. Action is lively, comedy average, but settings, photography and direction of the improved variety. Both Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston do good work in their respective roles. This comedy would fit in nicely just ahead of a feature with a plot embracing Chinese characters or locations, and serve as a farce.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Double Cinched"

(Range Rider Series-Pathe—Two Reels)

THE story supplied for this modern western gets away from the hackneyed situations employing cow-boys, hard riding, brawls, etc. Not that these do not figure at all, for "Double Cinched" includes one of the best "fights" of the series. However, it concerns a wedding on Flying Ranch, when Lem Burke, (Leo Maloney) prepares to wed Polly Gilmore, (daughter of a neighbor) and the boys are gathered at the ranch to be among those present at the celebration.

While on his way to officiate as clergyman, the Rev. Dr. Thorne is held up and forced to change clothes with an escaped convict (Bud Osborne) who takes the minister's horse and when overtaken by the prospective groom, explains that he has been recently appointed as circuit rider. He goes through with the ceremony, and would have escaped, except that he saw a purse given the bride, a present from the friends gathered. His greed for the money causes him to follow the bride and groom to their home, where the real minister has taken cover. A posse of officers arrive just in time to catch their man, and the genuine minister performs the ceremony, which explains the title "double cinched."

There is a noticeable human interest strain, good action and the usual scenic value that goes with these stories with western backgrounds.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Hold Tight"

(White-Educational—Two Reels)

SLAP-STICK comedy of the low variety, which might be described as another of those "teeth pulling" affairs, since most of the happenings center upon the activities of a dentist, whose rival, an eye specialist, holds forth in an office in the same building.

The action gets under way when the girl in question attempts to receive a note from "Hector," who attaches the message to a brick and swings it below for her to catch.

Such things as happen to the patients who visit the specialists go to make up the rest. There are sequences with the over-done teeth pulling incidents and nauseating results. If there are people who are amused by these indelicate things, is it necessary to cater to such, by showing more of it on the screen?

One sequence describes a negro crap shooter's dream, while under effects of "gas" administered by the dentist. There needs be a new word coined to indicate when what is scheduled as a "comedy" is going to be something far from funny and which borders upon being offensive. Surely there cannot be many people this sort of thing will amuse.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Little Red Robin Hood"

(Jo-Rok-State Rights—Two Reels)

Joe Rock, cast as a modest and retiring young man, cannot arouse enough confidence in himself to challenge his fat rival in love. It would seem to Joe a great deal more safe to read about men who fought for their ladies, and, upon looking for encouragement, finds the tale of "Robin Hood" soothing. So much so that he falls asleep and dreams he is the famous bandit, which introduces some burlesque upon the current feature, starring Douglas Fairbanks, in Robin Hood. Rock absorbs the "adventure" fever, and teaches his rival who's who and why. Not a comedy that can come in for a great deal of praise, but one that will have no tendency to displease those who like slap-stick in the guise of travesty.—LILLIAN GALE.

When they saw "Fruits of Faith" they prophesied it would steal the show from any but the strongest feature. It did!

Will Rogers

in

Fruits of Faith

Three parts

The prophesy

"'Fruits of Faith' is so strong that unless the feature to follow is 'sure fire' the short subject is bound to be the best part of the program. It is a clever blend of comedy and drama, ably directed, artistically photographed, splendidly played and well assembled.... There is something supremely genuine and appealing about this little comedy, with sufficient pathos to make it a 'comedy-drama,' and it is one of the best of its kind."—Motion Picture News.

The fulfillment

1. From the James Theatre, Columbus O. "Last week we played the Will Rogers' comedy, 'Fruits of Faith.' We consider it one of the most amusing, most entertaining and at the same time one of the cleanest comedies we have ever played in the James Theatre. The newspaper reviews and a great many of our patrons enjoyed the comedy far better than our feature and our feature had as its star one of the most popular screen favorites. More power to Will Rogers. We hope he will make many more comedies of the same high quality. I assure you we will always have room for them in our theatres."

2. "The program at the Rialto is dominated by a three reel comedy in which Will Rogers does the best acting of his screen career....This picture, 'Fruits of Faith' is a little masterpiece, so skillfully does it blend humor and pathos. A film at which every one will laugh, weep over and remember....Compared to the sincerity of this short subject the feature picture seems a manufactured thing."—N. Y. Telegraph.

3. "Although '————,' with ————, is the feature picture, 'Fruits of Faith' at the Rialto is better. Will Rogers scores in this with a mingling of pathos and humor."—N. Y. Evening Mail.

4. The New York Times, perhaps the most conservative of critics, devoted two thirds of a column to a review of 'Fruits of Faith' at the Rialto, and a short paragraph to the feature. It said, in part, "'The ————' cannot arouse the echo of smiles, laughter and applause called forth by 'Fruits of Faith.' It is the real feature of the bill. There is more genuine entertainment in any hundred feet of it than in all the celluloid mile of agony and adventure that prolongs the heavy hour of the photoplay."

The New York correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor devoted nearly a column to the review of this little feature, "Fruits of Faith," and a short paragraph to the feature at the Rialto. This paper is one of the most famous in the country. It speaks of the Rogers picture as a model.

What more proof do you want that when you book "Fruits of Faith" you can forget the feature for that show?

Trade Items from Kansas City and Vicinity

INSTEAD of "Fire Prevention Week," featured in Joplin, Mo., last week in conjunction with the showing of the F.B.O. production, "The Third Alarm," it might properly have been called "Herbert Weil Week." Who is Herbert Weil? The snappiest specimen of exploitation energy that has been turned loose in Kansas City for some time. The fact that a "Fire Prevention Week" was declared by the mayor, the trucks bearing the banner of the picture as they made a practice run through the city, and life saving demonstrations given on downtown street corners, is enough to lend idea as to the success of the event in Joplin. But it was in Kansas City that "Little Herbert" (5 ft. 4 in.) broke the barriers of convention. Under the direction of Alex Henderson, fire chief, a regular run was made to the Pantages theatre at noon Saturday, where a woman was "rescued" from the theatre tower by firemen, while thousands of curious and excited spectators thronged the streets below. More than 200 firemen and their wives were guests at the first showing of the picture.

At the request of the motion picture committee of the Parent-Teacher Association of Kansas City, Lee Balsly, exploitation man for Universal's Kansas City branch, addressed that group last Thursday on the subject, "Program Building and Picture Selection."

"If I were an exhibitor in a community where patrons insisted upon me running pictures of their selection I would offer them an occasional night to run the show as they wished or invite them to join in a cooperative plan," Mr. Balsly told the committee.

W. L. Rubert, former assistant manager of the Kansas City Universal branch, has returned from the Pacific coast, while James Foland, former Universal city salesman, now is covering the city for Richards and Flynn. W. P. Bernfield, who operates the Memorial Hall theatre in Wathena, Kans., has turned film salesman and is selling Educational subjects. Another change in the personnel of Kansas City exchanges is that of A. H. McLaughlin, formerly manager of the Select branch, who now is city salesman for the F.B.O. exchange.

C. R. Wilson, a member of the board of directors of the M.P.T.O. Missouri organization who is acting as business manager temporarily, and Charles Sears, president, have completed plans whereby Mr. Wilson will start on a tour of the state this week in effort to double the membership of the M.P.T.O.M. Upon Mr. Wilson's return to Kansas City, which will be about two months, a business manager will be employed to assume charge of the new headquarters at Eighteenth street and Baltimore avenue.

Mrs. John T. Harding and Mrs. Kimbrough Stone, representing the Women's City Club of Kansas City, were guests last Friday night at the club's fifth "Approval Night" at the Isis theatre. The production, "When Knighthood was in Flower," was greatly approved.

These productions have been approved and recommended by the Parent-Teacher Association:

"Heroes of the Street," "Mighty Lak' a Rose," "Gimmie," "Pest of the Storm Country," "Kid Reporter," "The Fire Brand," and "Wedding Bells."

Members of each of the sixty-five Parent-Teacher circles of Kansas City are selling tickets for the picture, "Heroes of the Street," showing at the Liberty theatre this week. The circles will share in the revenue derived from the sales, women being placed at tables in the leading hotels to dispose of the tickets.

J. P. Roebuck & Son of the unpretentious town of Cox, Mo., have an ideal method of bolstering up their merchandise business with the aid of motion pictures. Mr. Roebuck and his son, who operate a general store, a blacksmith and repair shop, as well as feed the grist mill, have established a motion picture house for the mere purpose of "keeping the trade at home." A 10-cent admission is charged, which means scarcely more than an even break in the theatre end of the plan, but an average of $200 worth of merchandise is sold every Saturday night, Mr. Roebuck says.

Work on a new $100,000 theatre in Kansas City, Kas., to be built by Buford Theatre Company, is expected to start about May 1. The Art theatre, Kansas City, Kas., which has been operated by M. Van Praag, former president of the M.P.T.O. Kansas, has been taken over by the Grubel circuit, which operates the Electric theatre of that city. Mr. Van Praag still will remain in the film business, he says, although his plans yet are indefinite.

G. L. Rugg of the Eureka theatre, Weston, Mo., is heralding the fact that he intends to stage an old fiddlers' contest as a prologue for "Human Hearts." Might not be a bad idea at that.

Dick Osborne, said to have numerous aliases, was arrested in Kansas City Tuesday in connection with the $11,000 robbery of the Pantages theatre, November 13. Finger prints taken from the safe from which the money was removed correspond to those of Osborne, the police say.

Personal and Photoplay News from Butte

FLOYD M. BROCKELL, general manager distribution of Associated First National Pictures, arrived in Butte on Tuesday of last week to visit the local office of his organization. Mr. Brockell maintains his headquarters in New York City and is on a tour of inspection of all First National Western offices, including in his itinerary Butte, Salt Lake, Denver, Portland, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

In commenting on National business conditions as reflected in the motion picture industry Manager Brockell is profoundly optimistic. He states "great strides have been made towards the betterment of the motion picture entertainment." This is Mr. Brockell's first visit to Montana and he was very enthusiastic over the future of the movie picture business in the state. Mr. Brockell left Butte on Wednesday, the 14th.

While here Charles Koerner, manager of the Butte office of the First National, entertained at a dinner in honor of Mr. Brockell, including in his guest list a number of the city exhibitors.

The Ansonia has been making a strong feature of the New Leather Pushers, and Manager Merle M. Davis reports a general verdict that the new series is even better than the first.

Harold McLaren has arrived from Seattle to take charge of Universal's publicity work in the Montana territory. He went to Billings to assist the management of the Regent theatre with special exploitation for "The Flirt."

W. S. Wessling, of the New York Pathe office, was in the city the first of the week. Mr. Wessling is manager of the Western division of the Pathe offices and makes Montana a visit every once in a while.

B. L. Rose, of the Arrow S. R. registered at the Grand Hotel this week. He is in the city in behalf of his company.

George J. Ekre, of Seattle, Fox exchange, spent a few days in Butte this week, registering at the Grand.

C. C. Pratt, manager of the Butte American theatre, has been taken to one of the local hospitals of the city and is reported to be in a serious condition. During his illness W. J. Sullivan, of the Rialto, is kept busy managing both theatres. Both houses are doing remarkably good business.

"Mighty Lak' a Rose," at the Rialto, has been enjoying a tremendous run, so the management held it over for an extra day and night. In spite of the 22 degrees below zero theatre fans were anxious to be at the theatres.

"The Eternal Flame," at the American, has been having a record run also.

The People's theatre is offering "Tess of the Storm Country" at a sliding scale of rates on a two-weeks' run. Manager Bailey is experiencing good results and he boasts of being the only theatre man in the city who, through his sliding scale of admission prices, "With a price for every pocketbook," has held such long runs on pictures.

Boston Exchange and New England Brevities

RUSSIA Through the Shadows" a seven reel picture, characterized by newspapers as Communist propaganda, has been running into hot water in New England. Mayor Leonard of Springfield, Mass., banned the film in that city at the request of Federal authorities. The picture was shown in Boston to a crowded house at Symphony Hall. Mayor Curley did not ban it, though it is not known whether he was asked to do so. According to a Boston paper it was shown under the auspices of "The Friends of Soviet Russia," though in Springfield its sponsors were not so bald, and called themselves the "Joint Conference for Famine Relief. Hisses and jeers were equally as strong as cheers and applause at the Boston showing, and when Miss Marion Sproul tried to collect for the starving in an intermission, urging $100 contributions, a man in the audience rose and protested. No one seemed to know who was responsible for the film, but Boston did not take kindly to it.

A 12-year old boy was arrested on the charge of attempting to set fire to the Star Theatre in Clinton, Mass., last Wednesday. Because of his youth his name has been withheld by the police, who say, however, that he will be arraigned in the juvenile court. He was in the building late at night and the alleged attempt was made in the ticket booth but burned itself out with but little harm due to the absence of drafts.

Small boys were also responsible for a fire scare and near panic in the Empire Theatre, Salem, Mass., Wednesday. They had got into a closed balcony, and when they thought themselves discovered started to run out. The noise of the running frightened the audience, and some one shouted "Fire." Serious trouble was averted when the panicky audience was quieted by the presence of mind of Kalmar Matus, an actor, who stepped on the stage in his makeup and calmed the audience.

The largest attendance of the season was recorded last Monday at Fay's Theatre, Providence, R. I., when Ruth Clifford, the only movie actress of any prominence hailing from that state appeared in her latest picture, "My Dad," with Johnny Walker, a film laid in the great Northwest.

Rotarians of New Bedford saw themselves in their own movie titled "All's Not so Lovely" last Saturday at the Olympia of that city when they entertained Louise Lovely. Miss Lovely took the only female part in the drama, the other parts being taken by club members. It followed a dinner, and was a howling success, some of the howling being over the acting.

Speaking of Louise, she is to grace the boards of historic Boston Theatre this week in her sketch, "A Day at the Studio." She is also ostensibly looking for screen actor and actress material and will hold the conventional reception each morning.

Ushers of B. F. Keith's Theatre in Lowell, Mass., held their ninth annual dancing party last week in the Memorial Auditorium in that city. The hall was crowded. Raymond McCoy was general manager and Walter J. Kosik was treasurer.

The American Legion Post on Nantucket Island, Mass., wanted to hold Sunday night motion picture shows, but opposition grew stronger and stronger and finally the selectmen got the petition withdrawn.

The Bowdoin Square Theatre in Boston steps up to the ranks of first run houses the coming week when "The Secrets of Paris," filmed from the famed novel of Eugene Sue, will be shown. The other picture on the bill for the week is Goldwyn's "Broken Chains."

The Rev. Frank A. Brown, pastor of the Anderson (Mass.) Methodist Church has attained his ambition to introduce motion pictures in his services and the first picture shown will be "Pilgrim's Progress." State inspectors have pronounced the plant all right and the operator is Ralph Norton of Millbury.

Marion Davies' broadcasting stunt, when she told "How to Make Up for the Movies," from station WEAF, New York, was picked up all over New England and took big.

Warren A. Newcombe, genius of "The Enchanted City," one of Educational's short subjects, as a Boston man and a member of the Boston Guild of Artists. Living figures appear only in the opening and closing scenes of the picture.

"The Christian" moves into the Park as "Robin Hood" moves out, and is being billed all over the surrounding country. Charles W. Arthur L. Skinner,

Outside of all that look over all this that he has had a hand in of late. He replaces Charles Winston, who had to give up his work because of poor health. Gus Kornheiser has been sent from the Detroit exchange to the local office and is selling Eastern Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Simon Sampson is another, recently with First National, but now at the Goldwyn Boston office. He sells Vermont and New Hampshire.

As if that were not enough, under Manager Perry's paternal oversight, all the local Goldwynites trapsed out to the Chateau several days ago and held a dance. It was a regular success, socially and financially, and what do you think they did with all the Long Green they made. All the Goldwynites, big and little, went to the American House Monday night and blew it all on a regular banquet, with Manager Perry, of course, presiding.

Percy M. Wells.

PERCY W. WILLS, president of the North Carolina M. P. T. O., has been advised by one of his "scouts" that a bill has been written for introduction at the present session of the General Assembly which would make it unlawful for any child under 16 years of age to attend a motion picture or other theatre after 8 P. M. unless accompanied by a parent or guardian. The bill would make it a misdemeanor either for a theatre owner to admit one or for a parent or anyone to furnish a child with money to pay their admission to such places at night. President Wells has taken the matter up with the state executive committee and is prepared to fight the law to a finish.

"While the application of this law would not seriously affect the larger cities like Wilmington, it would play havoc in the small villages which only run at night," declared President Wells. "Furthermore, it opens up the way to the legislators to legislate us out of business, if we allow them to put over such a bill to start with."

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from Buffalo

BUFFALO'S Film Row was shocked throughout this week through the untimely death of one of the most popular of its members—A. M. Moses, recently manager of the American Releasing Corporation Exchange on the second floor of the Paramount Building, who, attacked with pleurisy, developing into pneumonia, passed away after little more than a week's illness. "Archie," as he was affectionally known by exchange men and exhibitors, came to Buffalo a half dozen years ago as a salesman and then manager of the local Select exchange. Then he took over the management of the Robertson-Cole office, from which position he went to Universal as special representative, graduating from this connection to the American Releasing managership, from which he resigned only a few weeks before his death, at the time of which he was being talked of as the new manager of the W.-B. office. "Archie" came to Buffalo from Syracuse where at one time he was assistant manager. He had an unusually large circle of friends in the film business, especially in the exhibitor end of the industry. Anyone who gripped Archie Moses by the hand never forgot it. It was a welcome that went straight to the heart. Managers, salesmen and office workers of the various exchanges contributed to a fund for a large floral piece. The body was taken to Scranton for burial. The passing of Mr. Moses will be mourned throughout the state. No one ever had a complaint to make about "Arch" because he had a reputation for square dealing. So close were the bonds of friendship with several of the local managers that a few broke down and wept at the news of his death.

Arthur L. Skinner,

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, last week introduced "Plunder," the Pearl White serial, to his youthful patrons at the Saturday matinee. Ditto, that boat belonging to Harry Dixon. "Hub" Taylor's car laid down on him out in the wilds near Caledonia, N. Y., and "Hub" had to sleep all night on a sofa of ancient vintage in a nearby farm house. He came into town the next day looking like old Tut-Ankh-Amen himself.

Charles N. Johnston and his Fox "gang" had their "pitchers took" for insertion in the company's house organ. The print was so good that it will be sent all over the world to inspire with its beauty.

Warren McDonald, Bond Photoplays' Corporation salesman, went to Rochester this week to get acquainted with exhibitors in the Kodak town. Fred M. Zimmerman, sales manager, has been playing hide and seek with Harold P. Dygert for several weeks. Fred says he can never tag Harold who is head of the Associated Theatres' Corporation chain. He has followed him all over Western New York. Just as Fred makes a town in which Harold is located, Mr. Dygert is leaving. Fred says Harold must visit the houses in the chain in an airplane.

Izzy Cobe has resigned from Universal to accept a sales position with Merit. Izzy visited Genoa, N. Y., last week and signed up 20 productions for presentation in the Gem theatre, managed by D. E. Singer. He beat a gang of other salesmen to this fat contract. N. I. Filkins, manager of the Buffalo exchange, announces that I. Marcus, formerly with Associated Exhibitors, has joined the Albany sales staff of Merit.

It is reported that Buffalo interests have secured an option on the former Pease property in Batavia, N. Y., on which a new motion picture theatre will be erected in the spring. The Buffalo interests may be Mr. Houghton who owns the Little Hippodrome and Keith's theatre in lower Main street, Buffalo. Mr. Houghton has been showing pictures in the opera house in Batavia for several months with such success that he was recently quoted as contemplating a new house in the spring.

The Linden theatre, 943 Jefferson street, George E. Williams, manager, and Nelson T. Barrett, owner, was damaged to the extent of $700 by fire, which started in the basement when hot ashes were thrown on a pile of papers.

With the opening of the new Palace, in Jamestown, Peterson and Woods have changed the policy of the Mozart from vaudeville and pictures to straight pictures and have reduced the prices from 30 and 40 to 5 and 10.

Western New York exhibitors affiliated with M. P. T. O. A. held a meeting in the Palace theatre last week, presided over by Howard J. Smith, and went on record as being opposed to the uniform contract. The exhibitors in attendance claimed it favored the producers.

Herman E. Schultz, conductor of Shea's theatre orchestra, is now in Miami, Fla., where he is rapidly recovering from a recent breakdown following an attack of the "flu."

Shea's Hippodrome will not show "Robin Hood" before Easter week, according to an announcement by Vincent McFaul, managing director. "Bella Donna," has been set in for the week of April 15. A new stage setting will be installed in the Hippodrome this spring, Mr. Shea planning to do away with the present heavy draperies, which he believes deadens the tone of the new Wurlitzer organ, and instead install a hard metallic setting.

An epidemic of smallpox has closed the DuTell theatre in South Dayton, N. Y. The Rex in Geneseo, N. Y., is closed for repairs.

Manager George Hall, of the Capitol theatre, Buffalo, is back in town after an extensive hunting trip in Mississippi.

Betty Blythe is coming to the Lafayette Square in person the week of March 5, appearing in connection with the Merit production, "Darling of the Rich." The Lafayette Square next week celebrates its first anniversary, presenting "The Hottentot," as the film attraction. Bill Van Dyne, assistant manager, is expected to have a shave for the occasion.

Proposed Censorship Bill for Indiana Out of Committee

THE Steele censorship bill came out of committee in the Indiana Senate last week but has not come up for second reading. The committee reported amendments but did not recommend their adoption or the passage of the bill. The Senate merely accepted the non-committal report.

Should the measure pass the Senate it still has to be considered by the House, and there is but two weeks of the legislative session left.

Meanwhile all eyes are turned on the bill to prohibit commercialized sports on Memorial day, which has passed the Senate and is ready for final action in the House. The measure would prohibit the famous Indianapolis Speedway race, which would result in loss of thousands of dollars to local theatres because race patrons always spend a night or two in the city before or after the big event. When the bill was up for second reading in the House last week an attempt was made to vitiate it by amending it to prohibit theatres from operating or prohibit all amusements to which admission is charged, but these were defeated and the measure passed on second reading by a 2 to 1 majority.

A film ignited during showing at the Montgomery theatre, Cynthiana, Ind., Feb. 15, starting a fire which destroyed the theatre, the home of the owner, Al Montgomery, and the Methodist church, causing loss of $10,000. Montgomery carried no insurance.

SUCCESS in any business comes from wise management. Given a good product,—most of the "management" consists in Presentation and Sales.

The reason one man makes a great deal of money and another, with the same proposition, fails,—is usually management.

When you deal with the Keystone proposition, you have the benefit of the management of some of the cleverest sales promotion men in the business. The proposition is so complete that the plan has only to be worked to give big results.

We supply the plan; you do the work. Both sides profit.

Newspaper Contest For Modern Aesop's Fables

In connection with the widespread revival of interest in Aesop's Fables created by the vogue of Paul Terry's animated cartoon adaptations for the screen, the Sunday supplement of the Philadelphia Record, has been conducting a prize contest for the first, second and third best "Moral" to a modern fable printed weekly together with one of Aesop's, but teaching an opposite lesson.

The two fables, ancient and modern, are printed side by side, the latter lacking its concluding "Moral," which readers are invited to supply.

The Sunday Record contest started in the issue of Jan. 7th with Aesop's familiar "The Fable of the Frog and the Ox," with its moral: "Self Conceit often leads to self-destruction." The modern opposite idea concerned an awkward and timid boy with a brilliant mind who won success through acquiring faith in himself.

"Alaskan Honeymoon" Released March 5th

"An Alaskan Honeymoon," one of the most recent Fox Educational entertainments, to be released March 5th, is a reel describing the trip of a newly-married couple in the icebound Yukon country.

The trip starts aboard a steamer leaving Seward, southernmost port of Alaska; then comes the long ride to Fairbanks, on the only railroad owned by the United States.

There are small fertile spots inland where herds of reindeer graze. There are swift-running streams where sparkling salmon can be caught for a crackling good breakfast. If you go far enough north there is the Aurora Borealis, resplendent in unusual beauty. Another formation, caused by rays altering their length suddenly, is known as "Merry Dancers." If the far Northland impresses you as a forbidding frozen waste, you may understand why men return there again and again when you recall the lure of the Northern Lights.

Pathe Program for Mar. 4 Ready

Nine Releases, Including Subjects Starring White, Pollard & Maloney

With Pearl White in "Plunder" reaching the sixth episode, "Heights of Hazard," and both Snub Pollard and Leo Maloney seen in new two-reel comedies, Pathe's program of nine releases for March 4th is well balanced. The heroine of "Plunder," after an intense dramatic scene, finds herself in the power of her unscrupulous business rival. The mysterious "Mr. Jones," whom she is beginning to love, intervenes, attacking the villain, and in the fight both fall into an aeration reservoir. "Jones" breaks away. The heroine, seeing him being drawn toward a large outlet pipe, dives to his rescue, but is too late. As "Jones" is sucked into the pipe she hears him shout to her to find an Indian named Neewah. The villain overhears the message.

The new Snub Pollard two-reeler, called "Before the Public," transforms the smalltown "tenor" pest into a movie star in a wild cowboy picture called "Rescued," and, back in the home town, he condescends to make a "personal appearance."

In "Double Cinched," of the two-reel Range Rider Series, Leo Maloney presents a variation in the way of comedy action contained in a story as compact and exciting as any in the series. It shows a ranch wedding scene with an escaped convict officiating, he having made a forcible exchange of clothes with the timorous minister en route to the festivities.

"Do Your Stuff" is the one-reel comedy of this program, featuring Paul Parrott and Jobyna Ralston in a "planted" Chinatown series of grotesque comic horrors, full of sliding paritions, trick stairs and double-edged heathen swords.

The Aesop's Film Fable, called "The Spider and the Fly," shows Si Spider luring all sorts of flies into his "parlor," with extraordinary comic action and pointing the moral: "To the Victor Belong the Spoils."

Pathe News Nos. 20 and 21, Topics of the Day No. 9 and Pathe Review No. 9, are also released in this schedule.

Big Circuits Book Coue Subject

"The Message of Emile Coue" Reported to Have Heavy Bookings

THE Educational two-reel special, "The Message of Emile Coue," was given its first private showing Friday, Feb. 16, at the Criterion Theatre, New York. About two hundred persons, guests of the producers and distributors of the picture, and Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, attended. The picture has been booked at these two theatres for an indefinite run.

Mr. Elmore Leffingwell, M. Coue's personal representative, and who handled the Coue publicity, was introduced by Dr. Reisenfeld. Mr. Leffingwell then explained that the picture was not in fiction form, and stated that M. Coue would not have consented to have appeared before the camera, in that way.

"Fiction, romance, the devices of the novelist and playright have no part with truth, for the mechanism of the builder, clothed in the raiments of fiction or drama, preclude the conviction of the truth of his message of hope and cheer. The message being simple and vital is shown as such, with no deviation from Coue's own exposition of it."

It is reported that bookings continue to keep the Educational Exchanges busy. Practically all first runs are closed in the big exchange centers. In addition to those already announced, Educational reports bookings embracing the entire Saxe Circuit of Milwaukee; the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis; the Walnut at Cincinnati; the Kinema, Los Angeles, and the Empress in Oklahoma City.

These complete practically all of the first runs in all territories and second runs and lesser bookings are rapidly being assigned dates.

"Casey Jones, Jr.," and Coue Picture at Rivoli

The Educational-Mermaid Comedy, "Casey Jones, Jr.", has been booked at the Rivoli theatre for an indefinite run, to accompany the Educational Special, "The Message of Emile Coue."

The scenario is the joint work of Al Herman and Sig Neufeld, head of the scenario department of Century.

Bobbie Dunn, Popular Comedian, with Century

Bobby Dunn, a veteran of the screen, has been appearing in comedies since the early days of the industry. He is especially known for his work for Sennett, Fox, Ben Wilson and others. Recently he appeared in a special series under the Lyons banner, and just previous to this he and Slim Summerville were co-featured by Sennett.

Eugene de Rue who is directing Dunn in his first picture for Stern Brothers, also directed him in the Ben Wilson productions. The partnership will continue during the length of his Century contract.

Bobbie Dunn is now at work on "The Poor Boob," written by Eugene de Rue and himself. Zion Myers is assisting de Rue, in this first Century release of his.

"High Flyers," Hall-Room Boys, at Rialto

"High Flyers," one of the Hallroom Boys' Comedies, is booked into New York's Rialto Theatre for the week beginning Sunday, February 24th.

With almost all the comedians abandoning the making of two-reelers in favor of five-reel comedy specials, the Hallroom Boys' Comedies producers have continued to specialize in the making of two-reelers, believing that the need for good two-reel comedies was becoming greater and greater—and that it would be bound to result in the survival of the fittest.

"High Flyers" is one of the comedy thrillers—a type of comedy originated in the Hallroom Comedies series—featuring Sid Smith in his dare-devil stunts.

Young Actress Featured by Playgoers

A young actress, who is regarded as one of the prettiest girls on the screen, and who many persons believe is in the direct line for promotion to stardom, plays the leading woman's role in "A Clouded Name," Playgoers current release. She is Norma Shearer, who, with Gladden James and little Yvonne Logan, is featured in this five-part offering.

Miss Shearer will be remembered as Eugene O'Brien's leading lady in "Channing of the Northwest."

Six Fox Educationals for March

Release Schedule Embraces Single and Split Reel Entertainments

TWO more one-reel Fox Educational Entertainment features have been added to the previous list announced for release during March by the Fox Film Corporation. The new short length features are "Crystal Waters" and "Sentinels of the Sea." They will be released in a series of six with the following four pictures previously announced: "Wild Waters," "School Days in Japan," "An Alaskan Honeymoon" and "Algeria."

"Wild Waters" is a half reel showing the picturesque Iguazu Falls, located on the border line of Argentine, Brazil and Paraguay. Another half-reeler, "School Days in Japan," gives an insight into the educational methods used in modern Japanese schools.

"An Alaskan Honeymoon" gives a one-reel episode of the life of a newly-married couple who match the warmth of their love against the frozen fastnesses of the North.

"Algeria," where the natives do things in precisely the same way that they performed their daily tasks, one thousand years ago.

"Crystal Jewels" pictures in one reel the water supply of New York City. The water from the Catskill Mountains is shown sparkling and flashing its gem like radiance in the sun, a precious commodity without which life in the largest city in the world would be unbearable.

"Sentinels of the Sea," in one reel, is a glorification of the men and ships of the lighthouse service. Famous lighthouses and light-ships mutely acting as humanity's sentinels, are entertainingly set forth in an intensely human story.

Spirit Photographs Given Jolt

"Little Girl Next Door" Reveals Hoax Used in Projection of Spooks

SPIRIT photographs get a severe jolt in "The Little Girl Next Door," the Blair Coan Productions feature picture, which has just been completed at a Chicago studio under Director W. S. Van Dyke.

Andre Barlatier, the cameraman, who made the spirit pictures which Conan Doyle insists are genuine photographs of real spirits, made spook photographs in "The Little Girl Next Door," which will reveal the hoax put over on the author of Sherlock Holmes, according to Blair Coan.

The expose of spirit photography is a part of the interesting story told in "The Little Girl Next Door" and the revelation comes as a climax in the love story of the play.

"This will be the first real spook mystery play ever shown on the screen," says Mr. Coan, "and probably is spookier than any which have gained such popularity on the legitimate stage.

"With the world-wide discussion of spirits and spirit photograph, which is being given such prominence in magazines and daily press of the country, we believe that the public interest in this picture will be very great and certainly offers remarkable exploitation angles."

The name part in this feature is played by Pauline Starke and her sweetheart is portrayed by James Morrison. Carmel Meyers, as the vamp, is the medium eventually forced to reveal the secrets of fake spook pictures. Mitchell Lewis is the heavy.

Film Edition of Coue Special Ready

A special film edition of Emile Coue's book, "Coue's Own Method," is being published by the Malkan Publishing Co. in connection with the Educational Pictures Special, "The Message of Emile Coue," which is a translation of M. Coue's book, originally written in French. It was not only published in book form by the Malkan Publishing Co., but was printed in serial form by the New York Evening Mail and circulated by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Now a new edition of this book is being printed with numerous illustrations from Educational's two-reel special. This new printing will be in every sense a film edition, carrying a special front over, and with a description of the corresponding scene in the film accompanying every illustration.

This will offer an opportunity for a splendid tie-up between exhibitors all over the country and the book stores selling the Malkan books. Special window cards are being furnished by the Malkan Company announcing this new film edition, and necessarily attracting great added interest to the motion picture.

Agents of the Malkan Publishing Co. are being instructed to cooperate with exhibitors booking "The Message of Emile Coue."

Baby Peggy Called Upon to Do Honors

THE Hollywood Lions—an organization along the lines of the Rotary Club—recently received their international charter from headquarters in Chicago. Baby Peggy, the four year old Century Comedy star, was honored with the offer of presenting this to the club at the Masonic Temple where the ceremonies were held and where a very fine banquet followed.

The little star was brought in a sedan chair which was carried up the long room on the shoulders of four gorgeously dressed attendants. Pages strewed the path of the "charter bearer" with roses and carnations and her presence was announced to the guests of the Masonic Temple by heralds and a flourish of trumpets as she made her way to the dais occupied by the officials of the society.

Wiley Starts Trip For "Strauss' Salome"

George H. Wiley, who is handling Malcolm Strauss' "Salome" in its distribution through independent exchanges, has just started out on a two-weeks' trip in the interest of that spectacular production, which will take him to all the principal cities in the Middle West and South.

He is taking a print with him, and this will be the first opportunity afforded exchangemen in those territories to view the picture which features Diana Allen, former Follies star, as Salome, Vincent Coleman and Christine Winthrop.

Apollo Exchange, Inc., distributors for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, is concentrating every effort on the exploitation of Malcolm Strauss' "Salome."

Federated Film Exchange of Baltimore, handling the Washington and Baltimore territories, is completing its plans for a big Baltimore opening within a few days.

Pathe News Shows Constantinople From Air

Motion picture mid-air views of the troubled city of Constantinople are screened in the current issue of Pathe News No. 14. They are described as being attractively comprehensive while rich in detail. The pictures were taken from a French Army airplane by Pathe News Staff Cameraman Ercole, whose films of scenes in the Graeco-Turkish war are celebrated for their importance and graphic character.

The Pathe News film shows the camera's approach to the historic capital of the old Ottoman Empire from the Bosphorus and the Golden Horn. The panorama then presents clear and detailed views in the following order: Pera, the European section of the city, where most of the foreign ministers and ambassadors have their residences. Then comes the famous Galata Bridge, crossing to Stamboul, the ancient Asiatic section, scene of centuries of alternate Greek and Turkish rule.

"Mighty Lak a Rose" Revives Old Songs

Old time popular songs are having their inning again with the showing of Edwin Carewe's picture "Mighty Lak A Rose." Strains of the "Mighty Lak a Rose" song are heard all through the picture and First National has interwoven in its elaborate music cue other songs that have been sung and whistled for years. Among these are "Silver Threads among the Gold," "The Bowery," "Molly O," "Where did you get that hat?" "Sidewalks of New York," "Comrades," "Rock-a-bye Baby," and many others.

The whole idea of the Carewe production is based on the power of music as an influence for good. Therefore with the aid of the suggestions in the cue sheet, many exhibitors are using an "Old Song Number" as part of their program before flashing "Mighty Lak a Rose," on the screen.

Work Suspended on "The Eleventh Hour"

Work on "The Eleventh Hour," has been temporarily halted at the William Fox studios. This picture has been almost two months in the making and is yet uncompleted. It is believed that work will be resumed later, since some of the characters, under contract, must be taken from this production and started to work in other pictures yet to be made.

Bernard Durning is the director and the cast is headed by Shirley Mason, Charles "Buck" Jones and Edward Martindel. Louis Sherwin wrote the adaptation.

Dan Mason, the star of Plum Center Comedies, which are produced by the Paul Gerson Pictures Corporation for release through the Film Booking Offices of America, will next be seen in "Pop Tuttle's Pole Cat Plot," in which the veteran character shows his business ability by overcoming his opposition in the Plum Center bus line industry. Robert Eddy, who has been directing the entire Plum Center series, is again behind the megaphone, and Wilna Hervey, the three hundred pound leading lady, is seen in one of her best roles of the entire series.

"Pop Tuttle's Pole Cat Plot" is scheduled for release on February 25th.

"None So Blind" Has Premier Showing

"None So Blind," the second big Burton King special to be distributed by Arrow, received its premier showing on Monday when it opened day and date at Frank Hall's four splendid New Jersey theatres, The State, The Strand, The Ritz and The Twin-Capital.

This production received excellent exploitation and, according to reports, opened to tremendous business in all four houses.

The picture was produced under the working title of "Shylock of Wall Street." It is from an original story by Leota Morgan and has an excellent cast in Dore Davidson, Zena Keefe, Maurice Costello, Anders Randolf and Gene Burnell. Arrow officials predict that it will equal, if not surpass, the success achieved by Mr. King's other production, "The Streets of New York."

Patrons of N. Y. Mark-Strand Enjoy History

New York's Strand Theatre patrons found entertainment, as well as educational value last week in Pathe's animated history reel illustrating the first settlement of English-speaking people in the Western hemisphere—the Jamestown Colony of Virginia, founded in 1607. The picture, which is in one reel, is entitled "The Land of Our Forefathers."

Ruins of Old Church at Jamestown, built over three hundred years ago. View of the spot where stood the first "Capitol" in America, where Patrick Henry spoke the immortal words, "Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death." Old Bruton Church, where worshipped Harrison, Marshall, Monroe, Randolph, Tyler, and George Washington. The first custom house in America, and the spot where Cornwallis surrendered to Washington also are filmed.

"Eternal Three" Near Completion

Marshall Neilan expects to finish photography in three weeks on his own original story, "The Eternal Three," which he is making in association with Goldwyn at that company's studio. He is now making interiors at the studio.

Milton Moore and G. R. Perry have just returned to the studio from a 128 mile trip through Bryce Canon, Utah, where they were photographing snow scenes for "The Eternal Three."

The complete cast is as follows: Hobart Bosworth, Claire Windsor, Raymond Griffith, Bessie Love, George Cooper, Tom Gallery, Helen Lynch, Alec Francis, James F. Fulton, Irene Hunt, "Peaches" Jackson, Charles H. West and Victory Bateman.

Mr. Neilan will begin working on his film version of Thomas Hardy's novel, "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," as soon as he completes "The Eternal Three."

Burr Has Innovation in Trailers

An innovation in film trailers and one which is bound to be followed widely was started last week by C. C. Burr, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., when sixty feet of film were added to the trailers on "Sure Fire Flint" showing the front of the Chicago theatre and the various lobby displays used in putting the picture over in that city. A letter to this effect left the Burr offices last week to all exchanges which had bought "Sure Fire Flint."

Associated Features Win Praise

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS bats 1,000 per cent. in the current number of the Photoplay Guide, issued by the National Committee for Better Films, which contains a list of the pictures viewed by the committee in January and its opinions of them. The National Committee for Better Films is affiliated with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

Eighty-four pictures were reviewed during the month, of which twelve are marked with a star, which, the Photoplay Guide explains, "denotes a particularly good picture." But two Associated Exhibitors Features were seen by the reviewers but each of these won the committee's designation, "particularly good."

These two are "Alice Adams," Florence Vidor's picturization of Booth Tarkington's prize-winning novel, and "Is Divorce A Failure?" the first of the big 1923 specials featuring Leah Baird. "Is Divorce A Failure" is set for release March 18th and "Alice Adams," April 8th.

Fox Picture Subject of Pastor's Discussion

The Rev. Fred P. Corson, pastor of the Community Church in Jackson Heights, New York City, recently selected the title of the William Fox special, "The Town That Forgot God," as the topic for his Sunday night discussion. This was one of four addresses on subjects which seemed to be of particular interest to the members of this church.

In announcing this lecture the following message was used on small white cards which were distributed at the church the previous Sunday: "These four addresses on Civic Righteousness, International Understanding, Personal Endeavor, and Individual Outlook, turn the light of the Christian Religion upon problems which are daily affecting the individual."

"April Showers" Due in Near Future

Work is nearing an end on "April Showers," a Tom Forman production under way at the Louis B. Mayer studio. It will be presented as a Preferred Picture.

Nearly two reels of the production are given over to a prize fight between Kenneth Harlan and Ralph Faulkner, two of the leading members of the cast. Colleen Moore is the feminine lead of the film.

Aiding in the training of Faulkner and Harlan for the fight scenes are Kid McCoy, ex-champion of the squared arena, and other fighters.

Schulberg Adopts New System

Integral Plan Provides Production Chief with Expert Department Heads

B. P. SCHULBERG, who is making Preferred Pictures for Al Lichtman release, has inaugurated at the Schulberg studios in Los Angeles the first complete system of picture production on an integral basis as opposed to the unit plan generally employed. Under the unit plan each director has an organization of his own, whereas the integral system worked out by Schulberg involves the operation of the entire studio under one head aided by experts in charge of each department of production.

It is Schulberg's belief that better results can be obtained by the use of the biggest men and women in their respective fields than by hiring several less capable persons to do similar work with each of four or five companies. If one man heads each department and by means of a well organized machine, succeeds in spreading his genius over half a dozen companies the plan is considered far more practical.

An initial move toward its perfection was the splitting up of what has been known heretofore as the Scenario Department into two separate working units—the Department of Adaptations and the Department of Story Producing. Olga Printzlau, for many years scenarist for William de Mille, has signed a long term contract to head the former. She will have complete charge of all scenarios before they are turned over to the directors.

Eve Unsell and a number of literary assistants will comprise the Department of Story Producing. It is their duty to follow the story from the first crank of the camera to the last stages of editing and titling.

This plan of production was put in effect just before the "shooting" of "April Showers" and "Mothers-in-Law," the stories now in the making at the Schulberg Studios under Directors Tom Forman and Gasnier, respectively. Victor L. Schertzinger will also begin directing special productions for Al Lichtman release in the near future.

"Hottentot" Wins Liberal Praise

New York Reviewers Add Endorsement to Those of Other Big Cities

NEW YORK newspaper critics added their praise of Thomas Ince's big racing picture, "The Hottentot," to that already heard from Chicago, Baltimore and other big first run cities.

The New York Times gave "The Hottentot" probably the most unstinted praise it has ever given to any film, admitting that it was "darned good fun." The Times critic wrote in part after seeing the picture at The Strand in New York:

"For they have made a merry screen farce of 'The Hottentot.' In some respects it outdoes the stage production. . . . Del Andrew and James W. Horne, who directed the picture, have done a good job. They have maintained a stimulating, breakneck tempo; they have staged a number of exceedingly clever scenes, and they have kept the continuity of the piece.

"Result: 'The Hottentot' moves along merrily and the spectators laugh as it goes. It's darned good fun.

"In giving credit to the directors however, even though they deserve the bulk of it, one must not overlook the work of Douglas MacLean. . . . He is abetted too by Raymond Hatton as a sympathetic butler."

The Morning Telegraph critic writes:

"Nothing funnier, more exciting has been shown in some time. This film can be heartily recommended. Two kinds of people will enjoy 'The Hottentot.' Those who like horse racing and those who do not."

Here is what Quinn Martin of the N. Y. World thinks of "The Hottentot":

"Finest race horse picturing which we have ever seen. Horses go ploughing over the very top of the camera, their hoofs almost seeming to crash into the lens as they fly past. The work of Douglas MacLean is especially fine. It is a photoplay which most every one will like."

"The best race we ever saw on the screen. Douglas MacLean is an extremely clever comedian."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Genuinely humorous and kept the spectators in laughter throughout. Douglas MacLean has proved himself one of the best light comedians in the movies. A ripping comedy."—N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Laugh and grow fat is a motto true. We put on ten pounds while viewing "The Hottentot" at the Strand. We are going to see it again."—N. Y. Evening World.

Paramount Starts Three on West Coast

LAST WEEK proved to be one of the busiest that the West Coast Paramount studio had experienced in some time, when three of the biggest pictures the company has ever made were started.

George Fitzmaurice's production of "The Cheat" with Pola Negri starred, Jack Holt featured and Charles de Roche in support, was started Monday. The adaptation is by Ouida Bergere.

Sam Wood started his Paramount production of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," starring Gloria Swanson, on Monday also. This picture was adapted by Sada Cowan from Charlton Andrews' adaptation of Alfred Savoir's play.

"Hollywood," James Cruze's production for Paramount, was the third picture to start during the week. The story is an original by Frank Condon, adapted by Thomas J. Geraghty, with Walter Woods as production editor.

Rathner Closes Deal on "Environment"

Harry Rathner, special sales representative of Principal Pictures Corporation, while in Omaha this week closed a deal with Liberty Films, Inc., of that city, whereby that firm will handle the distribution of "Environment," starring Alice Lake and Milton Sills.

Her head said "No," Her heart said "Yes." What happened?

Havana to Celebrate Paramount Week

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed by the Caribbean Film Company of Havana, for a Paramount week celebration the week of April 8th, in honor of the fifth anniversary of the company. Advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, indicate that Cuba's first Paramount week will be a record-breaking celebration for the motion picture industry in the island.

Having just signed contracts for the distribution of Paramount pictures for another year in Cuba, Porto Rico, Haiti and the Dominican Republic, officials of the Caribbean Film Company are making plans for increased distribution during the year. The program for Paramount Week includes some of the biggest of the recent Paramount successes, and an extensive advertising and publicity campaign has been launched to insure the sucess of the celebration.

ChicagoWomenEndorse "Prince and Pauper"

Mrs. Fred Michael, Chairman, Better Films Committee of the Chicago Woman's Aid, endorses Mark Twain's "The Prince and The Pauper."

"It is an entrancing picture," she says in the current issue of Social Progress, "and the American Releasing Corporation are to be congratulated upon the privilege accorded them of bringing this film before the American public. It remained for a company producing in Vienna and Prague to contribute 'The Prince and the Pauper' to the literature of the screen in a way that would have pleased Mark Twain. A little Polish boy by the name of Tibi Lubin plays the double role of prince and pauper in a manner that should realize the dream of every child who had read and loved the book. A splendid film for children of all ages."

Theatrical Dignitaries Approve Classic at Private Century Roof Showing

THE Century Roof, New York City, last Sunday evening, was the scene of a notable gathering to view "Othello." Ben Blumenthal who, in conjunction with David P. Howells, will present the great Shakespearean screen classic at the Criterion theatre beginning February 25th, gave a pre-view of this much talked of continental spectacle to a selected company of friends. World famous stage and screen artists attended, as did the leading dramatic and motion picture critics of the metropolitan papers.

"Othello" was produced in Germany recently by Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells. Dimiti Buchowetzki, the noted Russian, directed the spectacle, which takes its place as the first great picturization of one of Shakespeare's immortal dramas.

Emil Jennings, already famous for his dramatic performances of "Othello" on the speaking stage and who became one of the ranking screen players because of his splendid portrayals in "Passion" and "Henry the Eighth," plays the title role in the new film. Werner Kraus, justly famous for his work as "Dr. Caligari," takes the part of Iago. "The most beautiful woman in Europe," Ica Lenkeffy, was sought out and engaged to play the role of Desdamona.

Among the noted stage people who attended the private showing were Mr. and Mrs. David Warfield, Mr. and Mrs. David Belasco, Miss Ethel Barrymore, Miss Billie Burke, Miss Gilda Gray, Miss Mary Eaton and a host of others. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Conde Nast, Robert Sherwood, S. J. Kaufman, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Winthrop, Frank Crowninshield, Miss Jane Cowl, Miss Lenore Ulric, Mrs. Morris Gest were among the others who mingled with the critics who gathered to see "Shakespeare" on the screen.

As a compliment to the Russian, Buchowetzki, the entire companies of the Moscow Art theatre and Balieff's "Chauve-Souris" also attended the showing. The Century Roof theatre was used through the courtesy of Morris Gest.

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld favored Ben Blumenthal by supervising the presentation of "Othello." He arranged a special musical setting for the Century showing and personally directed the Criterion Theatre Orchestra at the screen.

After the showing supper was served and dancing followed.

It seemed to be the consensus of opinion among those present that "Othello" is a masterpiece, both from the dramatic and motion picture angles. Speculation was rife as to how the public would take to the picture when it opens at the Criterion next week.

Hodkinson Announces Release

Grace Haskins Production, "Just Like a Woman", is Due March 15th

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that the Grace Haskins' production, "Just Like a Woman," will be released March 15. This production has been produced by Miss Grace Haskins, the youngest female producer in the field, and those who have seen an advance showing say it provides a strong attraction for exhibitors looking for something different in the way of film entertainment.

The story of "Just Like a Woman" deals with a young girl, daughter of an actress, who is greatly looked down upon by two old maid aunts, but who poses as a prim school teacher and forces her aunts to go to the extreme in demonstrating their puritanical beliefs, much to their discomfort. She makes a wager to win a young lawyer with whom she is in love. How she does this makes the story unusual in its appeal and decidedly interesting.

The production was made on the Coast and many novelties in the way of an exciting automobile race, some laughable comedy in and about a private school for girls, some real thrills and fight scenes in a small town on the Mexican border, and the two distinct character types portrayed by the leading feminine role, are said to combine to make this an unusual attraction.

The cast is composed of Marguerite De La Motte, who plays the part of the girl who puts her aunts through the paces; Ralph Graves, who plays the role of the ambitious lawyer, and George Fawcett, who enacts the picturesque character of the old uncle.

Crawford Reports Good Prospects in West

ROY CRAWFORD, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, returned this week from Topeka, his former home, where he went on business connected with his large theatrical interests in Kansas and Missouri. Mr. Crawford stopped also in Chicago and Kansas City.

"Picture men in the Middle West seem particularly optimistic," said the Associated official. "This optimism is born in part of the fact that business men generally are highly encouraged by the present trend in the business world.

"In Chicago, I was told by James Wingfield, who books attractions for an extensive circuit of theatres in the Central Western states, that the road show has 'come back' in great shape. He has never known greater activity in bookings of this class of attractions. And, of course, when business in the legitimate field is good, vaudeville and motion pictures also are certain to profit."

Fox Announces Latest Tom Mix Story

Others in the cast include Edward Piel, Joe Girard, Virginia True Boardman, Margaret Joslin, Frank Forde and Harry Todd.

Weber-North Special Progresses

Director Nigh Engages 800 People for Scene in Independent Production

A CABARET and dance scene crowded with 800 dancers and diners was shot this week at the Metro studios, where Will Nigh, independent director, is staging his second production for L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North. The scene is an example of the proportions on which Nigh's forthcoming special is being built. Mob scenes of that many people have been known in pictures before, but not in independent annals, it is claimed. The huge scale on which the second Weber-North-Nigh vehicle is mounted is the result of the producers' belief in doing nothing by halves. Current opinion among exhibitors of the country indicate that Will Nigh is on the right track in making luxurious settings one of the features of his output.

Progress on the feature is going on full blast. The picture is half done. Speed, however, is not being attained at the sacrifice of thoroughness. Director Nigh had plotted and planned every minute of actual shooting one month before work was actually begun. An enlarged staff of assistants was engaged, with Ben Behrens acting as first-mate to the crew. Particular satisfaction is reported with the work of Tom Moore and Ann Forrest, who play the leads in the picture. Moore is displaying his veteran ease before the calcium-light, and Ann Forrest, whose career is being watched by exhibitors and the public from coast to coast, is going through her paces like a star to the manor born, it is said.

In addition to the dance scene above mentioned, there is a gorgeous interior of a modiste's shop, where much of the action takes place. This set, done in faithful detail, is elaborately decorated and outfitted by an expert in the line. The art-work represented in this set alone took more than a week to complete, and the space occupied was three-fourths of the floor of the studio.

De Mille May Go To Palestine

Paramount Considering Mission for Big Scenes in "Ten Commandments"

CECIL B. DeMILLE will probably go to Palestine with a company of Paramount players to film some of the more important scenes of the "Ten Commandments," it was announced today by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Al Kaufman, who has recently been in charge of the company's European production, left New York yesterday for Los Angeles to confer with Mr. DeMille about the arrangements for the longest location trip in the history of motion pictures, half way 'round the world from Los Angeles to the Holy Land.

Miss Jeanie Macpherson, who has written all of Mr. DeMille's recent continuities, is on her way to Los Angeles, after spending a month in the east at work on the script for the dramatic story of the "Ten Commandments."

Already on the way to the Holy Land is Mrs. Florence Meehan, whom Mr. DeMille dispatched to the Biblical country for authentic data for use in the production. Mrs. Meehan is a much-traveled authority on ancient peoples and customs, who will explore India, Java, Thibet and Baluchistan before proceeding to Palestine, where she will be joined by the DeMille company.

Mr. Kaufman, on account of familiarity with foreign production conditions, will accompany Mr. DeMille on this photoplay conquest of the Holy Land.

Equity Completes Foreign Deal

South American Rights Are Disposed of on "Has the World Gone Mad?"

WORD comes from the office of Equity Pictures Corporation that the first foreign deal had been consummated on their new Special production, "Has the World Gone Mad?" By the closing of this contract, Equity has disposed of practically the entire South American market—the only part left open being the northern strip of small countries, including Colombia, Venezuela and the Guianas.

The contract was closed between Louis Baum, vice-president of Equity Pictures Corporation, and Jacob Glucksman after a screening in the Equity projection room. The territories covered by this deal comprise the countries of Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolvia and Ecuador. Mr. Glucksman expressed his absolute confidence in the success of the picture in each of the above countries, due to the fact that the production not alone deals with the trouble and eccentricities of American life, but is applicable to the society life of any country in the world today.

"The picture," said Mr. Glucksman, "is all that Equity and the trade papers have held it to be and I am glad to obtain it for my territory. I also purchased Equity's last success, 'What's Wrong With the Women,' and I can safely asy that in my opinion, 'Has the World Gone Mad?" will make money.

Washington Dignitaries See Doug's Latest

Douglas Fairbanks' photoplay version of the chivalry and adventures of Robin Hood as portrayed in his "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," a United Artists release, and which opened recently in Washington, D. C., at the Columbia theatre, is exerting its magnetic influence upon the official life of the national capital, according to word just received by the star-producer from Frances Parkinson Keyes, noted magazine writer, and the wife of Senator Keyes, of New Hampshire.

It is quite likely, according to Mrs. Keyes, that most everybody of official consequence in big political circles will try to learn something of diplomacy and statesmanship from the dashing exponent of taking from the rich to give to the poor, as depicted by Mr. Fairbanks. Among the first of the nation's official family to attend a showing of the picture was Mrs. Coolidge, wife of the Vice-President, who was a guest at a theatre party given by Mrs. Keyes.

"Pilgrim" Prints Meet Big Demand

The demand for Chaplin's new picture, "The Pilgrim," is said to be so widespread that Associated First National has ordered 200 prints of the picture which goes into The Strand, New York, Feb. 25, for a two weeks' run.

It is expected that the number of prints on this picture will reach 225, which will be a record over even the number ordered on "The Kid."

First National branch offices report many bookings already and the demand is for early dates, which may bring a First National record for day and date showings.

"Hearts Aflame" Gives Critics Thrill

New York motion picture critics admit that thrills chased themselves up and down their spines when they saw the tremendous, realistic forest fire in Reginald Barker's production of "Hearts Aflame," which opened at the Rialto theatre February 4.

"The Evening Post" says: "Interest in the film registered 100 per cent.

The absolute realism of the forest fire scenes is pointed out by "The Tribune" reviewer, who writes:

"A woman sitting in front of us turned around and said: 'I was caught in a forest fire once, and that is so real that it frightens me to look at it.'"

The critic for "The Evening Journal" wonders how it was done.

"Your first mental question after the final fadeout will be: How did the director, Reginald Barker, stage this forest fire business without burning pretty Anna and the man who stoked the engine to a crisp. . . . The forest fire, of course, is the climax of 'Hearts Aflame,' which was adapted from Harold Titus' novel, 'Timber,' but there are other sequences which set one's nerves a-tingling."

Charles Ray Selects Director

Frederic Sullivan to Handle Megaphone on "Courtship of Miles Standish"

To direct the production of the most pretentious effort of his film career, "The Courtship of Miles Standish," Charles Ray selected Frederic Sullivan, who arranged, produced and staged the magnificent spectacle, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," in the Hollywood Bowl last autumn.

The man now wielding the megaphone in the picturization of the great drama of American colonial days is a nephew of England's most celebrated composer, Sir Arthur Sullivan, of Gilbert & Sullivan fame.

When Charles Ray decided to use Longfellow's epic poem as the background of an historical and dramatic photoplay which is expected to place the star in the "million-dollar producer class," he was faced with no easy task in selecting a director big enough for the job.

The tremendous energy and ability of Frederic Sullivan, whose mind had guided the fine marshaling of persons and things in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" pageant, impressed the star deeply when he appeared in the spectacle. Investigation showed that Mr. Sullivan had created similar spectacles in Boston, Washington, St. Louis and other cities; that he was long an actor, and then stage director for artists like Nance O'Neill, Blanche Bates, James K. Hackett, Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, John Mason, and others.

But Mr. Sullivan was also a motion picture veteran, for he was with the pioneer Reliance, Thanhouser and Majestic companies in the East, leaving that field only to return to state direction.

Another interesting fact in connection with Mr. Sullivan is that as a native of England, for forty years a resident of the United States, this director could bring to his task a valuable dual outlook concerning the events to be picturized, dealing as they do with both England and America.

"All the Brothers Were Valiant" Approved

"All the Brothers Were Valiant" was acclaimed with the highest praise by Washington's motion picture critics.

"The Washington Post" says: "It may be on account of the appropriate title, or the name of Lon Chaney on the billboard; or because of apt direction, or the humanness of the characters; or possibly because the world still loves romance and melodrama of the sea; or it may probably be an accumulation of all these causes that resulted in the Palace throwing open doors to capacity audiences last night and hanging out the 'S. R. O.' sign when the premiere of 'All the Brothers Were Valiant' opened and promised a week's full house run."

The reviewer for "The Washington Daily News" writes: "Of all the . . . salt water dramas we have visioned in the past couple of years, the best is 'All the Brothers Were Valiant,' featuring the incomparable Lon Chaney. . . . another star in Chaney's crowded crown. . . . The film makes you almost smell the salt."

Beauty Cast Completed for Sam Wood's Film

The last of the seven beautiful girls, selected from hundreds of applicants to enact the roles of seven wives in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," Sam Wood's production for Paramount, starring Gloria Swanson, has been chosen by the director.

She is Maude Wayne, reputed to be one of the most beautiful blondes in Hollywood. Miss Wayne is a girl of the modern type of beauty, somewhat tall, very slender and exceedingly graceful. She will take the role of an American girl, one very fond of golf.

In addition to Miss Wayne he selected these six other girls as follows:

Majel Coleman, winner of a beauty contest in Cincinnati, Ohio; Thais Valdemar, a newcomer to Hollywood from Russia; Arita Gillman, judged Oregon's most beautiful girl; Christiana Montt of Chile; Irene Dalton, formerly a model in Chicago, and Helen Huntoon.

Arrow Special to Have Premier

"Lost in a Big City" Due for Week's Showing in Paterson, N. J., March 6th

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that the Blazed Trail special production, "Lost in a Big City," will receive its premier showing at the U. S. Theatre, Paterson, N. J., where it will play the entire week of March 6th.

This production, which was adapted to the screen by L. Case Russell from N. S. Woods' famous stage play of the same name, was directed by George Irving and stars John Lowell, who is said to have duplicated his splendid work of "Ten Nights in a Barroom." Practically the entire cast that appeared in "Ten Nights in a Barroom" is in "Lost in a Big City," with the addition of Jane Thomas, Edward Phillips, Ann Brody, Edward Phillips, Evangeline Russell and Whitney Haley. Other favorites who will be recognized are Edward Keller, Jimmie Phillips, Charles Beyer, Baby Ivy Ward, Leota Miller and Charles Mackey.

Manager Adams, of the U. S. Theatre, is planning an intensive exploitation and advertising campaign for this premier in which he will be assisted by representatives of the Exploitation Department of the Arrow Film Corporation.

It will be recalled that "Lost in a Big City" was given a pre-release showing for one day at the Glove Theatre, Gloversville, New York, where the picture was made and in this instance it not only shattered the box office record of that house for any single day's showing, but received the unique tribute of the unanimous endorsement of the four trade paper representatives who journeyed up to Gloversville to attend the showing.

Striking Posters for "The Curse"

Six-color posters of the standard styles arrived this week at the main office of L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North on their state-right release, "The Curse." The posters, in miniature, had been approved by the thirteen state-right distributors of the Weber & North release before the order to print them was given. As a result, the finished product showed the nearest approach to perfection that it was possible to get. All the high spots of the Chas. E. Blaney melodrama stand out in vivid colors. The sensational element of the five-star feature was given the strongest play. The wild runaway-train incident that brings the finish up to a climax was the subject of the three-sheets. The twenty-four sheets show the cast grouped in action, life-size, around a table, enacting the crucial quarrel scene.

The cast is featured throughout, as their names are considered strong inducements. They are Harry Morey, George Fawcett, Edmund Breese, Marguerite Clayton and Miriam Batista.

State Forester Aids Picture

"The Ninety and Nine" Exploited as Warning Against Forest Fires

"THE NINETY AND NINE," Vitagraph's special production, which has for one of its big thrills a realistic forest fire, is now enjoying one of the most extensive and extraordinary tie-ups ever accorded a motion picture in the Middle West, if not in the entire country. Through the efforts of William T. Cox, State Forester, of Minneapolis, the Vitagraph picture is being held up as a splendid example of the ease in which forest fires may actually be started and the great havoc wrought by them. Mr. Cox is making a state-wide campaign on forest fire prevention through the newspapers as well as the motion picture theatres and has succeeded in interesting the bordering states of North and South Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan in his campaign, and is securing their co-operation. Using "The Ninety and Nine" to visualize his arguments Mr. Cox is making the greatest drive to educate the careless ever made in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. Cox is conducting his campaign and tie-up with "The Ninety and Nine" through several mediums. First is the very extensive use of the 24-sheet on "The Ninety and Nine," which shows a forest fire in brilliant colors. Mr. Cox has had prepared and is using strips reaching entirely across the top of the 24-sheet and reading:

"The Greatest Forest Fire Ever Filmed Is In 'The Ninety and Nine.' See It and Prevent Forest Fires."

Within a week after he had begun his campaign, Mr. Cox had forty-five 24-sheet stands in St. Paul and Minneapolis and others were going up as soon as the additional supply was received from the New York offices. At the same time he had thousands of smaller strips large enough to strip the one-sheets printed which read:

"'The Ninety and Nine' Shows You the Greatest Forest Fire Ever Filmed. See It and Prevent Forest Fires."

These one-sheets are being posted in all prominent locations throughout the forest zone. At the same time, both the stripped 24-sheets and one-sheets are being furnished from Vitagraph's Minneapolis exchange to the exhibitors throughout the territories it covers.

For his newspaper campaign, Mr. Cox is sending a letter over his signature to the editor of every newspaper in the State of Minnesota requesting that the editor give him a good story of the tie-up that he has effected, bringing out with prominence the importance of his fight to prevent forest fires and the fact that "The Ninety and Nine" has the greatest forest fire ever filmed. In connection with these letters, the Vitagraph's Minneapolis exchange is sending to the same newspapers a mat to illustrate the story.

"Peg" Lauded by All Reviewers

Critics from Different Cities Praise Laurette Taylor as Screen Star

METRO, with its production of "Peg o' My Heart" with Laurette Taylor, is in the position of a victorious political candidate getting additional confirmatory returns from widely scattered districts. East(south, west, north, the newspaper reviews report a landslide for "Peg" and Metro, according to the Metro office. J. Hartley Manners' play, the reviewers agree, is even more delightful as a film offering than as a stage play.

"The star has endeared herself even more to the vast American audience which is certain to flock to see the picture," writes Theodore R. Liuzza, photoplay critic of the New Orleans Item, after seeing the picture at the Strand. "The photoplay even excels in charm of characterization Miss Taylor's own inimitable Peg of the footlights."

Duke Adamshick of the Toledo, Ohio, News Bee, writing: "With a touch of drama and a bit of comedy, 'Peg o' My Heart' . . . is a very pleasing show and should keep the Temple theatre packed this week. . . . The screen version excels the legitimate.

Another Toledo newspaper, the Times, records that "Laurette Taylor makes her debut as a screen star with a loud and voluminous bang. . . . Miss Taylor brings to the screen a distinct personality, a likeable bit of Irish magnetism that is irresistible."

Davis, photoplay reviewer of the Cleveland, Ohio, Press, observes that while dozens of other actresses have attempted the same sort of role that Miss Taylor portrays, "we don't now recall any who has done it better than Laurette Taylor."

The Sunday Tribune of Tampa, Fla., reports:

"It is an effective reply to those who continually clamor 'what's wrong with the movies?' The next time picture fans hear that complaint, send the knocker to see Laurette Taylor in 'Peg o' My Heart.'"

Mr. Goldburg was in Portland in the interest of one of his producing units, the Premium Picture Productions. While there he was asked to address the Chamber of Commerce and it was his insistence that Oregon become a producing center which aroused the interest of Portland newspapers.

"Where Pavement Ends" Picturized

John Russell's volume of short stories, "Where the Pavement Ends," greeted by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and other literary authorities as "the best volume of tales by any debutant since Kipling's 'Plain Tales,'" is being issued by Alfred A. Knopf in a special photoplay jacket, to be placed on sale simultaneously with the release of the Rex Ingram production of "Where the Pavement Ends," picturized from one of the stories in the volume.

The jacket will carry scenes from the photoplay, in which the leading players are Ramon Novarro and Alice Terry. This edition makes the fourth appearance of the stories. It was issued first as "The Red Mark" a few years ago and later as "Where the Pavement Ends," with a number of new stories added. Then it was made into a Metro photoplay by Rex Ingram.

"Where the Pavement Ends" is a Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation. John F. Seitz did the photography.

"Notoriety" Is Bookd by Grauman

Will Nigh's first production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North "Notoriety" has succeeded in winning a booking at Sid Grauman's Million Dollar theatre of Los Angeles. A wire received from George Montgomery of the Supreme Film Co., local distributors of the society drama in the Los Angeles district, states that this is the first time a state-right feature has been booked at the famous picture temple.

An elaborate prologue is in preparation, on a scale as lavish and original as all of Grauman's presentation preludes to his shows. The timely interest of "Notoriety" in daily life will be featured.

Priscilla Dean Special Scores

"The Flame of Life" Approved by New York and Chicago Reviewers

PREMIERE showings in New York and Chicago have established "The Flame of Life," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewel production, as one of the strongest pictures ever made by that popular star. Release of this feature, which is a Hobart Henley production, adapted from the popular novel "That Lass o' Lowrie's" by Frances Hodgson Burnett, was received with great acclaim by both press and public, according to Universal.

R. W. Gallico, of the New York Daily News, had the following to say:

"Carl Laemmle, Universal chief, rings the bell a second time on Broadway this week, with 'The Flame of Life' at the State, although the clamor is not quite as pronounced as in the case of 'Driven,' his other offering (now running at the Criterion theatre), still, it is sufficiently loud to call attention to the fact that of late this company has been offering the public some exeedingly fine photoplays.

"Priscilla Dean was most effective, especially her early scenes and later in her trial by fire and water. The photography is excellent. We think highly of Mr. Henley and 'The Flame of Life.'"

Apropos of the Randolph showing, Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Daily Tribune, said:

"Again Priscilla Dean proves her right to the title of 'one of the screen's best actresses.' In this adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's 'That Lass O' Lowrie's' she furnishes the silver sheet with another brilliant bit of impersonation that will live to her credit in the memories of her audiences."

Genevieve Harris, in the Chicago Evening Post was even more enthusiastic.

"Here is the best picture Universal studios have turned out in a long time," she wrote, "and one of the most vivid and entertaining productions we have seen this season. Priscilla Dean has never had a role better fitted to display her distinctive talents.

"The direction of the picture is fine with many skillful touches. The handling of the fight scene was one of them. The staging of the mine disaster is very realistic, or at least it appears to be."

The cast supporting Miss Dean is headed by Wallace Beery in the leading heavy role, Robert Ellis, playing opposite Miss Dean, Kathryn McGuire, Beatrice Burnham, Fred Kohler, Emmett King, and others.

F. B. O. Claims Powerful Drama

"Can a Woman Love Twice," Starring Ethel Clayton, Is Current Release

"CAN A WOMAN LOVE TWICE?" the current release of the Film Booking Offices of America, is announced by that company as the most powerful drama in which Ethel Clayton has ever appeared. It was made under the working title of "The Greater Glory." It is Miss Clayton's second production for the Film Booking Offices, the first being "If I Were Queen."

Wyndham Gittens, one of the leading lights among screen writers, is the author of the story, which is laid in California and New York in the adventuresome days immediately following the signing of the armistice. The picture contains no gruesome battle scenes, but is said to be filled with a succession of dramatic situations, as it tells of a war widow who finds her second love in the person of a returned soldier bearing the same name as her husband.

One of the many points of appeal of the picture is the acting of Baby Muriel Dana, who plays the part of Miss Clayton's son. Opposite the star in the leading male role is Malcolm MacGregor, and the remaining principals are Kate Lester, Fred Esmilton, Victory Bateman, Theodore Von Eltz, Wilfred Lucas, Al Hart, Anderson Smith and Clara Clarke Ward. James W. Horne, who has been directing with the Ince forces, wielded the megaphone and Joseph A. Dubray was behind the camera.

"In calling this production the greatest of Miss Clayton's career," stated Vice-President Schnitzer of F. B. O., "we are doing so advisedly. We have considered all of Miss Clayton's releases and it is our honest opinion that 'Can a Woman Love Twice?' is her most dramatic and entertaining offering. Our judgment has been corroborated by the exhibitors who have already seen the picture. The story is not merely a 'starring vehicle'—it is one of the most appealing and gripping dramas ever written for the screen, and with Miss Clayton in the stellar role it has a two-fold strength, for the star's personality was never more charming or appealing than in this picture.

Pictures Entertain in Churches

First National Reports Exceptional Demand for Important Gatherings

FOR those who are worrying about the trend of pictures First National sends out the cheering information that its pictures are being requested by circles that were once thought to look on the movies as entertainment for the masses but not for the classes. It is interesting too to note that with all the talk about the church being opposed to pictures, churches are using pictures as entertainment for important gatherings.

Richard Barthelmess in "Tol'able David" was selected as the first film to be presented in the handsome new auditorium of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Montclair, N. J., early this month, and since this auditorium is equipped for pictures it is reasonable to suppose that in building the auditorium the Central Presbyterian looked with favor on pictures and will show more of them.

Early in the year the committee in charge of entertainment of a gathering of ministers in Albany, N. Y., requested a print of Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone" for showing to the ministers.

Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador to the U. S., thinks so much of screen entertainment that he has had a machine installed in the embassy and regularly entertains his guests with pictures. Recently he showed "Oliver Twist," and "The Hottentot," and from reports a fine time "was had by all."

In England, society is adding its applause to that of the masses who crowd the cinemas. The nobility is using pictures for private and charity entertainment. For the first time in the 1,000 years of its history, Arundel Castle, the Sussex seat of the Duke of Norfolk, was the scene about two weeks ago of a picture show. The Duchess, mother of the duke who is only fourteen years old, arranged two screen entertainments for her guests who gathered for the festivities in connection with the coming-out party of her eldest daughter, Lady Rachel Fitzalan-Howard.

At the special request of the Duchess British First National sent pictures to the castle. In the afternoon were shown Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist," and Charlie Chaplin in "Pay Day." In the evening the guests were entertained with "The Eternal Flame," in which Norma Talmadge is the star.

Great Title Card for "Covered Wagon"

The largest "title card" ever made was recently photographed at the Lasky studio for "The Covered Wagon," James Cruze's production for Paramount.

The reason this gigantic card was painted—and it is as big as the side of a barn—was to get the effect of a sweeping curtain which when drawn shows the title of the picture. Ordinarily such titles are done in miniature, but to get the proper perspective and curtain effect the large size was made.

Karl Brown was the cameraman of the production.

"Last Hour" Wins Critical Praise

Reviewers Unanimously Commend Burr Offering at New York Cameo Showing

CRITICS of the New York dailies were enthusiastic in their praise of "The Last Hour," the Edward Sloman production released by C. C. Burr of Mastodon Films, Inc. The feature, which has an all-star cast headed by Milton Sills and Carmel Myers, closed a very successful engagement at B. S. Moss' Cameo theatre last Saturday.

In reviewing the picture, P. G. Gallico of the Daily News said: "'The Last Hour' has a great many things in its favor; it is interesting, it has a new idea, there are pleasant people in the cast and it is well directed. The last of 'The Last Hour' will keep you on seat's edge. If you like suspense, you'll be surprised. This is a great picture to see for people who know how everything is going to come out. It leaves them so flat in the end."

Grena Bennett in the N. Y. American had this to say: "'The Last Hour' holds the interest. That the wages of sin is death for some and that for others escape by a hair or a rusty spring was the real backbone of an absorbing play well acted."

Hariette Underhill of the N. Y. Tribune wrote: "'The Last Hour' at the Cameo is the last word in screen melodramas"; while Don Allen of the Evening World said: "The feature film offering for the week at the Cameo is 'The Last Hour,' picturized from the story, 'Blind Justice,' by Frank R. Adams. Milton Sills, to our way of thinking, a mighty clean-cut actor, aided and abetted by Carmel Myers, heads a rather good cast and the story lends itself admirably to the screen. An enjoyable film that contains enough suspense to satisfy even the most blase movie goer."

The Evening Journal critic sums it up in this way: "Just how Edward Sloman could have packed more action into 'The Last Hour,' a photoplay adapted from Frank R. Adam's story, 'Blind Justice,' is not apparent. He used up all the action that he could lay hands upon and the consequence is a melodrama that should captivate every devotee of the crook picture."

The critic of the Evening Sun had this to say: "In 'The Last Hour' at the Cameo theatre this week, Edward Sloman has handled very competently the screen version of the story, 'Blind Justice,' by Frank R. Adams, originally published in Munsey's Magazine as a serial. It has an exceptional and pulse quickening climax, when everything seems to be solved in almost the last turn of the cog-wheel of the projection machine. The mere fact that Milton Sills and Carmel Myers have the leading roles is proof enough that they are competently handled."

Director Asks For Criticisms

Franklin, in Statement, Urges Exhibitors to Express Opinions of "Brass"

FOR the first time in the history of his association with the motion picture industry, Sidney Franklin, director of the Warner Brothers classic of the screen, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production adapted from the novel by Charles G. Norris, in a signed statement makes a direct appeal to the exhibitors regarding the merits or demerits of the feature.

The statement was prompted following a preview presentation of the production before a large gathering of motion picture enthusiasts at Glendale, California. The feature is said to have met with a warm reception, and it imbued Mr. Franklin with the desire to seek a consensus of opinion from theatre owners throughout the country. His letter reads as follows:

"After six months of hard and conscientious work on the part of each member of the staff, including Mr. Harry Rapf, the producer, we have finally completed the production of 'Brass.' I feel, in justice to the Warner Brothers organization, that I write you these few lines. Without hesitancy on my part, I will say that 'Brass' will be one of the outstanding big pictures of the year.

"It is a picture that I feel very proud of, in fact more so than any previous picture that I have had the pleasure of making. I always felt confident that we would have a successful picture, but this one has far surpassed my expectations. I would appreciate a line from the exhibitors after they have seen 'Brass.' I trust that they will pardon these few lines, but I feel that my enthusiasm permits the above frank statement."

This latest Warner classic is scheduled for release in March, and it is expected that the Strand theatre, New York, which has contracted for the Warner series, will set an early date for the showing of the production. Prints of the feature are being shipped to the exchanges handling the Warner product.

Among the large number of players in the cast are Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Frank Keenan, Irene Rich, Harry Myers, Miss DuPont, Pat O'Malley, Helen Ferguson, Vera Lewis, Harvey Clark, Margaret Seddon and Edward Jobson. The story was adapted for the screen by Julien Josephson.

Special Editions Out on Fox Features

The first copies of the motion picture editions of both "Truxton King," by George Barr McCutcheon, and "The Custard Cup" will be received this week by the leading book stores in all the key cities. Grossett & Dunlop, the publishers, arranged with the Fox Film Corporation for the special editions which carry special pages showing scenes from the two named productions and also give credit to the producer on the jackets of the books.

Novel Ideas For "Temptation"

C. B. C. Title Readily Suggests Many Possibilities for Exploitation

THAT there are tremendous possibilities in the title alone of "Temptation," third of the C.B.C. Box Office Winners, is being proved by that company in the form of a preliminary teaser exploitation campaign that is being carried out along novel lines.

This is the feature which is being produced with a cast including Bryant Washburn, Eva Novak, June Elvidge, Vernon Steele, and Phillips Smalley.

This company attracted wide attention and commendation among the territorial holders of the features by reason of the number and variety of novelties and ideas they offered on their feature, "Only a Shopgirl."

This policy proved so successful that they are carrying it further in exploiting "Temptation" — to the extent of keeping buyers "pepped up" by shooting them a new teaser idea to work up several times a week, even though the feature itself is still in course of production.

This week's ideas took two different forms. The first was a diamond ring (synthetic, of course, but with a genuine sparkle) sent out in a real plush ring box bearing the inscription "This is what starts the trouble in Temptation." This was sent broadcast throughout the country. This was immediately followed up by the sending of a telephone index pad, imprinted "We've got your number—watch out for Temptation."

Many novelties are already in course of making, so that when the feature is ready territorial holders will not be held up, but will be ready to launch their campaigns at once.

"As soon as you look at the word 'Temptation' ideas suggest themselves to you," says Joe Brandt of C.B.C. "The mental tie-up is immediate and if a title 'hits home' at once and suggests an immediate idea, it is bound to be a success and to have a drawing power."

Ballin Preparing Next for Goldwyn

Hugo Ballin, who has just finished editing "Vanity Fair," is making preparations to begin work on another big picture, which will be the second of a series he will make for Goldwyn.

He had six different stories which he wants to do, but he can't make up his mind which to do first. Four of these stories are placed in another period of history and two are modern. However, Ballin is allowing himself to be swayed somewhat by the numerous letters he has received urging him to do something historical.

FOLLOWING the announcement of the establishment of the New York office of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., in the Loew Building, comes word from the executive offices of the company in Los Angeles, of the appointment of Mr. A. Canter as general sales manager.

Mr. Canter will be in charge of sales of all productions to be released by the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc. He is well known in the industry and is especially well acquainted with the independant state-right exchange managers.

"The sales policy of the Associated," states Mr. Canter, "calls for the reduction of our distribution costs to the minimum.

"Our first productions, 'Why Women Re-Marry,' has just been completed and the sample print will reach the New York office within the next few days. I am informed that Milton Sills, the star, gives the finest performance of his career in this picture, and is ably aided by an all star cast which includes Ethel Grey Terry, Carol Holloway, Clarissa Selwynne, Wilfred Lucas and William Lowery."

"Public Opinion" Allied Release

First Serious Chaplin Production Is New Departure in Construction

FOLLOWING the receipt of its copyright registration in play form, Charles Chaplin yesterday announced that the title of his first serious motion piction production would be "Public Opinion." The production will be released by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, the subsidiary of United Artists.

The production which is already well under way and which was temporarily called "Destiny," will be in ten reels and though written and directed by Chaplin himself, it will star Edna Purviance in the leading role.

"Public Opinion" is said to mark a new departure in most every element that goes to make up motion pictures. In story structure, in acting and in theme the production promises to be revolutionary and Chaplin himself is very emphatic in saying that it is by far his most important contribution to the screen.

In speaking of the picture, Chaplin says:

"I believe that 'Public Opinion' will be the most important work of my career and no one realizes more than I what a revolutionary step I am taking in adhering to the original style of construction which I am using.

"There have been a number of queries as to whether I intend to act in the picture or not. I am not going to act in it not from any policy but because in the story as I truthfully see it, there is no place for my character. And I am rather glad there isn't because the story is something that I wish say without its being stunted by injecting my own character into it."

Playing opposite Edna Purviance, who is being launched on her starring career in "Public Opinion," is Adolphe Menjou while other important members of the cast include Carl Miller, Lydia Knott, Harry Northrup, Malvina Polo and a number of others well known in the picture world.

Many Sales Reported on "Drug Traffic"

INDEPENDENT exchangemen throughout the country this week are reported to have deluged the New York offices of Harvey Gates distributing his latest production, "The Drug Traffic," with Barbara Tennent, Gladys Brockwell and Bob Walker. The production, the first print of which will be delivered in New York the first of next week and prints ready for general exhibition on Feb. 28, has created considerable discussion in film circles.

The following sales were announced this week: Renowned Pictures Corporation for New York State, New York City and northern New Jersey; G. Mayers of Excel Amusement Enterprises of Williamsport, Pa., for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; H. Leiber of Indianapolis for Indiana, Liberty Films, Inc., of Des Moines for Iowa, Southern States Film Corporation of Atlanta for entire South and Southwest, Mountain States Film Corporation of Denver for the Rocky Mountain States, Twentieth Century Film Corporation of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey.

"Dangerous Age" Used as Photoplay Model

The Palmer Photoplay Corporation out in Los Angeles are using John M. Stahl's production, "The Dangerous Age," produced by Louis B. Mayer and released by First National, as a model in screen story construction and have sent out letters to 10,000 photoplay students to see the picture and in towns where it has not been played to urge the exhibitors to show it.

The Palmer people declare that "The Dangerous Age" is an outstanding argument in favor of the original story for screen production and since this organization teaches scenario writing its students are naturally interested in a picture that was not based on a book or a play.

Thomas H. Ince, Rex Ingram, G. Gardner Sullivan, Rob Wagner, J. L. Frothingham, James R. Quirk and Allen Holubar are on the advisory council of the corporation.

"Java Head" Feb. 25th Release

Paramount Feature Approved by N.Y. Critics After Broadway Showing

PARAMOUNT'S feature scheduled for release February 25 is George Melford's production, "Java Head," which was adapted by Waldemar Young from the novel by Joseph Hergesheimer.

Leatrice Joy, Jacquelime Logan, George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton and Albert Roscoe are the featured players in this picture, the story of which is laid in Salem, Mass., in the late forties. The theme is essentially one of the eternal triangle. In this case the three corners are a young Chinese princess, a New England girl and a dashing sea captain engaged in trade with the Orient. To save the life of the princess the young mariner makes her his wife and brings her back to Salem, there to confront his curious family and neighbors and the girl he has promised to make his wife on his return. Only through bitter tragedy is the course of true love allowed to have its way.

To film the exteriors Mr. Melford took his company to old Salem and there, with the assistance of Mr. Hergesheimer, picked out the locations.

The Melford production played successive weeks at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York and was accorded unreserved praise by the newspaper critics. The Tribune said: "Every minute of it was a delight to us, and 'Java Head' is one of the best directed things we have seen in a long time."

The Herald said: "'Java Head,' as a whole, is a splendid picture—beautiful to behold and charged with drama."

"Entertaining and interesting," said the Globe.

The Sun said: "George Melford has caught the spirit of the original story and of the period absolutely, and by discrimination and an unfailing sense of tempo he has made it one of the judicious film triumphs of the year."

Big Exploitation for Principal Release

Eastern Distribution Manager Irving Lesser of Principal Pictures Corporation has started in full motion the machinery that will exploit its latest release, "Temporary Marriage," the first picture Sacramento Pictures Corporation has contributed to the Principal lineup. William H. Jobelman, vice-president and general manager of Sacramento Pictures Corporation, in a telegram received by Mr. Lesser characterized the pictures as "one of the greatest ever offered good substantial independent exchanges."

The all-star cast is headed by Kenneth Harlan. Others in it are Mildred Davis, Tully Marshall, Myrtle Steadman, Stuart Holmes, Maude George and others.

Special Aid Secured for "Within the Law"

Reports from the coast indicate that Joseph M. Schenck intends to make "Within the Law" the most elaborate stage picture in which Norma Talmadge has ever starred. He has had a special art director design the sets, he has had a captain of police assist Frank Lloyd in the details of the acting of the crook characters, and has engaged Willard Mack to help in production generally.

"A Front Page Story" Tops Women's Lists

"A Front Page Story," the Jess Robbins' production made for Vitagraph, heads the list of twenty motion pictures approved and praised by the Kansas City Parent-Teachers' Association. The committee in charge of the motion picture activities of the association actually functions, and every day its members are on duty at the City Censors' office watching pictures, while others are doing the same at many film exchanges.

Each month a list of the pictures approved is made public with the announcement of the theatre where they will be shown. There are twenty in the list for January and "A Front Page Story" heads the list.

Stanley Theatre, Florida, Exquisite Gem of Old Spanish Art

Palm Beach House Causes Much Favorable Comment Among Winter Tourists

ONE of the most novel and beautiful of small theatres in America is the Stanley theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., recently opened under the direction of Stanley C. Warrick, owner of the famous Beaux Arts theatre at Palm Beach. The new house is an exquisite gem of art, of old Spanish design throughout, in keeping with Florida clime and history. Accompanying pictures give an idea of why the thousands of winter visitors exclaim and even rave over the charms of this bit of old Spain transplanted in Florida.

It is of rough stucco construction, two stories high with red tile roof and a tiny marquee of the same underlaid with cypress, with an old-style balcony at one side; the stone pillars are surmounted with sculptured faces and animals. The whole front is colored ocean-blue, harmonizing with the waters of the Atlantic nearby. The ticket booth is beautiful, also of colored stucco, and cypress woodwork with blue-striped scrolls, and an iron grille for a window, with four corner pillars of white stone. The lobby has a red tile floor. The four big doors are of old "pecky" cypress, dark and handsome—each has tiny movable peep-doors a foot square covered with rusty iron gratings—the whole like an old castle.

The artistic foyer is of dull brown stucco wall and dark paneled ceiling with cork tile floor, lighted by dainty wall torchieres of amber color and with big, antique chandeliers of iron. Here there are stone seats covered with cretonne cushions; canaries, statuary, ornamental pine trees in handsome stone stands; large beveled mirrors in the center of which are iron torchieres; curious wall plaques. Here also is placed a popular crystal globe mounted on an imported stand of great age.

The auditorium seats 810 all on one inclined floor, and here the mediaeval effect is complete. Dingy stone walls with paneled cypress ceiling and blind dungeon doors on each side of the house, also twelve small windows of stained glass effect—all give the desired atmosphere. A toy balcony runs under these windows half the length of each side, also the organ lofts are artistic balconies. The organ is a Wurlitzer Hope Jones and is played by Prof. Oliver Strunk of Detroit. The seats are of French gray upholstered in dark blue Spanish leather. The only touch of color in the auditorium is provided by small stripes of Moorish red and blue along the side ornamental balconies. The floor is of cork tile. Soft, indirect lighting is furnished by several antique iron chandeliers. Exit lights are set in carved stone heads of interesting design.

The stage is ample, 26 x 15 feet, with rich draperies of blue and silver velvet and a voile curtain of lavender and another of rich tropical coloring and foliage. The Stanley coat-of-arms in stone flanks the stage and balcony and is again featured in the mural reproduced herewith with clay figures against a dark blue background—placed just above the entrance from the foyer.

The projection booth is of stone, with the newest type Powers spotlights, stereopticon, transverter, steel film cabinet. A men's clubroom is provided, also an especially attractive ladies' lounge at the left of the foyer. It is done in ocean green with rough walls again, warm, dark rugs, furniture of French gray. Antique vases and wall plaques add interest, also a very old Spanish cigarette lighter-stand. The chandelier and torchieres are of iron again.

Mr. Warrick is a veteran exhibitor and demonstrates his faith in Florida, this being the only new theatre of this season in the state, and the only modern house in West Palm Beach, and doing a big business. Mrs. Warrick is also entitled to much credit for her suggestions in design and finish, contributing much to the general excellence of good taste and art which is a keynote of the theatre throughout. It is doubtful if the world can at present show an equal of this beautiful little Stanley theatre in its field. The cost was $150,000. The architect was Bruce Kitchell of Newark, N. J., and Palm Beach. The contractor was C. J. Meerdrink of Newark, N. J., and Palm Beach. All equipment was furnished by the Southern Theatre Equipment Company of Atlanta. Furnishings, curtains, antiques, chandeliers, New York. Mr. Harry Shull, formerly with First National in Cleveland and Atlanta for several years, is the genial and capable manager of the new house, and will operate the year around.

This theatre offers a very excellent example of the present day tendency of theatre construction for the smaller community house. The motion picture clientele of today are becoming discriminating and, while good pictures are perhaps the dominating attraction, the physical characteristics of the theatre itself is of the utmost importance.

Not always is the house which represents an enormous investment the most successful in presenting an attractive design which wears.

Third House Opens in Strand New York State Chain

THE Troy, a motion picture theatre being built by the Mark Strand operating company, in Troy, N. Y., and costing upwards of $350,000 will be opened on February 21, according to present plans. Uly Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand in Albany, will also handle the Troy house, with Edward H. Crawford, former manager of the Lincoln, in Troy, acting as business manager. The new house seats 2,100 persons, the balcony accommodating 603.

The Troy is the largest and most magnificent motion picture theatre in the city, and completes the third link of a chain of Strand theatres in the Capital District, the State in Schenectady, second of the chain, having opened about two months ago. The three houses represent an investment of about one million dollars.

The Troy will maintain a fourteen piece orchestra, and will also have a soloist changing weekly. No decision has yet been reached as to admission prices, although it is said that the top will probably be forty cents, or five cents more than the Lincoln, and fifteen cents more than the State in Schenectady, which dropped from forty to twenty-five, and ten cents less than the Mark Strand in Albany.

The opening feature has not been fully decided upon. It may be "Dr. Jack," or it may be "Robin Hood," or some one of the many good features which have already been booked by the house. The opening will be one of the midwinter events in the Capital District, and one which will attract many well known persons in film circles from New York and elsewhere.—Grant.

Price of Raw Stock Reduced

A VERY important announcement was recently made by the Eastman Kodak Company to the effect that raw stock would be cut from 2¼c a foot to 2c a foot. This reduction in the price of film has been made possible through the advancement and perfection of methods used in making moving picture film.

When the enormous amount of raw stock used in this industry is taken into consideration, a reduction of ¼c a foot mounts into large sums of money. It is encouraging to note the trend towards lower prices in this industry and it is hoped that other processes will become more efficient and thus reduce the required investment in pictures.

Doings in Oklahoma and Texas

The Arcade theatre at Denison, Texas, has been completely overhauled, remodeled and made practically new, both inside and out.

J. E. Pearce has purchased the Grand Opera House at Galveston, Texas, and will redecorate, renovate and make the house entirely new, at an early date.

J. E. Elliott at Thorndale, and the Palace theatre at Nacogdoches, Texas, have installed Velvet Gold Fibre screens and will add other improvements soon.

Eugene Kennedy has taken over the Jewell theatre at Rusk, Oklahoma, and will add many new improvements, promising no more jumping or dim lights on screen.

Dan Myers is remodeling a building at 208 Broadway, Muskogee, Okla., which will soon be converted into a first-class motion picture house.—Noble.

"Bellevue" Installs Minusa Screen

The Minusa Cine Screen Company of St. Louis has installed a 19 by 14-foot Golde Fibre screen in the Cinema Bellevue, Zurich, Switzerland. This is one of the biggest foreign installations ever made, and is expected to lead to other orders from that country. John Sutz, manager of Cinema Bellevue, in a letter to Minusa company, states that the screen has proven entirely satisfactory.—Barrett.

New House for Willimantic, Conn.

There is to be another motion picture house at Willimantic, Conn., by early fall, according to Abraham Krug, owner of property on Union street. He states that he has notified Boyle & Murphy, contractors of the business block, of which the cellar and foundation have already been laid, on property between Union and Main streets, that he has decided to change the plans. His original plans were to have a two-story business block with bowling alleys in the basement.

According to the announcement of Mr. Krug, he plans to tear down the old building now on the site and to erect a theatre with a frontage of 90 feet on Union street, a depth of 80 feet, and providing a seating capacity of 1,000.—Agard.

Electrical Units

Lesson 1—Part II

THE terms of mathematical equations usually consist of letters as their use simplifies and condenses the equations. These letters have a definite meaning and stand for some one definite thing. Thus I ordinarily means electrical current; E is used to denote voltage or electrical pressure; R stands for resistance, etc. These are the meanings we shall give to the use of such letters in future articles.

Electricity is a very peculiar thing. What it is no one really knows. We know what it does but do not know what it is. To be sure, there are numbers of theories concerning it, but these are merely scientific guesses. However, its actions are pretty well understood, and these are the things we are most interested in.

Current

The word current is used to describe flowing electricity or electricity in motion. Coulomb (coó-lomb) is used to denote the quantity of electricity. A coulomb, however, means a certain quantity of electricity at rest. Should the electricity be put in motion so that one coulomb passes a given point in one second, then we say one ampere is flowing in the conductor. The ampere takes its name from Andre Marie Ampere, a French professor, in honor of his important electrical discoveries. Coulomb per second is rather an awkward phrase, so we say so many amperes, remembering that one coulomb per second equals one ampere. Hence, if a certain motor draws 10 amperes from the line, we know that 10 coulombs per second are being used to drive the motor and its load.

Voltage

In order to cause this current to flow some kind of a force must be applied to drive it. A pressure must be exerted on the current to make it flow through the carrying wires and electrical machinery. This pressure is called "electro-motive-force," or E. M. F., for short, and is caused by what is known as the difference in potential between two points. We often hear electric power lines referred to as high potential lines or low potential lines, which means that these wires are charged by the generators in the power station to either a high or low potential. It is the potential difference between two wires of an electric circuit which determines the E. M. F. and hence the amount of work which can be done under a given set of conditions. This E. M. F. is measured in volts. The volt is named in honor of Allesandro Volta, an early Italian professor in Physics.

If a difference of potential is set up between any two points on the same conductor, electricity will flow until the difference no longer exists, or in other words, until the potential difference is zero. This, however, does not apply where the difference in potential is caused by a generator, for if such is the case, then electricity will flow in the circuit continuously.

The earth has been chosen as representing zero potential. Usually certain wires of electric circuits are grounded, or electrically connected to the ground, in order to limit the potential difference between the wires to a certain determined figure. In the case of alternating current circuits, such grounding prevents the accidental existence of very great differences in potential and is a safety measure. Thus certain wires of residence electric currents are grounded to prevent persons receiving fatal shocks should they accidentally make contact with the wires. If the circuit was not permanently grounded and an accidental ground was caused elsewhere, such a high potential difference might exist as would cause instant death if contact with the wires was made. From what has been said it can be seen that in order for current to flow in a circuit, the circuit must first be "closed," that is, have no breaks in it, and secondly, voltage must be impressed or applied across the feed wires. If the resistance of the circuit is not changed, then the higher the voltage is the greater will be the current. There can be no current without voltage, but there can be voltage without current, as in the case of an "open circuit."

As stated before, the potential difference, or E. M. F., is measured in volts and the everyday name applied to it is voltage. If this distinction is kept in mind, it will help the student understand many electrical actions later to be described.

Resistance

When a given E. M. F., or voltage, is driving a current of electricity through a conductor such as a wire, it does so against the resistance of the wire. That is, the wire partially obstructs or hinders the current from flowing through it peacefully, so to speak, just as friction slows down the motion of a revolving wheel.

Electrical resistance acts in the following manner: It causes a reduction in the voltage applied to a circuit, and the reduced voltage in turn permits a smaller current to flow through the circuit. This reduction in voltage is called "voltage drop" or just "drop." Thus if a certain current is required to flow through an electrical machine, proper allowance must be made for this "drop" and a higher voltage must be "impressed," or applied, across the machine than would be necessary if no loss due to "voltage drop" were present.

Ohm's Law

Resistance is measured in ohms (named after George Simon Ohm, who discovered the relation between current, voltage and resistance, now called Ohm's Law.)

Now the current flowing through a circuit; the voltage driving this circuit and the resistance offered to the current are all related to each other. That is, if we know any two of these quantities, we can easily find the third. This relation can be, and usually is, expressed as an equation as follows:

$$E = IR$$

Remember that E means voltage, I means current and R means resistance. This, then, simply means that the voltage (E) is equal to the current (I) multiplied by the resistance (R). We know, from last week's article, that these terms can be changed around in almost any manner we require. Thus

So we see that the voltage divided by the current is equal to the resistance and also the voltage divided by the resistance is equal to the current. It must be remembered, however, that these relations hold only where these quantities are taken from the same circuit. As an example, suppose we close the switch of an electric circuit and then connect a voltmeter across the two wires and it reads 100 volts. Then we break one of the wires and connect an ammeter across the broken parts and it reads 4 amperes. By simply dividing the voltage, 100, by the current, 4, we find that the resistance of the circuit was 25 ohms.

This equation, which is known as Ohm's Law, is really the most fundamental one of electricity. It combines the three principal quantities, voltage, current and resistance, and is applied to all circuits whether of direct or alternating currents.

When studying this law ask yourself these questions:

1. If the voltage is increased and the resistance is not changed, does the current increase or decrease?
2. If the voltage is decreased and the resistance is not changed, what happens to the current?
3. If the resistance is increased and the voltage is not changed, how is the current affected?
4. If the resistance is decreased and the voltage is not changed, how does the current act?
5. When the current is changed and the resistance is not, how is the voltage affected?
6. When the current is changed and the voltage is not, how is the resistance affected?
7. If the resistance is zero, what happens to the current when voltage is applied?

Change of Policy

JUST because the policy of running a great many of the letters received from the various members of the N. A. M. L. in this Forum has been discontinued, is no indication that the interest in the League is decreasing. The editor is in receipt of ever increasing membership applications and interesting letters telling about the efforts made by the projectionists to correct the evil of mutilating film.

The present series of articles is being run in an attempt to present the most useful technical information to projectionists, thus allowing him to secure comprehensive technical knowledge for his work.

It is highly advisable that each article as it appears in the NEWS be filed for future reference both because references will be made to data in past articles and also for the purpose of compiling a complete booklet on electrical and optical subjects.

FRAMES THAT INCREASE PATRONAGE

An attractive entrance or lobby draws, holds and actually increases patronage—no question about it. The theatre-going public appreciates any special effort made to tickle its fancy.

Frames can make or mar your entrance. Shoddy, weather-beaten frames reflect poor showmanship. The program inside is judged largely by the frames outside.

Power

When an electric current flows through a circuit. work is done. If a motor be connected to a power line, electrical energy is changed to mechanical energy and work is done in causing the armature of the motor to revolve. The energy required to do this work is called power, and is measured in watts or kilowatts (one kilowatt equals 1,000 watts), named after James Watt, an English inventor. Thus we often hear of the power necessary to drive a certain machine or to do a particular job. In electricity the value of the power used in doing a certain kind of work, say, driving a motor, is obtained by multiplying the voltage applied to the motor by the current flowing at that moment.

In equation form it means this :

where P means power. Thus we see that a 100 watt incandescent lamp, when burned on a 110 volt circuit, has flowing through its filament and hence through the supply wires. In other words, it is drawing 0.9 ampere from the line.

$$\frac{100}{110} = 0.9 \text{ ampere}$$

Power Loss

No machine is 100 per cent efficient; that is, it does not change all of the energy put into it into useful work. A certain amount of energy is lost in the machine. Manufacturers of electrical machinery are constantly striving to improve the efficiency of their products. Efficiency is measured in per cent of power delivered to power supplied. Thus

The figure 100 is used to express the efficiency as a whole number such as 90% instead of 0.90.

It was explained under "Resistance" that a certain "voltage drop" occurs whenever current flows in a circuit. This voltage is lost in forcing the required current through the wires and hence represents just so much lost power. The voltage drop is expressed as follows:

$$E = I\ R$$

but we just said that power was lost in getting the current through the wires, and this is

$$P = E\ I$$

or

$$P = I^2\ R$$

This power loss is called the "I-squared-R-loss" or the copper loss, and is present in every part of the electrical circuit. Wires, then, used for transmitting power have an I^2R lossas have also motors, generators, transformers, etc. In fact every piece of electrical machinery has an I^2R loss which, in addition to other losses such as due to wind resistance (in the case of revolving machines), magnetic losses, etc., use up power and so reduce the power output or the efficiency.

As will be brought out more fully later, this partly explains why motors always draw a higher current from the line than that obtained by dividing the KW (kilowatt) rating by the voltage.

Horsepower

The rating of electrical machines, by the way, is sometimes expressed in "horsepower," or simply "HP." Horsepower, like kilowatt, is an expression for power. If a motor had a rating of 1 HP, it would be capable of lifting 550 pounds, a distance of one foot in one second of time. Hence, in one minute, it could do sixty times that amount of work, or it could lift 33,000 (55 x 60) pounds, a distance of one foot in one minute. There are numerous ways this 1-HP motor could do its work It could, for instance, lift a 1-lb.weight a distance of 550 feet in one second, etc. Any work, as a matter of fact, which would result in the motor doing 550 foot-pounds of work in one second.

1 HP = 0.746 KW (746 watts).

Thus, to change KW to HP, divide by 0.746, and to change HP to KW multiply by 0.746.

Dear Ed.:

Enclosed please find 25c. and also blank filled out. I have been puting this off long enough. Have been interested in the Motion Picture News for a long time and whenever it comes I am in the habit of turning to the N. A. M. L. Simplified Electricity for Projectionists

Dear Ed.:

I would like to become a member of the N. A. M. L. I believe it is a great step in betterment of motion pictures. I know how tiresome and disgusting it is to have a film full of misframes. The Cinema Pan-Americano, the firms which I work for, handle nothing but first class pictures and I am chief projectionist for the American Theatre for over nine years and I am giving good service.

Enclosed find 25c. in stamps and blank taken from your News for which please send me a button and also labels. Please send blanks as my assistant operator and others on the Cinema Pan-Americano circuit want to become members.

Truly,
Sigismund Ballin,
America Theatre,
Christobal, Canal Zone.

Dear Editor:

Recently I have been following the page in the News which is devoted to new members of the N. A. M. L. and after considering all the facts I believe this is as good if not better than any Motion Picture Union. I am enclosing 25c. in stamps for my button and a supply of labels. I surely do hope I am accepted because I want everyone to know that I belong to such a worthy league.

Here's to better projection,

Eugene Paxton,
Opera House,
Piedmont, W. Va.

Dear Sir:

On the 16th of last month I sent in my application for membership in the league. You probably did not get it. Hence I am sending another blank which I trust you will accept. Enclosed is 25c. in stamps for button.

I am a constant reader of the Forum and get a lot of information from it. Will ask a few questions later on.

There are a lot of punch hole artists in this locality but I am doing my best.

Yours for better projection,

William Holbrook.

Motion Pictures by Daylight

A new type projection machine that will show motion pictures in broad daylight has been announced by G. W. Lightfoot and Marvin Cohn, Seattle inventors. Their statements in regard to the machine are backed up with a small model that demonstrates the principle. The machine is said to be a radical departure from other inventions designed to show motion pictures in daylight, in that it requires no screen to reflect rays from the projector.—Prager.

Equipment Installed

Sales and installations announced recently by the B. F. Shearer Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle, include two new type "S" Simplex projection machines sold to Manager Joseph Muller of the Palace Hip theatre, the Seattle house owned and operated by the Ackerman and Harris circuit, featuring vaudeville and first run photoplays.

Two projection machines were also sold by the Seattle organization to L. C. Brown, of Duvall, Washington.—Prager.

Canadian Construction Review

According to official review of construction in Canada during 1922, moving picture theatre contracts for building or remodeling formed one of the largest items of the construction industry in the Dominion outside of public works, private dwellings in the aggregate and factory plants. The statistics show that 38 theatres were built or rebuilt during the past year in Canada, the total cost of the work being $1,189,300. This does not cover decorating, furnishing or equipping any of the structures. There are approximately 900 theatres in Canada, all told, so that over four per cent of all houses were affected by constructional contracts.

An Unusual Standard

THE careful inspection of every foot of film shipped from STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES astonished a recent visitor at our plant. "Why," this film man asked, "do you go to such expense? Your inspection experts are rejecting hundreds of feet of film for minute marks or blemishes that nine persons out of ten handling that film would never notice.

"YOU are holding your organization to a standard of excellence that can be appreciated only by those who themselves are experts in laboratory work. Do the results justify this extra trouble and expense?"

THEY do. The busy producers who are benefitting by STANDARD SERVICE, the distributors selling STANDARD PRINTS may not take the time to figure out why, but they realize they are getting more for their money at STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES than they ever have before. They have forgotten they ever had a "laboratory problem." They realize the superiority of our service from day to day; they realize that STANDARD PRINTS look better and wear longer. They leave the rest to us.

"ADAM'S RIB"

Breaks Record of

"MANSLAUGHTER"

IN NEW YORK

"Adam's Rib" opened at the Rivoli Theatre, Sunday February 25.

The total paid admissions for the day were 8992.

The total paid admissions for the opening day of "Manslaughter" were 8939.

All indications point to a long-run record.

IN LOS ANGELES

"Adam's Rib" is now in its fourth week at Grauman's Rialto.

In the first three weeks it broke the "Manslaughter" record for the same period by $2300.

The crowds were so big that special Saturday morning matinees were necessary.

Like every other DeMille picture, "Adam's Rib" will break records everywhere.

DeMille can't make anything but record-breakers. He doesn't know how!

The Elegy of Pola

By Edwin Schallert

A SHRIEK rent the air. It was the climax.

The torment of music ceased, and Pola Negri, a quivering, throbbing, brooding black mound of nerves lay huddled together upon the floor in front of the gilt doorway.

Slowly, almost tenderly, to an accompaniment of plaintive melody, a half-naked Nubian slave bent over her, touched her and then, with the semblance of a deep sorrow etching his face, lifted her to her feet. As he wound about her the lace of a mantilla, she stood swaying a moment, her eyes listless—empty their wells of feeling, her head beating back and forth in a dull rhythm. Then, step by step, hesitatingly, uncertainly, she half tottered out beyond the range of lights, beyond the camera itself, lost seemingly in a hypnotic mood that overhung scene and setting and onlookers, a mood nocturnal and vast as the surging, passionate desert blast that had swept and wasted and finally was destroying the bloom of its exquisitely deceptive flower—Bella Donna.

I had been watching one of the final scenes in Miss Negri's first American picture. Nobody but would have admitted this a privilege. It was, in fact, almost lese majesty for any stranger to be on the set. Nearly as many permissions had to be obtained to enable me to look on as are required for an audience with a Grand Lama. At least, I was told that they had been obtained, but the possible significance of this excess of formalities was absolutely lost on me once I came aboard Baroudi's love barge, where it was securely moored to the floor of the studio stage. I am not particularly concerned with formalities, anyhow, not even when they concern Europe's most celebrated screen actress.

Baroudi's love barge was the background for the culminating emotional scenes of Pola Negri in "Bella Donna." The hysterical episode I had just observed, with, I might say, almost bated breath, was one of these. The heroine had just received her blunt congé from the sheikish Oriental exquisite, who had ensnared her. She was left quite alone in a world that did not love her and did not want her. The dark lotus of her charm was broken, the leaping flame of her youth was dying away. Destiny's tragic claim was written on her brow, and one sensed for her the approach of the blackest hour——

> Less than the dust beneath thy chariot wheel,
> Less than the rust that never stained thy sword,
> Less than the trust thou hast in me, my lord,
> Even less am I, even less am I——

Truly, I believe, you have never yet really seen Pola Negri on the screen. Always there has been some obscuring fault of make-up. Even as it has actually clouded her resplendent beauty, so, too, I feel, it has but half disclosed her radiant art.

To behold her now, fully illumined by the dazzle of our insurpassable lighting, and the minute excellence of our photography, will be like a glorious revelation. Lily-white her hands and face, orchidlike the spirit of her beauty. She is at once the sinister nightshade, and the white lotus, a blossom of ecstasy and a bloom of torment—

> A dark cool night, and oversweet
> With tuberose breath;
> A jeweled javelin in the heart,
> Ecstatic death.

Those who have appeared in her picture have confessed to me their absolute inability to cope with her. They accuse her, in fact, of not giving a single thing. She rules the set absolutely as its mistress, and that is something that can well be understood after one watches her and realizes how much of herself she literally hurls into her acting.

She has been known to stand for minutes before a mirror, pretending to be making up her lips or her eyes. In reality she was not making up at all. That was only a pretext. She was going through her preparations for the next episode. She tested every expression of her face, studied it from every angle, endeavored to get over some undreamed-of nuance of feeling, some absolutely new light of eyes, curve of lips, engraving of forehead, to eliminate if possible a spoken title, which titles, she frankly admits, and with a positive venom in her voice, "I hat'."

To Pola Negri music is the essence of her art. One might almost say that it is also the essence of her being. To it may be ascribed the vivid fluency of her acting. In Europe she was accustomed to have only the finest sort of compositions to accompany her acting—Tschaikowsky, Beethoven, and sometimes—though rarely, because he depresses her—Wagner. On her arrival in Hollywood she cast out all the jazz ensembles that were brought her as if they had been the seven devils. It was only after many fits of temperament and finally an absolute refusal to work, I believe, that she finally obtained a makeshift of piano and cello that pleased her. A feverish Lament of Grieg had been selected as the motif for her closing emotional tempest in "Bella Donna." The melody tossed and undulated beneath the bow of a cellist, becoming every moment more languishing, more restless. As Pola faced Baroudi, and learned that, after her bitter sacrifice of Nigel, the Oriental no longer wanted her, that, in fact, a new Circe had already captivated him, the elegy in tone became a veritable delirium. One sensed almost a demand from the actress that the music should be her stimulus; one felt that the players played for her as they had never played before. Such, indeed, is the magnetism—the well-nigh uncanny bewitchment of Pola.

Strangely, fantastically, in tune with her desespoir, the while, was the love boat's Nirvana harmony in black and gold—a subtle Oriental harmony built on one of those weird scales of tone that come out of the heart of the Far East. The deep inlays and intricate patternings of the narrow doors became momentarily deeper and darker. The grilled windows, fretted with a design as dainty as Chantilly lace, were lost in the febrile mists. The deep divan cushioned with inky and yellow silks, became wan as in the light of dawn, its fitful purple scarflike coverings softening to amber, and its rose and fuchsia hangings to a methitic mauve. One sensed, too, almost the sick lapping of the waters of the Nile, and the oppressive portents of pyramids and sphinx and desert waste.

I know of no other setting that more admirably seemed to accommodate itself to the moods of its star, even as it also breathed so much of the storied wonders of the incensed far away. The skill of George Fitzmaurice, the director, who promises to become truly

A Triumph of American Screen Craft

THE COURT OF MIRACLES, THE Thieves Market, the private rooms of King Louis, the gem-like chapels of the mighty Cathedral of Notre Dame, its towering facade with its twenty-four heroic saints and its mystic interior . . . slums, mansions, picturesque streets, crude carts bumping over the cobbles, the bright figures of Esmeralda, the dancing girl, and Phoebus, king's courtier, in their deathless romance . . . Clopin, sinister king of the beggars . . . Quasimodo himself, recreated from a priceless etching by Victor Hugo's own hand . . . all, all are there in the most fascinating and meticulous detail.

SETTINGS THAT COVER ACRES, yet built like a watch . . . mobs that hurl and swirl with passion, yet handled like an army under the orders of a smaller army of directors . . . six months of study of dress alone . . . three months of building the greatest picture sets ever constructed . . . three hours of "make-up" each day for its principal character . . . watch for this picture and marvel at the organization behind it. Only in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" will the world ever see the great cathedral as it appeared in all its glory in the 15th Century . . . "a monument to Human Faith . . ." only in this marvelous picture . . . which is more than a picture . . . a Record for the Ages!

What is the man doing?

He is examining picture costumes thru blue glass.

Why blue glass?

To see the colors as they will screen.

Why do the players yellow their faces?

To cut out the natural red in the skin—otherwise their faces would look too dark.

Who is this man?

The most famous character player in screen history—LON CHANEY—who will play "Quasimodo."

"Salome" is a title the mere mention of which arouses curiosity and interest of any public and pulls for the box-office.

The mysterious woman of history is made flesh and blood, endowed with soul and spirit by Nazimova's realistic artistry.

Fantasy, beauty, allurement, tragedy, comedy, spirituality and passion all are to be found in Nazimova's "Salome."

"This 'Salome' will speak for itself," said Alan Dale in the N. Y. American. "It will say everything the censors will not permit the spoken word to say. It will talk around the very topic that the censors taboo. It is Nazimova let loose. It is Nazimova unchained."

"Othello"

Excerpts from the newspaper criticisms

"Othello" is a full-blooded motion picture. It has vitality, it is direct and true, it is a thing of action. It rises by many degrees of excellence above the usual offering on the screen.—New York Times.

"Othello" is acted with surpassing strength. The great German character actor, Emil Jannings, and that other distinguished German, Kraus, combine two superb performances and bring to Broadway what is beyond question the finest acting that is on view here at this time.—Quinn Martin—N. Y. World.

"Othello" excels in film form. A powerful, efficient work. Emil Jannings as the Moor and Kraus as Iago shine in a brilliantly balanced cast. Technically and artistically pleasing to the mind and eye. A prestige that is given few motion pictures.—Louella Parsons—Morning Telegraph.

"Othello" is presented with all of the splendor and with all of the enormous gatherings which distinguish the foreign productions. Superbly acted with Emil Jannings in the title role. A wonderful production.

Harriette Underhill—N. Y. Tribune.

Emil Jannings is impressive as Othello. He makes the Moor of Venice more human than we have ever seen him before. A motion picture one should not miss. Superbly acted.—Evening Sun.

Shakespeare-in-the-movies gains new and powerful impetus from this production of "Othello." Jannings looks and acts the part in a manner that is sure to add to his fame. The tragic pathos of his interpretation haunts one. Here is an Othello that seems to live the role.—Evening Telegram.

"Barthelmess at his BEST-

A GREAT SEA YARN WITH THRILLS, LOVE, PATHOS

"A great sea yarn with all the thrills, love and pathos usually associated with a Henry King production. It is a story that arouses the interest at the start and holds it throughout and will appeal to all who enjoy virile tales of the deep, with no false morals or over-sentimentality. Advertise the return of Dorothy Gish as Barthelmess' leading woman. This has the virtue of a simple, well-told story, is well acted and produced on a scale worthy of the star and his support. There is good character drawing and everyone contributes his best performance. The fight in a sailors' inn and another on board ship in the last reel are scenes you won't forget for many moons. Barthelmess plays with that quiet restraint that has won for him an enviable place among America's foremost screen stars. Tyrone Power, as 'Dog' Leyton, scores a distinct hit. Dorothy Gish plays with spirit. The sea 'shots' on the 'Lady Spray' are the last word in striking marine photography and constitute some of the best features of this well-made motion picture."—The Exhibitors Herald.

A PICTURE THAT GRIPS YOU EVERY MINUTE

"A straightforward, well-told story with tense drama, suggestive of the surging sea. It is unvarnished in its realism, red-blooded in its treatment and will appeal to all who like virile drama. The role of 'Boy' Leyton gives the star opportunities for some of the best work of his screen career. Director Henry King has given this story a fine production. Nor has the comedy element been neglected. This is strikingly brought out in the role of the little water-front slavey in love with 'Boy.' Then, too, there is pathos that grips the heart strings. The types in this picture are wonderfully well chosen. It holds your attention throughout, and is one of the star's best pictures."—Moving Picture World.

THIS ONE SHOULD GIVE SPLENDID SATISFACTION

"An excellent sea story that should find favor with all the admirers of Richard Barthelmess and Dorothy Gish. Good suspense is developed through the story and a thrilling climax is built up. There are numerous comedy situations that are well placed. This production should give splendid satisfaction. The realism of the sea is actually felt in 'Fury.' All of the scenes have been splendidly made and afford practically faultless atmosphere. There are a couple of thrilling fights. Richard Barthelmess does a fine piece of work. Dorothy Gish is also splendid. The entire cast of characters in fact is excellent and some fine bits of characterization are given.—Exhibitors Trade Review.

Another 'Tol'able David!"

The Film Daily

DRAGS THE AUDIENCE TO EDGE OF THE SEATS

"In this intensely interesting story, Mr. Barthelmess adds another laurel to his histrionic wreath, as the critics say. 'Fury' is one of the most colorful sea dramas ever put on the screen. The picture has a big appeal because it is 'different' in mounting and scenic back-ground. The producers have been unusually successful in transferring the atmosphere of London's Limehouse district to the screen, while the marine end of the production is good because the company has 'shipped' on a regular old sailing schooner. Another feature worth mentioning is the artistic as well as literary titling. These titles add much to the entertaining quality of the picture. From a photographic viewpoint, also, 'Fury' is a notable work. The cast is one of uniform excellence. The care with which the personnel was selected is evident. No finer actor could have been found for the role of 'Dog' Leyton than Tyrone Power. Dorothy Gish as Minnie, a waif, is a delight and recalls her character work in 'Hearts of the World.' Dorothy is a real asset to this offering. Not since 'Tol'able David,' has Dick had a chance to put up such fistic battles as he presents in this vehicle. His fights are the last work in realism. The picture opens with a thrilling battle between two terrible looking brutes. These scenes drag the audiences to the edge of the seats and we predict that most folks will remain there most of the time this one is unwinding. While the action is tense the picture is not without its comedy relief. 'Fury' is well worth while. It is fine screen entertainment."—Motion Picture News.

HERE'S AN UNUSUAL CHANCE TO CASH IN

"Not since 'Tol'able David' has Richard Barthelmess had such an opportunity, and not since this famous production of last year has he accomplished such excellent results as he does in "Fury." Here is an unusual opportunity to "cash in." Barthelmess seems to live the part. You can tell your folks that this is the best thing Barthelmess has done since 'Tol'able David,' and that it ranks high in comparison with that popular production. You can also tell them that Henry King, who made 'Tol'able David,' directed Barthelmess in this, and that he has an unusually powerful cast including Dorothy Gish. She has never had a better part than in this."—The Film Daily.

Gentlemen:

We played your picture "The Hottentot," Feb. 7-8-9, and I wish to say that I have had more compliments on this picture than on any picture I have played in the last ten years.

People met me on the street and complimented me for showing it. We had only booked "The Hottentot" for two days run at the Chippewa Falls in our Rex Theatre, following a five days' run at our O'Klare Theatre at Eau Claire, at the close of the second day's run the requests came in so strong for another day's showing we decided to hold it over, and it went big the third day, this being the first picture to hold up for three days in Chippewa Falls.

You have the picture and the publicity possibilities, and if the exhibitor lays down on the job, he will get the crowds after the first run for everyone leaving the theatre will send back everyone he meets in telling them "Do Not Fail to See 'The Hottentot,'" the biggest yet, and they did come. Wishing all the success in the world to this one, I am,

Very truly yours,

Play up Douglas MacLean as the man who put over the big laughs in "The Hottentot." Read what the Exhibitors Herald says

"Fast action and a host of farcical situations. An excellent vehicle for Douglas MacLean and registers as very amusing entertainment. Rapid fire stunts with laughs in plenty. The subtitles are full of pep, and it is directed with praiseworthy skill. High grade farce comedy, alive with comical absurdities. By no means devoid of thrills that fetch the spectators on their tiptoes. Douglas MacLean works with tremendous vim and energy."

The Independent Producer

WE find a great deal of interest in the fact that Samuel Goldwyn is back in the field—as an independent producer.

Whenever this forceful individual moves he moves in a considerable way. He has resolutely pioneered in the past and he is pioneering now in that he is throwing all his resources into the pot of independent production.

We find it, we say, interesting.

For one thing it is convincing, practical encouragement to the independent producer everywhere. A man who has been through the mill of large industrial organizations now sees fit to produce independently with an entirely new conception of the present and future structure of this field.

And this move upon his part together with the new plans of other prominent executives is pretty clear and convincing proof to us that this industry is on the eve of a new era.

And that era is the one we have consistently hoped for and tried, in our own way, steadily to point to—an era of fewer pictures, better pictures and longer runs.

It was the fashion several years ago when production upon an ambitious scale was planned to have it led by and dependent upon a national distribution machine. It was thought necessary to have this machine actually precede and therefore completely dominate production.

Today, at last, the picture is the thing. The scheme of production starts in and of itself. It isn't designed to feed a machine, it isn't made with break-neck haste to meet distribution demands and to the end of supporting distribution. It takes the time, all the time and the independent thought, the creative effort and the unsparing devotion that good production must positively have.

The result—inevitably—is fewer, much fewer pictures, but much better ones, the kind the public is so evidently demanding today. And this new scheme of things is going to reorder the motion picture map.

Mr. Goldwyn is not the only experienced leader who has seen the light. But his weight is going to give impetus to the new order and in the interest of the whole industry, its health and true growth, we welcome it.

Fairbanks, Pickford, Et Al.

FROM the West Coast comes the news of an association of the screen's leading stars, the stated object of which is to secure fair prices from the exhibitor.

This broad proposition, of course, deserves details. Undoubtedly those exhibitors are referred to who use local control to lower prices to the breaking point.

And still more details will be forthcoming. So serious a move as this would not be entered into without reason.

But the question that will occur immediately to everyone is: just what is a fair price?

Is it what the producer considers a fair price; or what the exhibitor considers a fair price?

Are these two viewpoints ever the same? What does determine a fair price?

The answer, of course, is percentage. There can be no other.

A percentage arrangement whereby the producer gets so much guarantee for his production investment and the exhibitor gets so much for his theatre investment; and after that—let us say—an even break on the remaining proceeds.

Good-will—the reputation of the producer and the reputation of the exhibitor—will also figure. So, too, will advertising—to be paid for out of the proceeds of the picture.

But it is simple enough. Two reasonable men, each alive to their mutual interests, can get together on this basis. If they can't, there is no basis that ever will be satisfactory.

Percentage playing—let us say it again with the same emphasis we laid upon it five years ago—is inevitable in this field where no standardization of product and conditions and no fair flat rental price will ever therefore be possible.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

SENATOR MEYER LEVY of Manhattan has come out in favor of Sunday performances on the legitimate stage according to a bill which he introduced Tuesday before the lawmakers at Albany.

"It is difficult to see," said Senator Levy, "upon what theory of public policy it is appropriate and permissible to render and perform motion picture plays, vaudeville acts, cabaret performances, etc., and impolitic and immoral to give theatrical performances upon the legitimate stage.

"The ordinary vaudeville or cabaret performance can hardly be said to be more edifying than the average dramatic performance. Considerations of simple justice require that all these entertainments be treated upon the same plane; and inasmuch as it is the sense of the community that these other entertainments be permitted on Sunday, and not abolished, the logic of the situation, its equity and its justice, require the extension of the same privilege to legitimate dramatic performances."

This may go under the head of simple justice insofar as treating the legitimate stage upon the same level as the screen, but if such a bill was voted favorably it would compel members of the acting profession to work an extra matinee and night. Simple justice would be "out" as far as they are concerned, for there would be no chance to enjoy a rest or take a spin in their cars. The professionals who are money mad will probably endorse the senator's bill—those who would forget the footlights for a day will probably cast thumbs down.

Patrons of the picture theatres should shout "Bravo" for with forty or fifty legitimate attractions running Sunday nights, many of them will be able to find seats without parking themselves in the S.R.O. spaces.

LIL' ol' Tut of Egypt, who is making good copy these days, is going to hop right out of his tomb, according to Cecil DeMille, who will breathe life into the royal mummy and use him as a character in "The Ten Commandments." Mrs. Florence Meehan, the Egyptologist on the producer's staff, is on her way to the tomb at Luxor, where she will assemble data for the reproduction of the various royal relics which ornament the resting place of the only Pharaoh who ever made the front pages regularly. The picture, incidentally, will be filmed in Palestine and Egypt.

FLOYD M. BROCKELL, manager of distribution for First National, who has been making a tour of the F. N. exchanges since last January, is now in Los Angeles where he is keeping an eye on productions now at work in the United Studios.

INDICATIONS point toward the complete recovery of John Fairbanks, brother of Doug, who suffered a stroke of paralysis last week, and who, according to the physician in attendance, should be up and around within the next two months. Until such time as John Fairbanks can resume his work as general manager of Doug's company, the star, himself, will double in brass in his new role of executive. His experience in Wall Street several years ago should enable Doug to feel at home in the swivel chair.

We have it on good authority that D. F. has become a Scout Master in the Boy Scouts of America, having been appointed to this position by James E. West, National Boy Scout Executive. The star intends to make a propaganda film for the Scouts in which he will "sell" the Scout idea of clean living, the value of play and exercise of the right sort.

W. C. BACHMEYER, central district division manager for Metro, spent a few days in Cleveland last week, making a study of picture conditions. He has concluded that there are two valid reasons why the film business is so far below normal. One is that people are putting their money in savings accounts instead of spending freely for entertainment. His other reason for the continuation of the slump is the radio craze.

Bachmeyer said that in a little town of 3,500 inhabitants an electrical supply man told him that he had sold 300 radio sets. "Allowing three to a family of each purchaser, and a couple of guests, and you have a movie theatre audience."

THE Screen Writers' Guild of the Authors' League of America has a likely looking cabinet in Frank E. Woods, president; Marion Fairfax, vice-president; Elmer Harris, treasurer, and Lucien Hubbard, secretary. The executive board includes the above officers and Thompson Buchanan, Waldemar Young, Eugene W. Presbrey, Jeanie MacPherson, Mary O'Connor and Milton Schwartz.

MAY McAVOY and Elaine Hammerstein, who took part in the dancing contest at The Ambassador Cocoanut Grove, Los Angeles, the other night, found the prize laurels taken away from them by a couple of non-professionals. The motion picture celebrities who passed out the encores for the two actresses were Mae Murray (why weren't you dancing, Mae?), Claire Windsor, Jack Holt, Estelle Taylor, Corinne Griffith, Marshall Neilan, Alice Lake, Richard Dix, Constance Talmadge, Larry Semon, Florence Vidor, Gloria Swanson, Mr. and Mrs. Earle Williams, Jack Pickford and Gaston Glass.

JEANIE MacPHERSON, who has been in New York acquiring local color for a treatment of the "Ten Commandments," has returned to Los Angeles.

FOR the purpose of correcting the present geographical survey maps, Lieut. George W. Goddard, Chief of the Photographic Section of the Air Service in Washington, is going to "shoot" Los Angeles County from an elevation of 16,000 feet. Famous Players have granted permission to use their laboratories and developing rooms in which to develop the photographs.

WHILE Tom Meighan was in Panama making scenes for "The Ne'er-Do-Well," it became necessary for him to visit Toboga Island. On the way Tom and his company passed Canilos Island, a leper colony. The plight of the lepers, isolated as they are from civilization and eking out a dreary existence, impressed the star so strongly that he decided to relieve the monotony of their lives by presenting them with a projection machine. Arrangements have been made for films to be sent to the colony at regular intervals.

MILDRED HARRIS CHAPLIN is now Mildred Harris again. The former wife of the comedian has resumed her maiden name. This became known last week with her signing of a new motion picture contract in Los Angeles, marking her return to the screen after a year's interlude of vaudeville performances.

LAURETTE TAYLOR seems to have settled down for a long run at the Vanderbilt Theatre, New York, in Fannie Hurst's "Humoresque," which is based upon her story and photoplay of the same name. The motion picture interests should look with deep pride upon the dramatization of "Humoresque." Since it carried such a popular appeal it was destined for production upon the stage. And Laurette Taylor has triumphed again in her portrayal of Vera Gordon's role of Sarah Kantor. All the highlights of the picture are said to have been deftly transferred to the drama. The play is in three acts, with the scenes—all in New York—laid in the humble one-room home of the Kantors in Allen street, in the artist's room at Symphony Hall and in the Kantor West End avenue home after prosperity has come to them. One can see that the plot of the original story and scenario has been followed very closely.

WITH Lent and Easter upon us wouldn't it be a good idea to give a thought to "The Christian," "A Maker of Men," "The Man Who Played God," "Les Miserables," "Quo Vadis," "Shadows," "The Sin That Was His," "The Sky Pilot," "The Inside of the Cup," "The Miracle Man," "The Power Within," "Silas Marner," "From the Manger to the Cross," and "The Unfoldment"?

KING VIDOR will direct "Three Wise Fools," an adaptation of the play which had a successful run on Broadway a few years ago. The three title roles will be played by William H. Crane, Alec Francis and Claude Gillingwater. The last mentioned appeared in the stage version.

ED GALLAGHER and Al Shean are having their day in court. The comedians of the Follies, who have made themselves rich and famous with their "Absolutely, Positively" song, are attempting to prove that they are not so good—while the Messrs. Shubert, on the other side of the argument, are attempting to prove that Gallagher and Shean are in a class by themselves.

It is certainly unique to find actors admitting that they are not geniuses. And it is something extraordinary to find comedy in the courtroom. But the news items have it that Ed and Al and Will Rogers, who is testifying for them, put over an act that made even Judge Delehanty shake with laughter.

Not a bad plot for a motion picture in this court case. The suggestion is free. No copyright.

AGNES EGAN COBB is branching out with her motion picture enterprises. In addition to her duties as distributor of films, she is specializing in leather frames for lobbies, window displays and other advertising novelties. A dozen 36x48 inch leather frames have been placed in the Capitol Theatre lobby.

RALPH SPENCE who dabbles in subtitles for Fox productions and furnishes sketches for the Follies, has written a melodrama entitled "The Ape." A. H. Woods is looking it over.

JACKIE COOGAN gave a party to representatives of the trade and public press at the Biltmore Hotel, last Saturday, and this statement can be taken literally. It was Jackie's party. He treated his guests to the time of their lives, not because a good lunch had been provided, but because in spite of all the success he had achieved, enough to turn the head of the most modest grown up, Jackie is still the most wonderful unspoiled little shaver that can be imagined.

There are stage trained children who are clever—lots of them—and usually they give people who know them privately a "pain." They strut, boast and imitate, and make themselves generally obnoxious.

Jackie doesn't. He is just a natural, lovable, happy little fellow whose expressive face reflects his every thought—a prodigy if you will—but in spite of that a regular boy. And that's saying a lot.

Jackie did most of the entertaining at his party—sort of ran the show to suit himself, ad libing his way along in a manner few adults could improve upon.

The only time he used something that he had "learned" was when he recited "Dangerous Dan McGrew," and a couple of other little poems. And then he proved that the silver sheet isn't the only place where he shines. He read his lines like a trouper. Like many a mother thinks of her son, we almost regret that he must grow up. We should like to keep him always—just Jackie.

GLORIA SWANSON arrived in New York the other day to take in the shops and shows.

"THROUGH the Box Office" is the title of a pamphlet issued by Southern Enterprises, Inc., of Atlanta. The subject matter deals with the box-office records of attractions, featuring two facts of supreme importance to both the theatre and the public—whether or not the picture presented attracts a sufficient number of people to render it a successful commercial venture, and whether or not it attracts a sufficient number of people to make its influence felt in the community.

Recognizing that the motion picture business can not be stabilized until it creates, on the part of the public, a demand for and support of better pictures, this company and many other exhibitors, have been co-operating with Better Films Committees in the southern states for some two years. The conclusions of theory (in addition to the application of the theory) are contained in the pamphlet "Moving Pictures Forward," published by the Atlanta Better Films Committee. Here, by means of four charts, the attempt is made to arrive at conclusions which are the results of observation, based on specific experience.

Many variables, such as weather, counter-attractions, and other local conditions, cause a certain percentage of error in the compilation of these charts. However, these variables have been accounted for as far as possible, and it is believed that in so far as "the conclusions are harmonized with the theory," the evidence here presented is valid.

The pamphlet draws a definite conclusion in that the majority of exceptional pictures are unsuccessful because of a lack of discrimination on the part of the public in selecting its cinema entertainment. The exceptional picture can be rendered financially possible and entertainingly successful when properly promoted by community leaders.

Selznick Corp. Under Reorganization

Consummation to Preserve Valuable Assets and Assure Continued Distribution

A REORGANIZATION of the Selznick Corporation and its fourteen subsidiary companies, including Selznick Pictures Corporation and Select Pictures Corporation, has been in progress for several weeks and affairs are now rapidly nearing a consummation that will preserve the valuable assets of these concerns, assure the continued distribution of released product and the completion of those pictures now in the making and others already planned.

At a meeting of the general creditors held at the Bar Association, New York, February 16th, a committee for the creditors was selected consisting of Hyman Winik, Ralph B. Ittelson, W. C. J. Doolittle of Utica, M. C. Levee of Los Angeles, and Charles Pain of Chicago.

Mr. Doolittle represents the Utica, N. Y., banking interests. Mr. Pain is a prominent Chicago attorney and treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company.

The creditors' plan of reorganization contemplates that the complications involved in having a number of corporations shall be eliminated and a new corporation will be organized to take over all of the assets. The creditors will receive two-year notes bearing interest at 6 per cent per annum, and whenever there are sufficient funds on hand a distribution of 5 per cent of the amount of the notes will be made pro rata.

Creditors to the amount of more than $1,600,000 gave their approval of the plan at the creditors' meeting and the committee has met with success among the remaining creditors.

It will be necessary, the committee points out, that the remaining creditors join the majority as soon as possible, so that the complete plan of reorganization may be put into effect immediately, thereby saving present overhead and distribution expense.

Of the new Selznick product, "Rupert of Hentzau," "The Common Law" and "Modern Matrimony" are completed. Very flattering reports are had upon the first two of these pictures and most favorable offers have already been had from West Coast theatres and for the foreign rights. By all accounts "Rupert of Hentzau" and "Common Law" will rank among the season's outstanding pictures. It is planned to release them at once.

The scheme of reorganization plans to get rid of distribution expense as speedily as possible. It may be that the Select exchanges will be continued under new ownership, but at this writing no distribution commitments have been made. The committee in charge has received a number of offers of distribution, both on the new product and that now in circulation and are considering carefully these offers.

It would appear from information gathered and from the opinion freely expressed in trade circles that with the reorganization quickly under way all debts will be eventually paid in full and considerable assets left over. After the creditors have been paid the remaining assets will be turned back to the stockholders of the Selznick Corporation and its operations will probably be continued. L. J. Selznick is authority for the statement that the remaining assets will constitute a very substantial sum.

Michigan Censorship Bill Defeat Expected

ALTHOUGH a drastic censor bill is now before the house committee, the Michigan M. P. T. O. expects there will be no trouble in defeating it. However, the organization will be "on the job" until said bill is finally acted upon one way or another.

One reason given for the optimistic feeling is that the club women of the state, as a whole, are opposed to political censorship.

Scalping Bill Passed in Penn. Lower House

The so-called "ticket scalping bill" introduced in the Pennsylvania Legislature at the capitol in Harrisburg by Assemblyman William W. Long, of Chester County, has been passed unanimously by the lower branch by a vote of 172 to 0. It is now in the hands of a committee of the Senate. This is the first measure affecting the motion picture industry that has been materially advanced in the present session, although several other measures with a bearing on the picture business have been presented in the House and are now awaiting committee action.

The Long bill provides that every theatrical ticket shall have printed on the face of it the price of admission to the place of amusement and that no one may sell the ticket for a higher price than that designated.

The measure provides a penalty of $500 fine or six months in jail, or both, for violators of the proposed law.

N. Y. Governor Slates Censor Board Abolition

IN a message to the New York State Legislature Monday night, Governor Alfred E. Smith called for the merger of about 100 State Bureaus and Commissions, and the abolition of eleven. The Motion Picture Censorship Commission is included among the boards slated to go. Governor Smith in his message stated that the Censorship Board could be abolished without anyone feeling its loss.

Nebraska Censorship Bill Before Legislature

The censorship bill now before the Nebraska Legislature provides for the appointment of a state board of three members, each to be paid $3,000 a year, and it further provides for an inspection fee of $2 for every reel of film exhibited. The bill states that every reel shall be inspected before being shown in Nebraska.

The committee has taken an action on the bill. Those who are watching the situation do not believe that the measure will be recommended for passage.

New Protective Association Formed on Coast

Screen Stars Will Combat Booking Combinations and Build Own Theatres

THE plans of a group of motion picture stars on the West Coast, headed by Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford, to form a co-operative business organization for the purpose of using their combined strength to combat exhibiting conditions in certain sections, which has been outlined in a general way previously, were given further consideration Thursday, February 22, when Mr. Fairbanks, Miss Pickford, Harold Lloyd, Charlie Chaplin, Dennis F. O'Brien, representing D. W. Griffith, and Joseph M. Schenck, representing Norma and Constance Talmadge, held a meeting at Los Angeles, where all parties pledged themselves to contribute to a fund which will meet the cost of operation of the new organization.

Following this meeting the legal machinery necessary to bring such an organization into being was started and corporation papers are now being drawn. The new company or organization has not been named as yet.

A specific purpose of the organization will be to obtain for the pictures in which the various stars appear more satisfactory playing engagements than have prevailed in the past.

The stars plan to combat exhibitor circuits, arrange for more advantageous runs, which probably means longer runs, in all the larger cities and secure for their product in such districts, cities or towns, known as "closed," the sort of contracts that they believe their pictures are entitled to.

They even plan to build theatres where their interests cannot be protected otherwise.

The meeting held last Thursday was only preliminary, but it is planned to have the new organization functioning at an early date. The organization meeting is scheduled for the very near future.

Immediately following the Thursday meeting a statement was issued to the Associated Press. The text of this statement called, "A Declaration of Independence,' follows:

"Certain combinations and groups of persons and corporations are being formed in the motion picture business which will dwarf the artistic growth of the motion picture, and we, who are directly responsible to the public for the merit of our productions and having a profound regard for this responsibility, deem it necessary at this time to form an organization which will protect the independent producer and the independent exhibitor against these commercial combinations and enable us to keep faith with the public."

What direct action may be expected from the group of stars is, of course, a matter of pure conjecture, but it is known that all of the persons who have banded together have felt that their pictures were not receiving justice in a great many quarters.

The problem of adequate playing dates for the super-picture is considered vital. With practically every key city theatre of importance owned or controlled by a producer or distributor and the policy of many of these houses arranged for a weekly change of bill, the question of getting indefinite run dates for big pictures has become largely a matter of barter. Where the theatre is advantageously situated many pictures made by the stars mentioned above have been accorded no better treatment than an ordinary feature. In some cases two-week runs have been secured, and in others the theatre has paid for two weeks and only used the feature for one week, preferring to take rental loss rather than deviate from the weekly change policy than has been established.

In certain territories some pictures produced by the stars, notably the Fairbanks, Pickford and Griffith productions, have been barred out entirely, the "closed town" managers declining to pay the prices asked or agree to the terms wanted by the distributors.

In the case of Norma and Constance Talmadge, Harold Lloyd and Chaplin, it is presumed that the reason for dissatisfaction arises over their belief that other productions sponsored by the distributors with whom they are affiliated are benefiting at their expense. Mr. Chaplin, too, in view of the fact that he is about to release through United Artists probably anticipates that he will find himself hampered by the conditions under which Mr. Fairbanks, Miss Pickford and Mr. Griffith have labored.

It is also understood that the difficulties of road showing pictures has also entered into the plans of the new organization. Theatres suitable for a big production have not been available in many cities and in consequence "flops" have been encountered where big successes might reasonably been expected under normal conditions.

The fact that Mr. Schenck has joined the new player group has given rise to much speculation. It is assumed that his interest is, in a measure, personal and that he is not investing in a proposition that means the expenditure of perhaps millions without some greater purpose than the advancement of the artistic growth of motion pictures.

The affiliation of Harold Lloyd also brings speculation. So far as is known, Hal Roach, Mr. Lloyd's producer, is not represented.

The question that naturally is asked when the new organization is under discussion is whether or not the various stars are some time in the future planning to release through the same distribution unit.

There is a chance that the player organization may be further expanded by the addition of other stars or production units, for invitation has been extended to "any star of accepted importance and comparing in box office value with those named" to join the group.

Additions to the company must, however, prove acceptable to all the members.

Twenty-Seven Bills Hostile to Industry Defeated

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel of the M. P. P. D. A., this week returned from a four weeks' trip for the Hays organization which took him as far as the West Coast, and which he reports as having been highly successful.

During the trip, he was active in legislative matters and twenty-seven adverse bills were defeated, fourteen of which dealt with additional taxation on distributors and exhibitors, and thirteen with censorship.

Mr. Pettijohn points out that his activities were not merely for the benefit of the producers and distributors in the Hays organization but for exhibitors as well.

He also reports several successful conferences with Douglas Fairbanks and William DeMille on production cost data, and emphasizes the fact that the relations between the Hays office and Fairbanks are entirely cordial.

Mr. Pettijohn left again this week to appear before the Michigan legislature, which is considering a censorship bill.

Wisconsin Legislature Bill Opposed by Labor

Wisconsin exhibitors, with the co-operation of Wisconsin labor, are opposing a bill introduced into the legislature to regulate the showing of moving pictures. Exhibitors say that the bill will not improve motion pictures because at present they are turning down films approved by the National Board of Review and are putting forth their best efforts to present clean films to the public.

The bill reads:

"No person, co-partnership, association or corporation operating any theatre, moving picture theatre, hall or place of amusement exhibiting or showing moving pictures shall show or exhibit any motion picture or film projected upon the screen to which minors under the age of 16 may be admitted, unless accompanied by their parents or guardians, unless such motion picture or film shall have first been passed by the National Board of Review and shall bear the imprint of such film of said National Board of Review; or if not so passed, unless it shall be passed or approved by a committee of not more than three in number appointed by the common council, town or village board, as the case may be, of the city, town or village in which such theatre, moving picture theatre, hall or place of amusement may be located."

Kansas Reformers Beaten But New Tax Bill Looms

Another setback was handed Kansas reformers this week when the State of Affairs committee of the legislature killed the Sunday closing bill, which would have closed all places of amusement on Sunday where an admission was charged. This action followed closely the death blow that was dealt another radical measure, which would have made it necessary for all persons less than 18 years old to obtain a written permit to attend theatres at night.

With both of these bills out of the way, Kansas exhibitors had just begun to breathe easy when a measure, which would levy a 6 per cent tax upon the box office receipts of Kansas theatres to be applied to the school fund, was introduced.

"Such a tax bill, if passed, would put many theatres out of business," R. G. Liggett, president of the M. P. T. O., Kansas, said: "The war is over and there is no justification for such a tax on theatres. Why should we bear the burden any way?"

Goldwyn Loses Suit On Infringement

Court Rules Licensee of Copyright Can Not Institute A Suit for An Injunction

AN important decision to the motion picture industry was rendered by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Southern District of New York on Tuesday, January 30th, in the case of Goldwyn Pictures Corp. vs. Howells Sales Co., Inc., to the effect that in some cases party who owns the sole and exclusive motion picture rights to a literary work cannot sue under the copyright laws to prevent an infringement thereof. The case arose in the following way:

Howells Sales Co. purchased abroad the picture, "Vendetta," starring Pola Negri, which was shown at the Strand theatre, New York City, in December, 1921. About the time of the showing the Goldwyn Pictures Corp. finished a picture starring Tom Moore based upon the story, "Mr. Barnes of New York," of which they owned the sole and exclusive motion picture rights, and sought an injunction. The Howells Sales Co. claimed they were innocent parties in the matter and did not know the story was based or had any similarity to the story, "Mr. Barnes of New York. An injunction was obtained by the Goldwyn Pictures Corp. and on appeal the Howells Sales Co., through their attorneys, Stuart M. Kohn, Charles Tuttle and Charles Katzenstein, raised the novel point that even though Goldwyn Pictures Corp. owned the sole and exclusive motion picture rights to the picture, that they were a mere licensee and therefore could not stop an infringement. The Court sustained this point and vacated the injunction, and added thereto that the only person who could obtain an injunction to prevent an infringement was the copyright proprietor.

Goldwyn then joined Stephens, who was the owner of the copyright to the book, with them and obtained a second injunction. Practically the same points were raised in the second case by the attorneys for Howells with the addition that this second injunction could not stand inasmuch as Stephen had assigned all of his rights to damages for an infringement to Goldwyn. The Circuit Court of Appeals in its decision rendered on January 30th, vacated the injunction and dismissed the complaint against Howells, again stating that Goldwyn as a licensee could not bring the suit, and adding Stephens did no good inasmuch as he had assigned all of his rights to damages to Goldwyn.

This is very important to the picture industry, as the industry has assumed that when they buy the sole and exclusive motion picture rights from an author and pay him for it, that nothing further was to be done and they could prevent an infringement.

Unless the purchaser becomes the proprietor of the copyright he may not alone maintain an action to prevent an infringement of the motion picture produced.

The attorneys for Howells claim that there is a serious question which was not decided in this decision, whether or not the author of a story or the copyright proprietor of the book having sold the exclusive motion picture rights to another, can thereafter maintain an action to prevent the infringement of the motion picture produced under those rights.

Missouri Chain Theatre Bill Defeated

THE Private Corporations Committee of the Missouri House has voted to kill the so-called chain store bill, which would have effected strings of theatres operated by foreign corporations. The bill through a graduated schedule of license fees sought to limit the number of stores or theatres operated by the same concern. It was designed primarily to hit chain grocery stores, but would have affected theatres, restaurants, drug stores or other businesses.

Canada Exchanges Enforce C.O.D. Clause

Twelve important exchanges in Canada, members of the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association, have decided to enforce strictly the C. O. D. clause in all contracts with exhibitors in Canada. This action, which has created wide discussion in moving picture circles in the Dominion, was taken after a number of the Canadian releasing companies had sustained rather serious losses through non-payment of rentals by exhibitors, it was officially stated.

A circular advising all exhibitors in the country that the C. O. D. rule on film shipments is to be enforced was recently sent out in behalf of the 12 companies, the circular being signed by Arthur Cohen, of Toronto, president, and John A. Cooper, Toronto, secretary of the association.

The companies which have decided to demand payment for films on delivery include the following: Associated First National, Canadian Educational Films, Ltd., Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Ltd., Canadian Universal Films, Ltd., Famous Players-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Fox Film Corporation, Ltd., W. W. Hodkinson Corp., Regal Films, Ltd., Ernest Shipman Productions, United Artists Corp., and Vitagraph, Inc., all of whom have their Canadian headquarters at Toronto.

Censorship For Missouri Gets Setback

The Committee of Fifty has about abandoned hope of forcing motion picture censorship in Missouri.

Last week the House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence voted an unfavorable vote on the measure. The Senate committee plans to let the bill die in committee, although a sub-committee composed of Senators Casey, Brookshire and Whitecotton has been named to draw up a substitute bill to provide a censor board composed entirely of state officials. Should the Senators decide to report on censorship this substitute bill would be sent in.

Casey, who hails from Kansas City, at a meeting of the committee Wednesday, expressed the belief that state censorship would come eventually.

Missouri Seat Sale Bill Favorably Reported

THE Missouri Senate's committee on Criminal Jurisprudence has reported favorably on Senator Pickett's bill to prohibit the sale of theatre tickets after every seat is taken. A similar house bill has also received a favorable report.

Bill Would Make Prices Uniform Thruout Week

Introduced before the Pennsylvania Assembly and referred to committees for action is a measure sponsored by Representative Burns, of Philadelphia, which would prohibit persons in the motion picture or other amusement business from having a higher scale of prices for admission for any particular day of the week than that for other days of the same week. The penalty suggested for violation of this proposed law is a fine of $500 for the first offence, and the same fine or imprisonment or both for subsequent offences.

Peter Magaro, prominent Harrisburg exhibitor, who is a vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania and a member of the Legislative Committee of that body, recently appointed to keep a watch on legislation introduced at the capital which might have an injurious effect on the industry, has announced that the committee has given assurance to the members of the billboard advertisers' legislative committee, which is fighting the proposed law that would place a tax of five cents a square foot on all billboard advertising space, that the M. P. T. O. of Pennsylvania is in full sympathy with the effort to defeat this bill and stands ready to lend its co-operation to the billboard advertisers' committee.

Hearst Acquires Lease On N. Y. Park Theatre

William Randolph Hearst has acquired a twenty-one-year lease on the Park theatre, Columbus Circle, New York City, it was announced. The lease is effective immediately, and after the house is redecorated it will be opened as the Cosmopolitan for first run pictures. Cosmopolitan and Goldwyn pictures will be presented, announcement of the merging of the two organizations having been made last week.

It is likely that this is only one of a number of theatres the Hearst interests will acquire in leading cities of the country.

It is said that the opening attraction of the new Cosmopolitan will be "Little Old New York," a picture starring Marion Davies.

Indiana Senate Crushes Censorship Bill

The Indiana State Senate last Monday killed Senator Steele's motion picture censorship bill, when on motion of Senator Harold Vanorman of Evansville the measure was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 40 to 4.

The bill prohibiting commercial sports on Memorial Day, including the Indianapolis speedway races, in which theatrical men were interested, because of the crowds it drew to the city, was passed in the Indiana House of Representatives the same afternoon by a vote of 52 to 38, after a bitter fight. It goes to the Governor, having passed the Senate several weeks ago.

Exhibitor Enters Admission Price Argument

Declares Raise or Reduction Is a Problem for Each Individual Theatre

By Edward L. Hyman
Managing Director Brooklyn Mark Strand

AS a showman who tries to "keep up with the times" and who considers every angle of the problems that arise from time to time, I have been much interested in the expression of opinions concerning box office admissions. A well-known producer has declared box office prices should be lowered so that the attendance may be larger, and a distributor comes right back at him and insists such a course would be folly. This has caused the expressions of opinions to evolve into a discussion, but thus far no exhibitor has had his side of the question aired—and it really is an exhibitor question, not a producer question.

It is my personal opinion that a raise in admission price or a reduction is a question that must be faced and settled by each theatre individually. Even if a theatre is one of a chain operated under one system it should still be independent in the matter of box office admission if it is truly a competitive house operated upon merit and with the end in view of giving its best to the public. Thus, in some cases it may be found advisable to reduce the admission because of local conditions, lack of a show with quality enough to stand up under a certain box office rate, or through a desire to play to more people regardless of investment or overhead. In most cases, however, it appears that when the matter of investment is considered, the quality of the performance is considered and the time and effort put into making the house a success is considered, the average motion picture house is getting only a fair price at the box office and by rights should be getting more.

Could the Brooklyn Mark Strand profit by reducing its admission price?

It could NOT.

On the other hand, it would injure the house in more ways than one. To begin with, a reduction in price would mean that the overhead would have to be cut, and in this case "overhead" means quality and class as well as other things. Then there is investment to be considered, and the Brooklyn Mark Strand has investments in equipment which are additional to the original investment and upkeep. These include a large outlay for lighting effects, which make for artistic color harmonies and greater satisfaction to patrons—and satisfied patrons are, to my mind, the best argument against a cut in admissions.

I have yet to see a movie patron who would not pay for value received and come back for more and bring his friends and neighbors. These people would desert the house immediately were the box office price cut and if the first-class pictures and specialty presentations were modified or eliminated correspondingly. Price reductions in most cases means taking the theatre from one class to a class or two below it, thus changing the class of clientele also.

It can not be denied a lower admission brings a poorer class of trade, hurts the reputation of the theatre and lowers it in the respect of the public, and should the exhibitor ever be obliged to raise his price he would find it a more difficult proposition than it appears on the surface.

The Brooklyn Mark Strand, being a quality theatre, where not only a high standard is being maintained but better things are always in preparation, can therefore move its admission price in one direction only, should it be necessary to move it at all, and that way is forward in justice to the theatre and in fairness to public and management alike. People do not ask for good things unless they have the price to pay, and anyone who has observed our patrons or talked to them could not very well figure out how we could be helped by a smaller admission price.

According to one producer, a theatre cut its box office rate in half and then played to twice as many people. Still, I fail to see where the profit came in, as he doubtless hurt the standing of the theatre by the slash, and his box office statements were no better than before when balanced up. Could not the quality of the performance or the tone of the theatre be improved and permit him to keep the former admission price? And in reducing his admission I have been told he also changed the program THREE times a week, instead of one as formerly, and this fact no doubt accounted for much of the increased patronage. Thus it sums up that quality and local conditions, or a desire to exploit a brand name, really governs admission prices.

Relativity, which Einstein discovered but never dreamed could be applied to our industry, likewise has a bearing on the independently operated theatre. Let's say there is a picture palace on this side of the street with class and individuality and a decent box office price. Next door a competitive house opens and puts on a better show, at more money and pulls them in. Then the first house must try to add quality and class and either keep its price the same or raise it. If the competitive house undersells, giving a good show, you would have to meet the matter accordingly to get an equal chance at the prospects.

Theatres, as are all things, are divided into classes, and some must keep their admissions up not only to maintain a high standard but to keep the patrons who demand quality. I am happy the Brooklyn Mark Strand is in that class.

"Phantom Fortune" Company Is Imperilled by Fire

FLARES used for fire scenes in "The Phantom Fortune" serial early this week set fire to the cabin set, on a small lake near Universal City, causing painful burns and cuts to William Desmond, the star, Esther Ralston and Cathleen Calhoun, and lesser injuries to Robert F. Hill, the director, Lewis Sargent, juvenile, Buddy Harris, cameraman, and three technical men.

The most serious injuries were sustained by Miss Calhoun, who received severe burns over her entire back. Desmond's injuries were received in rescuing her.

The flares used got out of control, the flames spreading to the entire cabin, imprisoning part of the company. Within two minutes the building had been gutted, and the walls collapsed immediately after the cabin had been cleared.

Two motion picture cameras, still camera and all film was lost. It is not expected that this will delay release of the serial.

Disclaims Responsibility in Knickerbocker Suits

CITY COUNSEL for the District of Columbia entered a plea of not responsible in reply to all the damage suits filed by the Knickerbocker survivors. The District asked to be exempted from the list of defendants.

Revised Iowa Censorship Bill Submitted

Representative Gallagher, after having abandoned the idea of state censorship of motion pictures in Iowa in favor of local control over amusements and having withdrawn his moving picture censorship bill, revived the measure for introduction in the House on Friday.

He believes that at least one objection has been eliminated by amending the original measure to cut the salaries of the censors from $3,000 to $1,800 a year each.

Local regulation of all forms of amusement or recreation is placed in the hands of city and county boards of public welfare.

The city board of public welfare would be appointed by the Mayor and Council and would consist of five members, two or three of which should be women. The county board would include the County Superintendent of Schools, the County Attorney and the Supervisors.

Each board, within its own jurisdiction, would be charged with examination of the entertainment or amusement offered and the issue of permits. Permits would be issued annually and would be required for all theatres, dance halls, road houses or similar establishments, and would be subject to revocation.

Gallagher's bill likewise provides for a tax for meeting the expenses of administration of the proposed law. The tax feature will probably be the point upon which the measure will be most vigorously attacked.

Urges Exhibitors Against Paying Music Tax

At a meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, at the Hotel Vendig, February 16th, which was attended by about 65 members, Secretary George P. Aarons urged all exhibitors within a radius of 50 miles of Philadelphia not to pay the music tax and declared that the organization would defend any action brought by the Society of American Authors, Composers and Publishers against the organization's members in that district.

Outside of this territory, where hearings are held in Scranton or Harrisburg, he advised individual exhibitors to pay the tax under protest, purely for economic reasons, declaring that the cost of defending an action in Scranton or Harrisburg would be considerably more than the amount of the license fee. Such fees paid under protest would be returned to the exhibitors in the event of the present cases now pending being decided against the society.

"Jazzmania" in Song Form

In connection with Mae Murray's new photoplay, "Jazzmania," a song of the same name is being published by the Shapiro-Bernstein Company. "Jazzmania" is a Metro picture presented by Robert Z. Leonard.

The title page of "Jazzmania" carries two pictures of the star in scenes from the picture. The lyric was written by Lew Brown and N. T. Granlund. The music is by James F. Hanley.

The music publishing company and the various Metro exchanges are ready to cooperate with exhibitors throughout the country in effecting tie-ups with stores selling sheet music, according to word from the Metro home office. In addition to this, the song will be the theme number of the production.

New Players Join Cast of "Red Lights"

Announcement has just been made that Johnnie Walker, Alice Lake, Lionel Belmore, Frank Elliott and George H. Reed will take part in "Red Lights," Carey Wilson's adaptation of the successful stage play, "The Rear Car," which Clarence Badger will direct for Goldwyn. It has already been announced that Marie Prevost would have the leading feminine role.

American Releasing to Distribute "Quicksands"

American Releasing Corporation announces its distribution of Howard Hawks' all-star production, "Quicksands," which was directed by Jack Conway.

Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix are the featured stars and they are supported by Alan Hale, Noah Beery, J. Farrell McDonald, George Cooper, Tom Wilson, Hardee Kirkland, Walter Long, Edwin Stevens, Frank Campeau, Lionel Belmore, Jean Hersholt, James Marcus, Dick Sutherland, Lou King, William Dyer and Jack Curtis.

American Releasing will issue "Quicksands" at once for pre-release, with its nation-wide release date set for the first week in May.

"Now You See It" Started at F.B.O. Studios

Production was started this week at the F. B. O. studios in Los Angeles on "Now You See It," which is a screen adaptation of the play, "Jerry Comes Home," by Roy Briant. The leading roles in this new F. B. O. drama will be played by Virginia Fox, for two years leading lady for Buster Keaton, and Tom Gallagher. James W. Horne will direct.

The remaining principals in the cast are Tom Wilson, Victor Hotel, Herbert Griswold, Gertrude Claire, Robert Walker, Jack Carlisle, Henry Herbert and Dave Morris.

Theatre Interests Defeat Vicious Measure

Determined to prevent the enactment of a bill which would mean death to many of the theatres of the state, and also determined to kill the bill so forcibly that it would not be brought up in any other state of the Union, two hundred persons interested in the theatre business of the state of Washington on February 16 attended the meeting of the Washington state legislature at Olympia, and the measure was killed without coming to a vote.

The bill in question is known as Senate bill No. 134, and as proposed would levy a 10 per cent tax upon theatre admissions to be taken as revenue by the state. This would be in addition to the present 10 per cent government war tax.

Realizing the utter unfairness of this bill and the harm it would do to exhibitors and motion picture men over the entire United States if it was passed and used as a precedent in other legislatures, L. O. Lukan, general manager of the Blue Mouse circuit of theatres in Washington, organized a special train and took to Olympia the largest gathering of theatre men that had ever been brought together in the state. The demonstration of these theatre men brought the desired results.

N. Y. Assembly Gets New 6% Tax Bill

A bill is to be introduced in the New York Assembly by Charles P. Miller, chairman of the Assembly Committee on Labor and Industries, that will provide a 6 per cent tax on gross receipts of all amusements. If passed it is expected it will bring from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 revenue to the State treasury.

Games and performances specifically mentioned in the bill are theatrical and vaudeville performances, motion picture shows, baseball, football and basketball games; bicycle, automobile, motorcycle and skating races; prize fights, wrestling matches, athletic games and horse races. Amusements and sports for the benefit of educational and religious organizations are not to be taxed.

The bill carries an appropriation of $10,000 for the establishment of a bureau in the State Department for collecting the tax. The proposal has the approval of Democratic and Republican leaders.

Ontario Censors Condemn 44 Feature Pictures

The Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors condemned 44 feature film productions during the calendar year 1922, according to a report of the activities of the board. The censors found that 31.5 per cent of the pictures examined, in addition to the features banned entirely, required trimming before they were considered appropriate for presentation in the 400 theatres of Ontario. The Ontario board passed upon 11,000,000 feet of moving pictures during the 12 months, this amount representing approximately 11,000 reels of film.

The officials of the Board conducted the deletion of portions of pictures themselves which were considered offensive, and the condemned lengths were confiscated. At certain intervals throughout the year the film which had been seized was taken out and burned in a bonfire under official direction. Exchanges whose pictures had been cut were notified of the deletions made so that the same changes could be made in copies of the print examined in case duplicate films were to be released in Ontario.

It is interesting to note that the Ontario Censors made it a practice last year of eliminating close-ups of foreign flags, including the United States Flag. One of the important decisions made by the Ontario Board last year consisted of the banning of an expensive production which was based on a popular and widely read novel. This picture was condemned, it is stated, because it indicated a too flagrant treatment of the unfaithfulness of a man toward his wife.

M.P.T.O.A. Asks Repeal of N. Y. Censor Law

The M. P. T. O. A. has forwarded letters to Senators and Assemblymen in New York State requesting their co-operation in the matter of repealing the censorship law in the state. In addition they have forwarded a letter to members of their organization urging that they get into touch with legislators of their districts and personally solicit their support to repeal the law.

The letter to members of the Legislature calls attention to the fact that the motion picture screen is the visualized development of the printing press and the one phase of the public press subjected to censorship.

The letters were forwarded over the signature of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. A.

A report was current that a petition had been drawn up by certain members requesting Sydney S. Cohen to attend the meetings. He is a member but has not attended during the past year.

Exhibitor-Conferee at "U" City

Eugene Roth Is Engaged as Personal Representaeive of Laemmle on Coast

EUGENE H. ROTH has been engaged as the personal representative of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Company. In this capacity Mr. Roth will be headquartered at Universal City, where he will confer constantly with Universal's production chiefs with a view to supplying the exhibitor angle on all production work to be carried on at the big producing center. The purpose of Mr. Roth's engagement is stated in the following from an announcement emanating from the Universal home office in New York this week:

"As an expert in theatre management and exhibitor problems, he will advise Universal as to what the e hibitor wants."

Mr. Roth, by his theatre activities on the West Coast, has achieved a prominent place in the ranks of the country's exhibitors. Until recently he was associate managing-director of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainments, operating a chain of theatres in San Francisco, including the California, the Imperial, the Granada and the Portola.

In its announcement of the appointment of Mr. Roth to the Universal City post, Universal had the following to say concerning the acquisition of Mr. Roth's services:

"This is a distinct innovation in the production field, and marks a great forward step on the part of Carl Laemmle and Universal to attain a more perfect type of box office picture. It means a closer tie-up between producer and exhibitor and should make for greater good will between Universal and its exhibitor patrons.

"Laemmle has long laid great emphasis on the exhibitor's angle. The past year or so have seen a series of innovations in the Univarsal organization looking towards closer co-operation between the box office and the studio. The most recent was the creation of eight Assistant General Sales Managers, who, as home office representatives, now spend their time in the various territories, getting the theatre owner's ideas as to what kind of pictures he needs.

"The acquisition of Roth as an exhibitor-conferee, is the culminating step in Universal's campaign to approximate a 100% salable product. He already has assumed his duties, and is concentrating his energies at Universal City, where Laemmle, Julius Bernheim, director general of Universal City, and Homer Boushey, production director at the big studio, are in continual conference over Universal's forthcoming product.

"Roth's fame as an astute e hibitor is not only national, but reaches around the world. Since the time twelve years ago he opened the Portola theatre in San Francisco, the first of the Rothchild's chain, he has constantly been in the lead in exhibitor progress. He combines original ideas of showmanship with an uncanny understanding of what the public wants. His ability has had much to do with the success of the Rothchild interests."

"THE CHECK-UP"

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third column, the number who considered it "Average"; the fourth, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fifth column, those who considered it "Big."

The last column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Average," 50%; Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Among the Exchanges

DAN ROCHE, of Famous Players-Lasky, Chicago, has left for Detroit and Pittsburgh, where he will superintend exploitation campaigns on "The Covered Wagon." Mr. Roche will probably be away from Chicago for two or three weeks. He recently put over some successful exploitation stunts on this picture in New York and broke into the columns of the metropolitan press, for columns of space, with his bull team and old time covered wagon.

Charles Perry, former manager of the Capitol and State Theatres in Minnesota and St. Paul, has been brought to Chicago by Manager Manske, of American Releasing Corporation, to cover Illinois territory as a salesman. Mr. Perry is an experienced film man, having been connected with the Ruben and Finklestein organization for several years.

Bill Brimmer has joined the United Artists' sales staff and has been assigned to cover city territory by Chicago Manager Eichenlaub.

Harry Phillips, live-wire Universal salesman, is knocking them cold on Universal week bookings, having already lined up twenty-nine theatres, which will show nothing but Universal features, comedies and news reels for a solid week.

Manager Jack Sampson, of Film Booking Offices, has extended a special invitation to all exhibitors, to call on him in connection with the anniversary week of his company. He has his exchange all dolled up in honor of the occasion, including a monster birthday cake with one candle on it.

Joe Friedman has added three salesmen, well known in Chicago territory, to his staff of Celebrated Players' hustlers. They are Al Gallas, Lee Woodyatt and Mort M. Krueger, all of whom have recently been connected with Select.

Ira Firman, who has been connected with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the past four years as traveling auditor and in other capacities, has been appointed assistant manager at the Chicago exchange and has arrived from New York to assume his duties.

Niel Agnew, of Paramount's Chicago sales department, has been transferred to the Milwaukee exchange, where he will take over the duties of manager as successor to G. A. Durlam, who has been made a special representative for Paramount. Jack Frost is back in the booker's office at Chicago, after helping to get the Peoria office started.

William A. Shalet, St. Louis manager of United Artists, who has been in the city for several days, reports business good in his territory, and that the slight slump caused by the excessive cold weather is past.

Floyd Brown, Indianapolis manager of First National, was visiting Chicago this week, and while here called on bookers of circuits which operate theatres in his territory.

R. Hinard, of Lebanon, Illinois, expects to have his new theatre, The Gem, completed and ready for business by the first of May. This will give Lebanon a first-class movie-house, which is said to be much needed.

John Weigler, manager of the film business of the Sauvage Amusement Enterprise, Alton, Illinois, has had the misfortune to lose his son.

Spyros Skouras, well known St. Louis theatre man, and holder of the First National franchise there, was in Chicago last week and while here visited Sam Katz and looked over the presentation at the Chicago theatre.

H. W. Pitner, of the Rex theatre, Fairfield, Illinois, is undergoing treatment at the hospital at Olney, Illinois.

Mr. Peter J. Schaefer, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, is now in Paris, according to latest word received from him. He had been spending some time in Berlin, and witnessed first hand the results of the French seizure of the Ruhr Valley. He expects to remain abroad for at least two months more.

John J. Jones, who has been confined to the Wesley Memorial Hospital with an abscessed ear, was sufficiently recovered to leave for his home the early part of the week and it is expected he will be back on the job within a few days. Another Jones, Linick & Schaefer official, who has been laid up with the grippe, is General Manager Norman Fields, who has been forced to be away from his desk for several days.

Arthur Schoenstadt, of Schoenstadt & Sons, is scheduled to arrive at a European port this week, aboard the Berengaria, and expects to be gone for some months. It is a combined business and pleasure trip and while abroad Mr. Schoenstadt expects to study the picture situation and foreign conditions generally as they affect the industry.

A. L. Brentlinger has resigned as a member of the board of directors and manager of the Indianapolis office of the Consolidated Realty & Theatres Corporation, and the Indianapolis office will be merged with the Chicago branch, which is located at 332 S. Michigan avenue. It is understood that Mr. Brentlinger did not wish to make his headquarters in Chicago and for that reason handed in his resignation. A sales office, however, will be continued in Indianapolis.

Ralph Crocker, of the Star theatre, Elgin, reports that "The Third Alarm" did a tremendous business at his house, both on opening day, which was Sunday, and on Monday, which is usually a dull day for Elgin motion picture theatres. The fine co-operation secured from the fire department in putting the picture over, and the big exploitation campaign worked out by Exploiteer Kramer, of F. B. O., in co-operation with Mr. Crocker, brought the crowds in and caused a hold out constantly during the run of this feature, which, Mr. Crocker reports, pleased his patrons.

Around the Trade

ILLINOIS Motion Picture Theatre Owners have tried casting their bread upon the water, and in the words of the old prophecy it is returning to them many fold. Following is the letter mailed to leading theatre men in the Chicago territory with a real one dollar bill enclosed, which is calling forth prompt replies:

"Knowing your time is valuable—it will take only five minutes of your time to reply to this letter, for which please accept our payment of one dollar, which is attached hereto:

"Do you believe an organization of all theatre owners in Chicago film distributing zone would be of mutual benefit to its members? Yes— No—

"Do you believe that legislation of any kind adverse to the interest of the exhibitors can be more successfully combatted by a solid organization than by individuals? Yes— No—

"Are you willing to ally yourself with such an organization? Yes— No—

"If this interests you will you favor our organization by becoming a member? Yes— No—

"(On Return Page) I am enclosing check for the following houses for: Fees ——— Dues for 1922-23 ——— (Strike out fees if you are a member.)"

The first answer received was from Aaron J. Jones, president of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, who said in part: "Yours of the 21st received with dollar enclosed, which the young lady who is writing this letter is taking to buy candy with. In reference to all of your questions I would answer Yes, Yes.

"Enclosed find checks as requested."

The checks mentioned by Mr. Jones amounted to $150, covering the dues for the Orpheum, Lyric, Rialto and McVickar's.

Officials of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners are pleased over the interest shown by exhibitors in the questionnaire sent out for the purpose of assisting the Department of Justice in collecting information on the activities of the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, and have already received more than one hundred questionnaires fully filled in. It is thought that the information obtained by this means may cause the Department of Justice to take action against the Society, and all exhibitors are urged to fill in and return the questionnaires to the headquarters of the I. M. P. T. O. at 752 South Wabash Avenue immediately.

The Le Claire theatre, the handsome new house at Moline, Illinois, was opened on February 24th with Sam Levine, well known in Chicago through his former connection with Jones, Linick & Schaefer, as manager. "Jazzmania," Mae Murray's latest release, was the opening feature, and a great crowd attended the premier performance at the Le Claire theatre.

Charles A. Niggemeyer, who now is putting on the presentation and special numbers at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's McVickar's theatre, is rapidly forging to the front and making a reputation for himself as a master along this line. "In a Nobleman's Garden," last week's presentation at McVickar's, was declared by many picture critics as one of the most artistic and effective ever staged in Chicago.

Attractive Lobby Made Up of "Singed Wings" Cut-Outs

Beaumont, Texas.—Manager Tom Clemmons built a most attractive lobby display to advertise "Singed Wings" at the Tivoli theatre. He made use of the poster 24-sheet to furnish him cut-out letters and a scene from the picture.

These cut-out letters were hung on invisible wires across the entrance to the lobby and the large scene cut-out showing Bebe Daniels dressed as a moth hung on other invisible wires stretched across the entrance to the lobby.

Mr. Clemmons placed heralds under the front doors of two thousand homes several day's in advance of play date. He also used a series of teaser ads in the newspapers.

Special Lobby Display Put in on "The Hottentot"

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—Manager Sid Helsdon of the Arcade theatre did the lobby over for "The Hottentot" to resemble the entrance to a race track. The Hottentot colors of black and white formed a silk ceiling covering. Two box stalls were built in the lobby's reinforced floor. These were lined with black silk inside and a black and white checker effect on the outside. Two beautiful white horses were tied inside the stalls during the time the picture was running.

Perfect co-operation was obtained from a riding academy which not only furnished the horses for the stalls but provided a street parade of five horses at very little cost because of the advertising it gave the academy.

The natural tie-up for a steeplechase picture was effected when the Quarry Drug Company put in a window display of liniments. The figure of Sam Harrington picking himself up after his first introduction to "The Hottentot" was used in a window still with the caption: "We recommend Quarry's liniment for Sam Harrington after his ride in 'The Hottentot.'"

Auto Tags Given New Line for "Eternal Flame"

RED OAK, Iowa—Manager H. C. Beardsley of the Beardsley theatre temporarily forgot the anti-speeding slogans for auto tagging, and gave his "Eternal Flame" tags a different catch line. Sniping space on all vacant automobiles on the street, he attached a tag bearing the copy:

"This automobile is not For Sale as the family will probably need it to carry them to the Beardsley theatre to see Norma Talmadge's greatest picture, 'The Eternal Flame.'"

Prizefight Window Cards for "Leather Pushers"

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Joe Weil, Universal exploiteer, designed an effective window card for "The Leather Pushers" at Manager Irving Rosenthal's Benenson theatre in Harlem. Al Suchman, supervisor of a chain of theatres, asked Weil for an inexpensive exploitation stunt.

The result was a window card, printed in red, with a cut of a boxer at one side, the copy reading: Prize Fight. Kid Roberts (Reginald Denny) vs. Joe Kenney, the Chickasha Bone-Crusher, for $5,000 purse. Ringside seats (orchestra) 22 cents; loges, 30 cents. The theatre name and billing followed.

These cards created wide comment and got the attention of those interested in the manly art.

Identification Contest Is Run On "The Pride of Palomar"

Milwaukee, Wis.—Bob Gary, Paramount exploiteer, sold the Wisconsin News on the idea of running a special feature with the caption, "One Guess—It's Worth It," on "The Pride of Palomar," playing at the Butterfly theatre.

As a guessing contest it wasn't one at all, and so strictly conformed to the mail regulations. It consisted of pictures of Marjorie Daw, Forrest Stanley, and other featured players of the production. Their real names were given, but a blank left for the character they were to impersonate in the picture. This ran five days in advance of the showing.

The only guide the participants had was the fact that a week before the story had completed its serial run in the Wisconsin News and the stunt not only benefited the theatre but tied up with the fiction feature of the News as well.

Unusually Complete Campaign for "The Third Alarm"

Chicago, Ill.—A campaign of unusual thoroughness, involving a tie-up with John F. Cullerton, Fire Commissioner of Chicago, was put over for the engagement of "The Third Alarm" at Barbee's Loop theatre by the management, in conjunction with J. J. Sampson, manager of F. B. O.'s Chicago exchange, and Louis Kramer, F. B. O. exploiteer, who handled the details.

A small percentage of the gross receipts was given to the Chicago Fire Department. In return for this small percentage the Fire Department placed the last horse-drawn steam engine Chicago used in front of Barbee's theatre. They also placed the first pump Chicago ever had, a relic from the days of 1852, on the street in front of the theatre. The Fire Department secured permission of the police to allow the equipment to stand there day and night for two weeks.

A fire company composed of the very latest motor-driven apparatus of the department was paraded through the Loop every two hours from 11 A. M. to 8 P. M. to show the contrast between the old and the new apparatus. This apparatus carried big banners calling attention to "The Third Alarm."

Commissioner Cullerton wrote the Boy Scouts and asked them to co-operate in an extensive fire prevention campaign in which the Scouts were to perform their "one good deed each day" by collecting rubbish in yards and alleys to be burned at a public bonfire. Mr. Cullerton also made arrangements with John Dill Robertson, Superintendent of Schools, to have a special "Third Alarm" fire drill in all the public schools in Chicago.

Signs were placed on all fire boxes calling attention to the location of the box and also carrying the injunction to see "The Third Alarm" at Barbee's. With this same idea in mind, signs were placed on all fire hydrants instructing automobilists to comply with the parking law. The signs on the hydrants also instructed all to see "The Third Alarm." Both signs carried the signature of the Fire Commissioner.

An ad was then run in the papers advertising for a beautiful and daring girl to jump from the roof of Barbee's theatre into a life net at 2 o'clock on the opening day of "The Third Alarm." While this ad gave all the details of a jump, it did not say that a girl was going to jump. It merely advertised for a girl to jump. Kramer received 64 applicants who were willing to make the jump, while hundreds came down to see the girl on Monday.

"On the High Seas" Given U. S. Navy Tie-Up

WICHITA FALLS, Texas—Manager Robert Sparks of the Olympic theatre advertised "On the High Seas" with a tie-up with the local naval recruiting officer. Special one sheet posters were printed to read:

"Join the Navy for a Life of Thrills 'On the High Seas,' such as Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt at the Olympic theatre, Thursday-Friday-Saturday."

These one sheets were posted on the regular one-sheet board used by the Navy and placed up and down the sidewalks in the business district.

In the lobby of the theatre Mr. Sparks placed material that had been loaned him by the naval recruiting officer consisting of life savers, sailor uniforms, anchors and other maritime equipment.

Timely Teaser Campaign with Local Angle for "Gimme"

Richmond, Va.—The exploitation campaign for "Gimme," which Goldwynner William N. Robson exploited for its showing at the Colonial, was featured by a series of "Gimme" teaser ads tied up with local events and institutions which were run in the Richmond newspapers a few days before the first showing of the film.

These teasers were a column in width and 1½ inches deep. They were scattered through the newspapers and the top line of each ad was in small letters, "Everybody has the gimmes." Then followed a catch line, underneath which were the words "See 'Gimme' at the Colonial theatre all next week."

Here are samples of some of the catch lines used in these teasers: "Chief Justice Taft says: 'Gimme a seat on the Richmond bench.'" "Richmond Horse Show says: 'Gimme big crowds every day.'" "Grace Merchants' Association says: 'Gimme action.'" "Richmond says: 'Gimme good roads.'" "Masons say: 'Gimme good weather this week.'"

Chief Justice Taft was in Richmond to attend a memorial service to Justice Knapp. The Masons were holding a convention in Richmond. There was a local application to all of the teasers.

Brilliant Prologue Is Staged To 'Under Two Flags"

Baltimore, Md.—Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises, operating the Century theatre, staged a lavish and brilliant prologue for the showing of "Under Two Flags," recently, in which twenty-two people took part.

A special set was built to represent the interior of a harem. The color scheme was made up of old ivory, buff, purples, blues and garnet.

As the curtain rose the scene faded in with a color wheel effect and as the stage gradually brightened the girls of the harem, arranged on either side, the Sultan seated on his dais, the Sheik by his side, the favorite wife beside the Sultan and the slave fanning him, were discovered, forming a tableau.

When the lighting became brilliant Cigarette came on and danced before them. After that a duet was sung by the Sultan and the Sheik. This was followed by a dance by the favorite dancer.

As this last dance ended a tableau was again formed by the company and the lights faded into a deep purple, and as it became dim a moving flower effect was thrown across the stage from the projection room. This moving flower effect across the stage kept up until the stage was dark, the players in the prologue had departed unseen by the audience, the orchestra had begun the introduction to the feature picture and ended as the title of the feature picture, "Under Two Flags," was drawn on the screen.

Puzzle Angle Given Chinese "East Is West" Ads

WATERTOWN, N. Y.—Manager Charles Sesonske, of the Avon theatre gave added interest to his advertising in advance of "East Is West" through giving a puzzle angle to the advance teasers.

He offered a prize of $25 for the first correct translation of the Chinese characters advertising "East Is West." The reward was still unclaimed when the picture ended its run, but the stunt had served its purpose of stirring up interest and curiosity in the advertising.

Prominent Citizens Quoted on "Dangerous Age"

CLEVELAND, Ohio.—The exploitation campaign on "The Dangerous Age" at the Allen theatre included a stunt in which prominent Clevelanders were asked to give their opinions as to what they regarded as "The Dangerous Age" of life. They were also asked to state the dangerous age in their particular line of business.

The interviews brought out many differences of opinion and the prominence of the individuals who allowed themselves to be quoted, was sufficient to insure stories in two of the Cleveland papers.

Pretty Neck Contest Boosts Showing of "Ebb Tide"

McKEESPORT, Pa.—A new angle in contests was used to exploit "Ebb Tide" by Manager Charles Eggers of Frank Panopolos' Lyric theatre. He tied up with a local dealer in La Tosca Pearls for a big window display. Mr. Eggers also found a resident of McKeesport who had travelled in the South Seas and had some original diving pictures showing natives fishing for pearls. These were put in the display and attracted a lot of attention.

The theatre also tied up with the newspaper for a pretty neck contest in which local beauties had a chance to wear the necklaces, and prizes were offered by the management for the prettiest.

"Strangers' Banquet" Ad Made Subject of Contest

Wilmington, Del.—The management of the Arcadia theatre used the page advertisement from the press book for "The Strangers' Banquet" as a newspaper contest for the showing of the film.

Pictures of 24 of the players in the film were printed as a border around the page ad. No names were given, but in one corner was printed a list of prominent motion picture players; in the list were the names of the 24 whose pictures appeared, interspersed with names of other players not in the cast, in order not to make the contest too easy.

In connection with the tie-up, the Evening Journal offered eight cash prizes—$15, $10, $5 and five of $1 each—for the first correct list of the players pictures. The response was so much greater than had been expected that the contest editor had to call upon the management of the Arcadia theatre to help check them up.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" Is Given Heavy Advertising

New York, N. Y.—As an advertising campaign prior to the showing of "Down to the Sea in Ships" at the Cameo theatre, special teaser ads were run in all of the New York papers.

On the day of the opening, a mammoth papier mache whale was perched on top of the marquee. A ripple machine running along the side of the whale gave the appearance of flowing water. At the same time the Knickerbocker Drug Store, at the corner of Forty-second and Broadway, carried a window display showing relics gathered during the hunt for the whale, which plays an important role in the production. This display had been in crowds for the previous week.

The lobby of the theatre was decorated with harpoons; nets, rope coils, and oil paintings hung in the interior lobby.

An attractive prologue introduced the feature attraction. This consisted of novel lighting effects flashed upon a back drop. The faint outline of a vessel, such as used in the production, was shown with port and starboard lights. It was a night scene, and, as the singer sang from off-stage, the lights gradually came on, giving the stage an appearance of early morning.

A monstrous size whale made out of cardboard and mounted upon a truck with large billing painted on each side was drawn through the busy thoroughfares announcing the appearance at the Cameo theatre.

"Strangers' Banquet" Stunt Aids Two Theatres

SAN BERNARDINO, Cal.—Manager Frank L. Browne of the Strand theatre, and Goldwynner L. W. Barclay, in exploiting "The Strangers' Banquet," used 550 post cards, carrying a picture of the Los Angeles California theatre orchestra, sending them to a mailing list of San Bernardino people. The card bore what was apparently a personal message from a friend visiting in Los Angeles, urging the recipient to see the picture when it came to their town.

These cards were made up for the California theatre, to be used for regular mailing list work. By tying up an outside house, Mr. Barclay helped that theatre, boosted a picture, and advertised the California theatre in a point within its district. The exhibitor paid printing and postage.

Exploits "Dr. Jack" on Heels of "Grandma's Boy"

Columbus, Ga.—I. C. Holloway, manager of the Grand theatre, started his campaign on "Dr. Jack" immediately after the run of "Grandma's Boy," six or eight weeks ahead of play date. From that time on there was always a one-sheet, three-sheet or some stills on display in the foyer to remind them that "Dr. Jack" was coming. An occasional slide also brought it to their attention.

A week in advance Mr. Holloway covered his usual stands with paper. At the same time he filled ten show windows with ones and threes, circus fashion. These windows cost him a few passes.

Saturday before opening Thursday, "Dr. Jack" bags and Harold Lloyd goggles were given to all the kids at children's matinee. These novelties were good for admission to see the picture so the kids hung on to them and talked all week. During the week before playing, four "Jacks" (the novelty heralds) were given to some of the men as they went out. This always got comment and a laugh.

Mr. Holloway wrote 38 personal letters to the physicians of Columbus, telling them about the picture and warning them that he wouldn't trade with them if they didn't trade with him.

A co-operative page was run in the afternoon paper on opening day. A truck was bannered and kept on the streets all day Friday and Saturday. This cost nothing except for cloth for the banners.

Redding Returns — to Exploit "Back Home and Broke"

Greeley, Colo.—The return of the prodigal was staged in thorough fashion when a mysterious Tom Redding announced in the Greeley papers that he was "back home and broke."

Gently prodded by the Sterling theatre and Rick Ricketson, Paramount exploiteer, the merchants came in for a double-truck newspaper ad in which they said to Tom Redding, "We remember when you bought knives, spoons, tops, blue jeans, etc., in our store. You have unlimited credit, so go to work and make your mark in Greeley, your old home." This was the sentiment in each ad.

Ricketson got the merchants' clubs, chamber of commerce, and the mayor to meet Tom at the station when he arrived. In the absence of any other handsome man, Ricketson impersonated Tom.

The newspaper carried stories of the reception, and the next day the Sterling theatre took space in which Tom asked for somebody to stake him while he tried to make good.

The Weld County Credit Association replied with an ad the following day offering Tom unlimited credit so that he could marry the girl "back home."

When the Sterling thought the whole town was interested, it sprang the dope that "Back Home and Broke" was Thomas Meighan's latest picture, and that Tom Redding was the star's role.

Telephone Is Used in Novel Way with "Dr. Jack"

GREENWOOD, S. C.—Manager W. A. Byers of the Liberty theatre, in his campaign for "Dr. Jack," played up the catch-line: "The greatest laugh you'll have in 1923."

Playing card heralds were distributed to the homes and Harold Lloyd spectacles were given to the children on their way to school.

On opening day the telephone was used in a novel way. The following message was delivered to all residences: "Hello! This is Dr. Jack talking. I understand that you have not been laughing well lately. I will be able to give you a laugh appointment at 2, 3:30, 5, 6:30, 8 or 9:30 at the Liberty theatre. I will be in town just two days."

"Voice from the Minaret" Is Given Colorful Prologue

New York, N. Y.—Managing Director Joseph Plunkett of the New York Mark Strand theatre provided a prologue to "The Voice from the Minaret" with excellent atmosphere.

The orchestral overture, "Scene Fantastique," was followed by "The Swan," with Mlle. Chabelska as premier danseuse. As an interlude between short subjects, Mlle. Klementowiz and M. Bourmann did a Russian folk dance.

To introduce the feature a back drop was lowered, showing the roofs of Damascus with the muezzin in his balcony calling the faithful to prayer. The scene was reproduced in all the natural coloring of the sun baked city of Arabia. A woman penitent on the stage rendered "The Desert Love Song." She was Eldora Stanford, soprano, and the solo became a duet when J. Horace Smithey, baritone, joined in the verse. The concluding bars were the signal for the lowering of the scrim and the flashing of the feature title.

Road Signs and Contest Used to Exploit "East Is West"

Wichita Falls, Texas. — In addition to decorating his lobby elaborately for "East Is West," Manager Robert Sparks of the Olympic theatre placed road signs on every road leading into Wichita Falls which read: "East Is West."

These signs were placed one week in advance of play date and were covered three days in advance of play date with follow up signs giving the play date and the theatre. All the roads carried the signs from five to fifteen miles out of the city.

Mr. Sparks carried out successfully the "winking" contest as outlined in the press sheet. He also arranged a tie-up with a local art teacher to conduct a "poster" contest among her students, having them to draw posters and announcements.

This "poster" drawing contest was tied up with the "winking" contest since all drawings of Constance Talmadge were to show the star winking. These drawings were displayed in the theatre lobby the week before the picture opened and during the run of the picture were placed around town in prominent windows and at soda fountains.

Striking Lobby Display for "The World's Applause"

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—Manager S. S. Wallace, Jr., of the Capitol theatre arranged a lobby display to advertise "The World's Applause" that attracted considerable attention.

The display was made of beaver board and was painted and cut to represent purple plush curtains drawn to one side by a gold cord. Behind this curtain was a cut-out of Bebe Daniels shown in her dancing costume and on this cut-out played a spot-light. The effect was that of a stage, which created the proper atmosphere for the theme of the picture.

"Front Page Story" Boosted by Paper Through Tie-Up

TOLEDO, Ohio—Another angle in the way of a newspaper tie-up on "A Front Page Story" was evolved by the Toledo Blade and the Temple theatre. In several cities, front page contests, with prizes offered for the best stories by readers, have been used, but the Blade employed a tie-up of its own.

The picture had frequent reference to the value of newspaper advertising and uses the expression "Want ads get results." The Blade, for two weeks before the showing of the picture at the Temple theatre, ran a two column scene cut from the production each day with a brief synopsis of the story and closing:

It shows that Want ads get results. Phone your ad now to the Blade.

Novel Musical Presentation Is Used with "Dangerous Age"

Brooklyn, N. Y.—A special presentation feature, in the form of an overture along novel lines, was used by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre, in connection with the showing of "The Dangerous Age."

Eight classical numbers were selected, and then eight modern popular numbers that sound rather similar to the classical ones were chosen. First the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, directed by Alois Reiser, would play a number, and then would play the piece that sounds like it. This mixture of classical and popular music (sixteen numbers in all made up an exceptionally well balanced overture. The street song from La Boheme, which sounds like the popular number, "Carolina Sunshine," was placed to close the overture as its heavy passages permitted full use of all members of the orchestra and a flourishing finish was possible.

The overture was accompanied on the screen by a special film which Managing Director Hyman had made, and which named the music as it was being played, in addition to making various comments, sometimes with a vein of wit and sometimes to give information.

The numbers used were "Chasing Rainbows in the Sky" and Chopin's "Fantasie"; "Avalon" and an aria from "La Tosca"; "Just Like a Rainbow" and a melody from the opera "Lohengrin"; a song from "Love Birds" and "Rustle of Spring"; Chopin's "Minuet Waltz" and a song from "Irene"; "Cuba" and "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah"; "The Vamp" and "Madam Butterfly"; "Carolina Sunshine" and the street song from "La Boheme."

Code of "The Old Homestead" Is Sold to Another Town

ELKINS, W. Va.—The code of "The Old Homestead" bids fair to become as popular as Coué's "Day by day" slogan.

The twelfth town to be sold on returning to the standards and customs of "The Old Homestead" is Elkins, coincidentally, of course, with the run of the picture at the Hippodrome.

Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount exploiteer, arranged the tie-up, which kept two-column spreads in the newspapers and editorials all during the run.

Attractive Lobby Prepared for "East Is West" Campaign

Asheville, N. C.—Manager J. B. Carroll, of the Imperial theatre, began well ahead in his campaign on "East Is West."

Four days in advance the inside foyer was decorated with Japanese lanterns and umbrellas and a large banner announcing attraction and play date. All lithographs were posted a week in advance and trailer and slides were started at this same time.

An exceptionally neat and attractive Chinese display was put in the lobby Saturday night before the opening Monday. The box office was converted into a Chinese tea room. On each side of the box office were large arches, Chinese in design, leading over rustic bridges. Over each arch the title was painted in real Chinese letters. The floor of the lobby was covered with sod and had gravel walkways leading to the box office. The standard frames along the sides of the lobby were decorated with bright artificial blossoms. A cut-out of Constance Talmadge in Chinese costume stood just to one side of the box office.

"Third Alarm" Is Tied Up with Muncipal Bond Issue

St. Louis, Mo.—Tom McKean, city salesman for F. B. O., called out the St. Louis fire department to exploit the showing of "The Third Alarm" at the West End Lyric and Capitol theatres, Skouras Brothers houses.

St. Louis was to vote Feruary 9 on a $88,000,000 bond issue for municipal improvements, including $772,000 for motor apparatus for the fire department. McKean took advantage of that fact to hook up his film with the bond issue and the fire department.

Mayor Kiel, at the request of Fred J. Eiseman, chairman of the bond issue publicity committee, then wrote a letter to Fire Chief Panzer authorizing the use of an automobile hook and ladder truck, two modern automobile pumpers and two old-fashioned horse-drawn engines to exploit "The Third Alarm."

One of the features was a stunt in which an athlete jumped into a life net held by members of the fire department. Large cut-out posters were also placed at prominent street corners, showing the fire department's interest in the picture.

The tie-up obtained first page publicity in the St. Louis papers.

Dance Pre-view With Prizes Is Given on "Knighthood"

Portsmouth, Ohio.—A special pre-view showing, together with a dance, was used here as a special exploitation measure of "When Knighthood was in Flower."

Manager Fred Tynes, of the Columbia theatre, hired a local ballroom, two orchestras, and gave away $30 in gold as prizes to the young women wearing gowns modeled after any costume worn by Marion Davies in the picture.

The admissions were $1.50 a couple, and three hundred and ten people paid their way, which more than amortized the expense. These people made a splendid nucleus of word-of-mouth advertising. The newspapers played it up as a news feature.

Harry C. Swift, Paramount exploiteer from the Cincinnati exchange, helped with the exploitation and brought with him Harry Ross, Paramount district manager, and Morris A. Milligan, branch manager, as guests of honor.

Kiss from Star Is Novel Stunt for "Queenie"

TORONTO, Ont.—The management of the Furby theatre, in advertising "Queenie," sent each person on its mailing list "a kiss from Shirley Mason."

The "kiss" was a print of the lips of the star in red ink on a small post card and proved its worth when many fans throughout the city telephoned the Furby for additional copies.

The card explained "that Miss Shirley Mason is responsible for the very latest fashion in souvenir cards. She conceived the idea of leaving the imprint of her lips on cards sent to her dearest friends. She rouges her lips well, kisses the card and sends it to the lucky one."

Vocabulary Test Used as Stunt to Aid "The Hottentot"

Topeka, Kans.—If anyone doubts that the hardest job on a newspaper belongs to the Contest Editor, he should communicate with that person on the Topeka State Journal, who gained his experience at the time "The Hottentot" played the Isis theatre.

G. L. Hooper is owner and manager of the Isis and Raymond B. Jones is publicity director. Between the two of them they evolved the plan to have the State Journal sponsor the contest called a "Vocabulary Test." Readers were asked how many words they could spell with the letters used in "Douglas MacLean in 'The Hottentot.'"

The stunt was not new, but it has not been used in Topeka for some time and drew results.

The first reply totaled 2,722 words. Who wants to be a contest editor?

Bottle of Harmless Liquid Is "Strangers' Banquet" Aid

Richmond, Va.—Goldwynner William N. Robson, in exploiting "The Strangers' Banquet," at the Colonial theatre, decided to invite all Richmond to a "strangers' banquet" and began to pass out sample bottles of the liquid part of the refreshments. This publicity stunt started something he had not expected—or perhaps he did. At any rate, the telephone at the Colonial theatre soon began buzzing with requests for samples, as well as with reports from those who already had samples.

These reports grew to such an extent and were so widely disseminated that even the State Food and Dairy Inspection Board sent for samples.

A quiet rumor was circulated around Richmond—of course, Robson had nothing to do with this—that these small bottles contained real champagne of rare vintage and were being quietly passed out to a limited few of the recognized patrons.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch and the Richmond Evening Dispatch ran half-column accounts of this stunt and the stir it caused in Richmond, thereby adding fuel to the fire started by the innocent little bottles.

HAROLD LLOYD in Safety Last

Harold Lloyd and Hal Roach have for years been making comedies that with every picture have been getting better and better.

With each great picture it becomes harder and harder for star and producer to make one even greater.

When "A Sailor Made Man" was released every critic felt that the utmost in comedy had been created.

Yet "Grandma's Boy" followed and exceeded it. Then "Dr. Jack" topped the amazing records made by "Grandma's Boy" both in house receipts and in laughter.

"Safety Last" has accomplished the apparently impossible by being better. It has proven that there are no limits of achievement for Harold Lloyd.

There may not be anything new about the manner in which R. C. Borg, assistant manager of the Kansas City Educational branch, has selected to gain the personal acquaintance of exhibitors in Kansas and Missouri, but the sincerity with which he has started the task has little rivalry. With salesmen who know the exhibitors of both states, Mr. Borg has toured the territory, returning this week from the trip, in an effort to establish a personal friendship with each exhibitor and learn his actual needs. Mr. Borg, who started with Educational two years ago as a booker, has experienced a steady climb upward since that time.

Jottings from Washington and Vicinity : :

W. W. HODKINSON, president of the Hodkinson company, spent several days in the city from Wednesday to Saturday, staying here over Washington's Birthday and with Mrs. Hodkinson attending the Institute of Government at the Willard. His Collier's contribution was responsible for his being asked to speak here. Friday he was a visitor at his Washington exchange.

Floyd A. Ramsdell, film producer of Worcester, Mass., was also a local visitor over the Washington holiday.

Manager F. L. McNamee, of F.B.O., announces that the vacancy in his publicity-exploitation and sales organization, caused by Exploiteer Rockwell's resigning to become Washington correspondent for a Boston paper, is now filled by W. B. Corby, formerly with Universal, at Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Corby while handling exploitation is also selling in the Virginia field.

Fred Klein has returned to the Washington office of F. B. O. and is again calling on his friends among the exhibitors.

Film exchange robberies have been a big topic of interest the past week. Some professional film robber smashed the plate glass window in the new building of the Fox Film company last Sunday and secured films valued at $500. It is also learned that later in the week films were taken from the exchange of the Vitagraph company in the same building on New Jersey at K street. Private operatives and police detectives have so far failed to catch the thieves.

F. A. Schauss, of the New York office of Pyramid, who made his second visit to Washington last week, is now planning to stay here indefinitely, overlooking the activities of Messrs. Fox and Drake, in charge of the Washington branch and Baltimore sub-office respectively.

Washington's film center learns that Col. A. C. Frey, of the well known West Virginia and Maryland Exhibitors' Corporation, of Spates & Frey, is now recovered from a year's illness. He is expected to visit local exchanges soon, and will later resume his monthly visits to Washington.

Local exchanges have received information that Floyd Lininger, of the Tri-State Amusement Company, has taken over the Piedmont Opera House at Piedmont, W. Va., thus giving control of the city and the sister town, Williamsport, Md., across the river, to his enterprises.

Mr. Goldstein, of the Washington Paramount office, city manager, for the Famous Players, resigned, effective last week, and entered the theatre manager class, operating a neighborhood theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Harry M. Crandall, in reply to sixteen of the more than fifty suits brought against him as a result of the disaster over a year ago, filed on last Tuesday a motion to strike out each of these sixteen cases' declarations. Through Attorneys Wilton J. Lambert and Rudolph H. Yeatman, Mr. Crandall says the declarations are faulty as they misjoin both parties and cause action in violation of court rules. As "a friend of the court" he points out the Delaware dissolution and urges in each separate paper that action be brought against the court receivers in Delaware.

Motion pictures of hitherto unknown sections of former German Africa were recently shown before the National Geographic Society by T. Alexander Barnes, British explorer.

Seattle Exchange Briefs and Northwest News

L. O. Lukan

THE Allied Amusement Interests of the State of Washington, an organization that has been in existence for several years, but has not been active, is being reorganized here under the general direction of L. O. Lukan, of the Blue Mouse circuit. The organization is coming as a result of the realization on the part of state amusement men that a general organization for their own protection is a necessity. The membership includes owners and operators of film exchanges, motion picture houses, vaudeville and legitimate houses, baseball associations and cabarets. A local body of the organization is being formed in Spokane by Ray Grombacher and H. C. Lambach, and will eventually be drafted into the general state body. Fifty membership applications were received by Mr. Lukan in the first two days that he started the reorganization drive, and the membership of the body is expected to swell to large proportions in a very short time. Co-operating with Mr. Lukan is Joseph Muller, secretary of the body, and manager of the Palace Hip theatre. A treasurer to succeed George Hood, who left this city for the East recently, will be chosen soon.

The worst snow storm that Seattle and the surrounding territory has experienced in the last seven years occurred the middle of February and played havoc with theatre business for two days. Traffic in the city was tied up for over twenty-four hours, and several motion picture houses were forced to operate with but a small percentage of their employees on duty. Quick relief from the effects of the storm was offered by the city, however, and business the following week resumed normal proportions. Only one large Seattle house was forced to change its bill in the middle of the week because of weather conditions.

Oliver G. Wallace, famous organist from Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles, and more recently from the new Granada in San Francisco was expected to preside at the console of the Wurlitzer as guest organist when "Robin Hood" opened at Manager Leroy V. Johnson's Liberty theatre the end of February. Mr. Wallace achieved his first fame at the Liberty here several years ago, and arrangements were made by Jensen-VonHerberg to bring him back to his home city as a special attraction during the Robin Hood engagement.

William Cutts, representative of the Universal film company, left the city recently for Los Angeles, after spending the past several weeks in Seattle and surrounding territory. On his way to the South Mr. Cutts expected to stop off at Portland and visit the Universal interests there.

The week of February 18 was a local "Lon Chaney Week" in Seattle, so termed because of the fact that the actor was playing at three of the city's theatres. At Manager Frank Steffy's Coliseum he was featured in "Shadows." At the Neptune, Manager Ben Larson featured him in "Oliver Twist." Manager H. B. Wright, at the Strand, played "Quincy Adams Sawyer," which included Chaney in the cast.

F. M. Brockell, manager of distribution for the First National Exhibitors corporation is expected to arrive at the local exchange about March 5, on his first tour of the country. Mr. Brockell will arrive here after visiting other exchanges on the way to the coast, and will visit Vancouver, B. C., during his stay in the local territory, probably returning to the East at the end of his tour here.

L. K. Brin, head of the L. K. Brin exchanges on the Pacific Coast, returned from New York this week, after a trip of several weeks. Mr. Brin was enthusiastic over the Warner Brothers pictures that he will handle during the coming season, and at present is busily engaged handling the personal appearances of Wesley Barry in this territory. Barry made his first personal appearance for Mr. Brin in Billings, Montana, last week, and after a tour over the local states, will come into Seattle the week of March 10, in conjunction with his latest picture, "Little Heroes of the Street." It has not been definitely decided at which Seattle house Barry will appear.

A special trade showing was recently arranged by Louis Amacher, manager of the American Releasing Corporation exchange for his latest release "The Bohemian Girl." The showing was given at the Liberty theatre, donated by the Jensen-VonHerberg interests for the occasion. Among the guests were exchange and theatre men, press representatives, and members of orchestras and bands in the city. A special music score was planned for the picture, and several special numbers were furnished by prominent musicians of Seattle. Bookings on the picture were to be arranged following the special showing.

The "Fighting Blood" series of two reel features have just arrived in this city at the Film Booking Office exchange, and have been booked by A. B. Metzger, exchange manager, with the Jensen-VonHerberg circuit. The first of the pictures will run at Manager Frank Steffy's Coliseum theatre about March 3, and after that twice each month until their conclusion.

In and Out of the Cleveland Exchanges

SEVENTY-EIGHT THOUSAND Clevelanders paid admission to see "Robin Hood" at the Stillman theatre during the first two weeks of its run, now at hand. That beats the record of the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, which announces 60,000 paid admissions in two weeks. It also beats the Los Angeles run of seventeen weeks, with an average of 15,000 a week. The picture played to as many people in Cleveland in two weeks as it did in Los Angeles in five weeks, according to statistics compiled in the offices of the Loew's Ohio theatres. Crowds stood in the Stillman theatre for more than an hour every day, waiting to get past the gendarme who does the admitting. Many people have seen the picture again and again. From present indications it will run at least another two weeks. Possibly longer.

Martin Smith, president of the M. P. T. O. A. of Ohio, is in Hot Springs, Ark., taking the first vacation he has had in several years.

Manager Hoganson, of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, was so well pleased with the business on "The Town That Forgot God" that he is holding it over for a second week. Actions speak louder than words. And an extended engagement is more praise than a page of gilded words.

The Majestic theatre, Cleveland, has changed hands. A. Nyergesa has sold the house to M. Carig.

George Dixon, of the Empress and Metro theatres, Toledo, was conspicuous as one of the few of out-of-town exhibitors in the Film Exchange Building this week.

J. J. Mellert, for some years connected with the Shaw-Hayden theatre, Cleveland, has bought the Clark National theatre, 5202 Clark avenue, and is devoting his entire time in establishing an entente cordiale between his house and his neighbors.

Gene Ochs, formerly assistant manager of the Allen theatre, is now managing the Shaw-Hayden.

Charles Barbian, of the Waldorf theatre, Akron, is the first Ohio exhibitor to play "The ex-Kaiser in Exile," released through Hodkinson. George Schade, of Schade's theatre, Sandusky, is a close follower.

C. W. Miller, of the Hippodrome, Youngstown, took occasion to write to M. A. Lebensburger of the Standard Film Service Company that "Shadows" is a fit successor to "Rich Men's Wives" and that it drew capacity every play date."

It is stated that the Colonial theatre, Elyria, is closed. The Colonial was under the management of O. J. Bannon.

George Erdmann, office manager for Associated First National, has a letter from the manager of the State and Regent theatres, Pittsburgh, stating that the Douglas MacLean picture, "Bell Boy 13," took in the second largest number of admissions since the house (State) opened.

Ralph Hayes, assistant to Will Hays, was in Cleveland last week to attend a celebration of the Cleveland Trust Company, with which he was formerly connected. Hayes did no movie business while in the city.

Arthur B. Lamb, Metro exchange manager in Cincinnati, has resigned and has gone to the west coast on account of his wife's poor health. C. B. Osborne of the Metro Omaha exchange succeeds Lamb in Cincinnati. S. A. McIntyre has been transferred from Atlanta to follow Osborne in Omaha and E. S. Burke, former assistant Metro manager in Dallas, Texas, has been appointed office manager of the Atlanta exchange.

W. J. Fitzpatrick, of Pittsburgh, has come on to Cleveland to join the American Releasing Company's sales force in Ohio.

Herman Garfield was discovered in town one day last week. Garfield first introduced "The Parish Priest" to Ohio. This was followed by "Ten Nights in a Bar Room."

E. C. Fielder is no longer connected with the Progress Pictures Company. Fielder was originally general manager of the organization of which J. S. Jossey is president. Fielder's new interests takes him far from the field of motion pictures.

Howard Frankel, of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, came up to Cleveland this week to give the local play houses the once over.

A. J. Buck, of the Colonial theatre, Fostoria, was resigtered among the exhibitor guests this week.

It is said that George Ryder and Walter Kulp are no longer managing the Strand theatre, Cleveland. The theatre is now under the management of the owner of the building.

C. L. Peavey, local Hodkinson exchange manager, has issued invitations for a private screening of "Down to the Sea in Ships," to take place at the Allen theatre, Cleveland, on the sixth of March, at the close of the regular program. There's to be a private screening of the picture in Toledo, soon after, and that's to be followed by another one in Youngstown.

H. L. Art, a newcomer in the picture field, has joined the local Vitagraph exchange as sales representative, covering the western portion of the state.

Dan Stearns, long-time city sales representative of Vitagraph, now occupies a similar position with the Cleveland Universal exchange.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, is back in Cleveland, after a four-week sojourn in New York.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"The Woman Conquers"

First National—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE isn't much revealed in this picture which entitles it to encomiums. It serves simply as a vehicle for Katherine MacDonald—nothing more. The production values are the highlights, there being an adequate atmosphere combined with appropriate settings. Tom Forman, who directed, has done everything possible with the story which treats of familiar situations. Certainly he has kept the action smooth and has guided the players in a manner which gets results. One might call it a society drama with a melodramatic finish and Miss MacDonald, as the girl who tires of social life and goes to the open spaces up North, is as optically satisfying as ever.

The introductory shots feature the idle manners of the rich with the heroine registering boredom through the useless existence of the social whirl. So she decides to get away from it all by going to Canada and taking over the property inherited from her uncle. So the scene shifts to the white spaces, up where men are men and up where men are wolves. There they are, the parlor hounds replaced by a hungry pack of he-wolves.

The subsequent action gives Mitchell Lewis an opportunity to flash a graphic bit of character work as the brutal overseer. The girl attempts to drive him away but he sets fire to the storehouse. These scenes are all perfectly obvious and are not marked by any excitement and suspense. Even the climax doesn't stir the emotions so often has it been employed. It offers the girl, a society youth, who has accompanied her North, and the human wolf in a hut where they have taken refuge from the storm. The city lover shows some fighting qualities when he is forced to become a he-man and fight for the girl. He conquers his enemy in heroic fashion. Which means that he is badly wounded. This gives the heroine a chance to carry him back on her sled and reveal her love for him. The exteriors are satisfying and the scenes of the dogs and sleds are colorful enough.

It looks to us as if the man conquers much more than the woman. She had conquered any desire to bask in the social spotlight long before she reached the North. The man didn't conquer his weak impulses until he was up against it at the end.

The Cast

Ninon Le Compte.....Katherine MacDonald
Frederick Van Cort 3rd.....Bryant Washburn

A storm occurs and the girl, the city man and the overseer seek shelter. The society lover is badly wounded in protecting her.

Classification—Society drama balanced with orthodox melodrama of far North.

Production Highlights—The dog sled scenes. The attractive exteriors. The scene when society admirer becomes a he-man and punishes the villain. Good atmosphere.

Exploitation Angles—The cast is well known. Play up star and other members of company. Feature the snow stuff. Use the title for a teaser campaign.

"A Clouded Name"

Playgoers—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A VERY fair program picture is offered in "A Clouded Name," which might have been considerably better had it been handled in a logical manner. The central idea is not original in any way, nor can it be put down as forceful, but it contains enough substance to suggest a more compelling story than what is presented. It looks as if it suffered from bad editing for as it stands there is little coherence in the plot and sequences. Most of the scenes are loosely connected so that the action is uneven.

Any spectator will not find it difficult to follow the story even though it is choppy. But he will find it difficult to discover any real logic. Then too, the suspense is missing. Yet despit its faults in its disjointed continuity and the development of the plot, many will be absorbed by the situations which involve the characters.

The story revolves around a youth who avoids a girl because he believes her father responsible for his father's disgrace and subsequent disappearance. She loves the boy, however, and follows him to a mountain lodge, where she is entertained by his host, the villain of the picture. The complications are cleared up when the girl is saved from the scoundrel's attack by a bearded stranger who turns out to be the boy's father.

The titles could be improved. The interpretation has been entrusted to competent players. Norma Shearer, who came over the film horizon a season or two ago with plenty of talent and good looks, makes a charming heroine, although she deserves a better part. Gladden James is a fairly convincing hero, while Richard Neill is the villain.

The Cast

Marjorie Dare.....Norma Shearer
Jim Allen.....Gladden James
Smiles.....Yvonne Logan
Stewart Leighton.....Richard Neill
Sam Slocum.....Charles Miller

By Tom Bret. Directed by Austin Huhn.

The Story—Youth avoids girl because he believes her father responsible for his father's ruin and subsequent disappearance. The girl loves him and follows him to a mountain lodge where she is the guest of the boy's host, who is also in love with her. The host attempts to attack the girl, but she is saved by a stranger who turns out to be the boy's father.

Classification—Plot centers upon conflict inspired through misunderstanding. Melodramatic climax.

Production Highlights—The competent work by Norma Shearer, Gladden James and Richard Neill. The fairly interesting climax.

Exploitation Angles—Title might be worked out in some sort of campaign. A series of questions of the "catch" order might stimulate patronage. Play up Norma Shearer as one of the prettiest girls on the screen.

"Gossip"

niversal—4488 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS picture doesn't live up to its title. The spectator will doubtless anticipate a society drama with scandal-mongers spreading idle chatter which involves the leading characters in business or domestic difficulties. But "Gossip," on the contrary, is a far-fetched little story on the familiar theme of capital versus labor. It may be that King Baggot, who directed, thought the story too inconsequential to make anything of it. Certainly he has exaggerated his points to add the w. k. punch. And the action never becomes genuine. Furthermore the star's role is really subordinate to that of the wealthy manufacturer and she never has a chance to show the histrionic spark which has carried her along whenever she appears in the colorful part of a shop-girl.

First we see the magnate refusing the demands of his workers for a higher wage. It is strongly planted that his grandfather and his father understood men, but that the youth who carries on the family name is opinionated and stubborn. Then follows the arrival of the heroine from the South, attired in a crinoline costume. The hero's father had once carried on a romance with her aunt. Which explains the girl's strange request to live in the home of the manufacturer.

Until the climax, which is highly melodramatic and typically theatrical, the story sags in interest, offering nothing but some colorless incident in the house, a breakfast scene, etc. There is no gossip indicative of what the title should suggest. A scheming woman—an unnecessary character, as well as the confidential secretary of the magnate, attempt to embarrass the girl. She would win the rich man if she could.

The far-fetched touches develop when the workers, who have stormed the manufacturer's home, are admitted in his home by the innocent girl and given food. A crude scene. One isn't disappointed over the hot-headed worker. He suggests from his introduction that he will eventually start something. But his infernal machine never reaches its victim. Instead it is carried into his own home by the unsuspecting girl. And she tosses it aside just in time. The finish shows the magnate showing a generous nature because of the sweet influence of the fair visitor. Gladys Walton has had far better pictures.

The Cast

Caroline Weatherbee.....Gladys Walton
Hiram Ward.....Ramsey Wallace
John Magoo.....Albert Prisco
Robert Williamson.....Freeman Wood
Mrs. Boyne.....Carol Halloway

By Edith Barnard Delano. Scenario by Hugh Hoffman. Directed by King Baggot. Photographed by Victor Milner.

The Story—Wealthy manufacturer refuses to respond to pleas of his workers. When a girl from the South visits him with a determination to stay in his home, he thinks it a plot of workers. Under her influence the manufacturer finds a faith in humanity and listens to the please of the workers. The romance follows.

Classification—Presents conflict between capital and labor which is destroyed by regenerating influence of heroine.

Production Highlights—The scene when girl invites workers in the rich man's home. The quaint appeal of star in old-fashioned costume.

Exploitation Angles—Title might be used for a teaser campaign showing evils of talking too readily. Play up stills of star in crinoline costume.

Drawing Power—Suitable for program houses or any house featuring daily change of bill.

"Can a Woman Love Twice?"

F. B. O.—6700 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A WELL constructed story, based upon a novel idea gives Ethel Clayton the best picture she has had for some time. What takes place here could reasonably happen, even though the plot resembles some others inspired from the late war. The author had an idea to begin with and the director has fashioned it into a picture which sustains the interest all the way without resorting to any padded incident.

The star's capabilities are fully realized in the role of a young war widow who is forced to work in a cabaret to provide for herself and child. Her husband's wealthy parents have never seen her and they refuse to help her in any way, but they would like to adopt the boy.

Up to this point the picture follows the conventional form, but soon after develops an originality and sufficient dramatic force to carry it along a winner. The widow, having knowledge that the child's grandparents are seeking him, takes a desperate chance to escape. She receives a letter from an old rancher whose son gave up his life in the war, and who has borne the same name as her husband, asking her to come and live with him. The plot becomes complicated when the hero returns from the war, he having enlisted under another name because his father disowned him.

This situation gives Miss Clayton a chance to put some emotional stress in her effort to keep up the masquerade. The rancher has discovered evidence of her false position. Somewhat obscure is the scene when the boy meets the widow. The youth, regardless of the fact that his father has mourned his loss, is not the recipient of any parental love. But he is taken back into the home with the condition that he must do hard work.

It's a story that carries suspense, for one is not certain just how the complications will be cleared. A time comes when an emissary of the grandparents seeks the child. The mother is determined to give up her masquerade, but the old rancher relents because of the void she and the child have filled in his lonely heart. His forgiveness of his son arrives when the latter rescues the widow and boy from death. The love element is developed in a natural manner without any forced treatment. In fact all the elements which compose the picture are in their rightful places and executed in a dramatic manner. The title, however, smacks of something sensational. It does not belong.

The Cast

Mary.....Ethel Clayton
John Smith.....Malcolm McGregor
Coleman Grant.....Fred Esmilton
Mrs. Coleman Grant.....Kate Lester
Franklin Chase.....Wilfred Lucas
Baby Tom.....Baby Muriel Dana
Detective.....Anderson Smith

The Story—Widow of war hero finds consolation with little child. Her husband's parents do not approve of her although they have never seen her. They make an effort to take the child away and to avoid this tragedy the young mother seeks refuge with a family whose son bears the same name as her husband. The latter is also a war hero who enlisted under an assumed name because he left home "under a cloud." When he returns the widow finds happiness through love.

Classification—Heart interest drama with novel conflict to sustain it.

Production Highlights—Appealing work of Ethel Clayton. The dramatic quality of story.

Exploitation Angles—Title might be used for teaser campaign. Make play of Ethel Clayton's name. Feature the plot which is different.

Drawing Power—Good for any second class downtown house. Also suitable for small town theatres and neighborhood theatres in cities.

Scene from "Jailed and Bailed," Pathe Comedy, starring Paul Parrott.

"The Supreme Passion"

Playgoers—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Edward H. Brady)

THIS production is released at a very opportune time. Saint Patrick's Day is in the offing and this would be an ideal attraction for the occasion when everybody is talking shamrocks, parading in high hats and banqueting in honor of Ireland's patron saint. The picture has been inspired by Tom Moore's well known song, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," and there is excellent opportunity for making this music gem the theme of the musical accompaniment. At one point the score is thrown on the screen as the star sings the song to violin accompaniment. There are other moments when it can be played to advantage, especially at the close.

The picture has been given a fine cast. Robert Adams plays the role of the romantic young Irishman who follows his sweetheart to America to prove to her that she would still be adored if all "Her endearing young charms" were to change. Adams does unusually well in the role. He acts natural at all times. Florence Dixon plays the role of Mary Manning. Cecil Owen is convincing as the villain and William Mortimer, as Judge Burke, looks as though he came fresh from "the auld sod." The remainder of the cast is adequate.

There are some very attractive and artistic exteriors in the picture. The story discusses the proposition: Is a woman loved for beauty of body or beauty of soul? It then goes on to prove that the latter is true. There is some fine camera work especially when the fairies appear and dance on the green. There is a goodly quota of thrills and an unusual twist to the plot when at the end we find that the girl schemed with a doctor to make the man she did not want to wed think that her beauty had been destroyed for life. There is a happy ending in Ireland.

The Cast

Mary Manning.....Florence Dixon
Jerry Burke.....Robert Adams
Judge Burke.....William Mortimer
Mrs. Manning.....Mrs. Charles Willard
Dan Manning.....Dan Kelley
Michael Ryan.....George Fox
James Lacey.....Cecil Owen
Clara.....Madelyn Clare
Charlie.....Selmer Jackson

By Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey.

The Story—Jim Lacey loves Mary Manning for her beauty. Jerry Burke loves her for herself alone. Lacey, determined to get the girl, involves her father in embarrassing financial schemes. The girl agrees to marry Lacey to save her father from ruin. Later on the day of the wedding she pretended to burn her face and arranges with the doctor to tell the guests that her beauty will probably be marred forever. Lacey, hearing this, refuses to wed the girl. The family returns to Ireland where later the heroine, who has kept her face heavily veiled, confesses her secret to Jerry. The two are soon married.

Classification—A romantic comedy drama with an "Auld Sod" and New York locale.

Production Highlights—The excellent cast. Some very artistic exteriors.

Exploitation Angles—The story is suggested by Tom Moore's song "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," and this fact will help you to tie up with your music store.

"The White Flower"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is no question about Betty Compson's newest picture, "The White Flower," being a colorful production. Since the story is based upon a romance between an American and a half-breed Hawaiian girl, Julia Crawford Ivers, who wrote and directed the feature, took the star and her company to Hawaii in order to collect the proper atmosphere and settings. And though the plot may be trite and obvious, carrying as it does, the customary love interest balanced with a melodramatic note, the latter being inspired by a jealous native rival, there is enough color, incident and atmosphere to make it fairly entertaining.

Julia Crawford Ivers has relied upon tribal rites and customs as the properties in building her romance. We learn much of the weird charm and mystery of the islands. And we will call it hokum. The heroine is the daughter of an American father and an Hawaiian mother. A native sorceress tells her that whoever gives her a white flower—that man will be the happy possessor of her heart. The jealous native, depicted as a wealthy landowner, learns of the flower, and attempts to bribe her with a specimen. Which is the opportune time to introduce the hero at a social function, giving her a flower, the meaning of which he is ignorant.

The spectator may anticipate the development, but the director has done a neat job in building her sequences. Consequently the scenes are deftly arranged and the interest is sustained. Incidental to the theme are some shots showing Hawaiians indulging in the native sport, surf-riding. The American is injured and Betty, attired becomingly in a bathing suit, rescues him.

The climax is exploited through a caption which tells of the power of a native priest in praying a victim to die. The action here introduces the American fiancee of the hero which arouses the jealousy of the pretty half-caste and under the influence of the native rival the priest is employed to use his evil power. But the heroine's conscience returns and she destroys the spell. And the hero remains on the island.

There aren't any acting opportunities since the outstanding features are the settings and atmosphere. It will provide, however, a satisfying hour.

The Cast

Konia Markham.....Betty Compson
Bob Rutherford.....Edmund Lowe
John Markham.....Edward Martindel
Ethel Granville.....Arline Pretty
Mrs. Gregory Bolton.....Sylvia Ashton
Mr. Gregory Bolton.....Arthur Hoyt
David Panuahi.....Leon Barry
Bernice Martin.....Lily Philips
Edward Graeme.....Reginald Carter
Sorceress } Kahuna }.....Played by native Hawaiians

Story and scenario by Julia Crawford Ivers. Directed by Julia Crawford Ivers.

Drawing Power—Good for program houses and small town houses.

The Story—Half-caste Hawaiian girl is informed that the man who first gives her a white flower will become her husband. Jealous rival attempts to bribe her with the lovely token. But American beats him to it. Story from this point features conflict between the two admirers, with the American successful, but only after his American fiancee has hovered at the point of death due to the sorcery employed by a native priest. The American girl admits that she does not love the hero and leaves the island.

Grand Rapids Critic Favors Short Pictures

That the public is taking an active interest in the length of feature photoplays that are offered at its favorite movie houses, is evinced in an editorial in the reviewer's column of the Grand Rapids Herald.

"Once in a blue moon or thereabouts," writes this critic, "a film comes along which in subject, direction and action deserves ten reels and no less. But a whole bunch of these long pictures of nine and ten reels would be worth twice the price in entertainment value if they were carefully fitted into a compact six, seven or eight reels.

Some of the biggest films ever made were six and seven reelers; for example, "The Miracle Man" and "Humoresque." Harold Lloyd's five reelers are bigger features and better drawing cards than most nine and ten reel subjects.

"The average fan likes a little diversity in his entertainment. Along with the feature he wants a news reel, a comedy, and, if possible, something in the nature of a magazine supplement.

"Message of Emile Coue" Liked

Consensus of Opinion Indicates This Two Reel Special A Good Buy

"THE Message of Emile Coue," Educational's two-reel Special, which presents M. Coue personally delivering his theories from the screen, opened at the Rivoli Theatre, N. Y., and at other representative houses in other big cities, on Sunday, February 18.

The picture earned excellent reviews and criticisms from practically all the papers in New York, and also in the other cities where it was shown.

The New York Tribune in their review of the picture said:

"'The Message of Emile Coue' is very well done. In it M. Coue tells just what he told us in his lectures, only it was easier for us to read it off the screen than it was to understand Coue's broken English. We had no idea that a film like that could be interesting."

The Morning Telegraph, in a long review, gave an equally strong recommendation to the picture. After giving an outline of the subject, and commenting on its entertainment and instructional value, the Telegraph review concludes:

"M. Coue proves to be a good pantomimist, and his dominating personality holds the undivided attention of the audience. The picture was greeted with hearty applause and even very bronchial members of the audience forgot to cough during the entire showing of the two reels."

Kunsky's Capitol at Detroit, also opened Sunday, February 18 with the Coue picture, and the success of the Rivoli in New York was duplicated in Detroit. Capacity business flooded the house on opening day, and indications were that the picture would hold up to Sunday's business during the entire run. The Detroit News, in its review of the Capitol program, states:

"The feature was forced to take second place on the bill, even though in number of reels it defeats the Coue picture by something like three to one."

An extensive advertising campaign, in which half page ads were inserted in the newspapers, was conducted by the Strand in Milwaukee. Coue interest is running high in the western cities, and house records for two-reel subjects are being broken with every showing of "The Message of Emile Coue."

Pathe's March 11 Program Ready

Pearl White in Seventh "Plunder" Episode Heads Eight Releases

PATHE'S eight releases for March 11 makes a program headed with a particularly vital Pearl White punch in the seventh episode of "Plunder." The heroine leads the arch villain to believe that both she and her mysterious "Mr. Jones" admirer have lost their lives in a cavern cave-in. Ultimately he recognizes her and puts her in a position of frightful danger.

The Hal Roach one-reel comedy offering presents Paul Parrott and Jooyna Ralston in "Shoot Straight"—a satire on amateur hunters who rely on books of instructions, in this instance with really wonderful results.

Screen Snapshots shows "Baby Peggy," by common consent, the most popular girl in California. Gaston Glass and William Desmond are fierce rivals for her affection—but she loves Harold Lloyd best of all. Viola Dana, Shirley Mason and Edna Flugrath appear as three of a kind, while it is apparent that Marion Davies never rests. Ora Carew and John C. Edward are pronounced man and wife. Other celebrities shown are: Louise Lovely, Milton Sills and his daughter Dorothy, and Betty Compson with members of her company. Lasky, Zukor and Marcus Loew are seen being welcomed by the Mayor.

The Aesop's Film Fable in this list is call "The Traveling Salesman." Farmer Al Falfa has more than his usual share of trouble, in which he justifies the moral: "A Good Salesman Creates His Own Sales."

Pathe Review presents as its leading feature a succession of pictures analyzing the valuable properties of "The Million Dollar Weed." This is the Water Hyacinth, of Florida, which yields: paper pulp, ether, oil, tannin, fertilizer and cattle feed.

Pathe News Nos. 22 and 23, and Topics of the Day No. 10 are released in this program.

Short Subject Program For Five Day Run

The Rex theatre, Jackson, Mich., is building a program consisting of Educational Subjects, around the Educational Special, "The Message of Emile Coue," playing in all eight reels of Educational product. This program will run for five days without a change.

Roach to Produce Serial for Pathe Release

AS the fourth of the series of important announcements, Pathe's General Manager, Elmer Pearson, announces that Hal Roach will produce a ten episode serial entitled "What Should the Girl Do," for release immediately after Ruth Roland's fifteen episode chapter-play, "Haunted Valley."

This is not the first time that Hal Roach has produced a serial for Pathe. Both "White Eagle" and "The Timber Queen," in which Ruth Roland was starred, came from the Roach producing plant.

Pathe states that a well known female star will be featured and as soon as contracts have been signed, her name will be announced to the exhibitors and the public.

"What Should the Girl Do" will really be a series serial, in which a beautiful girl is confronted in each episode with a different suitor for her hand, and each episode makes a complete picture.

"Algeria" Fox Release for Early March

Algeria—a country that has existed for centuries in the burning sands and tumbled hills of the North African coast—Algeria, the ancient, where they do many things today even as they did them thousands of years ago, this is the country, filmed so interestingly for the Fox Educational Entertainment to be released early in March.

One hundred odd years ago Algeria depended for a large part of its revenue on the tributes wrested from the ships of other countries. But today we find the merchants of Algiers with their shops in the street.

These people work at wood carving, exquisite in its quaintness. The jeweler plies his trade before the public gaze, sometimes envied by a spectator when he places a gold ornament on the ankle of some fair Algerian maiden. The farmer still uses the same kind of plow that Adam first invented. Their method of grinding corn must be good—they have been doing it that way for twenty centuries. Olive oil is the chief product of the land.

Handy Andy Series for the Screen

J. Ray Friedgen has started production on twelve melodramatic comedies at the Tec Art Studios, New York. The stories are adaptations from Samuel Lover's novel. They will be known as the "Handy Andy" series. Charles Ascott has been engaged for the title role. His adaptability to portray the loyable Irish character in Lover's novel is encouraging to the producers.

German "Fascisti" in Pathe News No. 16

What the authorities in European politics are declaring is the most significant—if not alarming—development in the French occupation of German territory, the rapid rise of the German "Fascisti," is vividly pictured in Pathe News, current issue No. 16.

In spite of Government prohibition, 30,000 of this type of revolutionists are pictured parading the streets of Munich and packing the public squares. This was a demonstration of so-called "Nationalists" who are seeking the overthrow of the present Republican regime, organized by Adolf Hitler and modeled on the plan which has made Mussolini's seize of Italy's government so successful.

The Pathe News pictures show a multitude marching under the emblem of the "German Fascisti," the "Hakenkreuz" an old Indian symbol displayed on a red flag. It is well known that the organization contains many monarchists.

Pathe Reports Demand for Lloyd Two Reelers

Due to the success of the first series of Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, Pathe is sending many of its branches new prints and creating new advertising material and exploitation suggestions to meet this increased demand.

Since the advent of Lloyd as a star in longer features, the popularity of the first series of two-reelers has been on the rise continuously and it is said a greater number of exhibitors have booked these two-reelers than any others that Pathe has released.

The six comedies covered by the press sheet are "Bumping Into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids," "From Hand to Mouth," "Haunted Spooks," "His Royal Slyness," and "An Eastern Westerner."

Hodkinson to Continue to Distribute "Chats"

Announcement is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that Charles Urban's Official Movie Chats, produced by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ameria, will be released through Hodkinson for another year. The contract has just been signed which will not expire until February 4, 1924.

This will give exhibitors the opportunity of continuing their dealing with the Hodkinson Exchanges throughout the country in booking this entertaining reel of interesting facts and picturesque scenes.

According to the contract this will continue to be a single reel weekly feature on the Hodkinson program.

"A Hula Honeymoon" Acclaimed by League

The Educational-Christie comedy, "A Hula Honeymoon," to procure scenes for which Al Christie took his company all the way to Honolulu is listed in the current bulletin of the Motion Picture League as recommended for showing to adults and younger people.

Ethel Shannon, who has just signed a long-term contract with B. P. Schulberg to appear in Preferred Pictures.

Recruit From Stage Joins Century Ranks

Following the footsteps of Joe Bonner, well known in comedy and vaudeville, Ernie Adams, who created the part of Lester in "Listen, Lester," joined the ranks of Century Comedies.

Now Ford West, a Keith headliner for over five years, has followed their example and signed his name on the dotted line to appear in Century Comedies.

West, who is known from coast to coast as a first class vaudeville performer makes his bow on the silver screen in "The Poor Boob," directed by Eugene de Rue. Ernie Adams also appears in this comedy.

Christie Players Go To Truckee Again

Al Christie left Los Angeles for Truckee with twenty people, three wind machines, a wooden horse and the funny plot of a farmyard comedy down in Maine, the continuity of which has just been finished by Frank R. Conklin.

Dorothy Devore will be starred in the new comedy, supported by such players as Babe London, Earl Rodney, Ward Caulfield and many others. The story is a good old Eastern winter's tale called "Winter Has Came," described in the synopsis as a "simple tale of American farmer lasses, eartabs and galoshes" having nothing to do with the famous novel of a similar name, not even a burlesque.

While the Truckee company is away another comedy is being finished at the studio, "Green As Grass" featuring Jimmie Adams, and directed by Scott Sidney; while a third picture featuring Bobby Vernon and directed by Harold Beaudine, has just been started.

Coue personally delivers his message from the screen, the Coue Committee of New York announced that the picture met with the unqualified approval of all the members of the Committee as well as that of all the friends of M. "Hearts Aflame" Draws Crowds in L. A.

So great were the crowds at Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles, during the run of Reginald Barker's production of "Hearts Aflame," that the newspapers commented upon the attendance as one of the noteworthy features of the exhibition.

Raving over the fire scenes in "Hearts Aflame" apparently is not a propensity confined to the Pacific Coast critics. E. V. Durling, writing in the New York Globe said:

"There have been many thrilling forest fire scenes made, but that which Reginald Barker has conceived for 'Hearts Aflame,' now showing at the Rialto, is by far the best. . . . A forestry expert of my acquaintance assures me that this scene is an exact replica of one of the greatest conflagrations he ever encountered in the northwest."

This picture, directed by Reginald Barker, and adapted by J. G. Hawks and G. Rigby from Harold Titus's novel, "Timber," is presented by Louis B. Mayer through the distributing medium of Metro Pictures Corporation. The photographer is Percy Hilburn.

"Wolf Fangs" Under Way at Warner Studios

"Wolf Fangs," the Chester M. Franklin production being produced at the Warner Brothers coast studios under the supervision of Harry Rapf, is reported well under way. The picture features Rintintin, the famous Belgian police dog and World War hero.

To secure the realism necessary to the story, the cast of players have been taken to the Feather River country which is located some twenty-four hours north of Los Angeles. From present indications the production will be completed within the next few weeks, and it is likely that the Warner Brothers will release the feature in the Fall.

Universal Promises One A Week

Schedule Calls For High-Class Productions At Fair Price For Season

AS the result of experiments made during the last six months at Universal City in the improvement of Universal's five-reel features, that company announces that it is in a position to assure exhibitors one high class picture every week for the rest of the 1923 season at "live and let live" prices.

This is a distinct development in the production and release policy of Universal attractions. They heretofore have been released in groups or series of nine or other small numbers. This group method was used during the last six months for the purpose of concentrating on production and building up the show value of the individual pictures in each group, and to aid in balancing the pictures in each group so as to provide for all classes of patrons.

Early last fall, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures' Corporation, issued instructions to the scenario department and the production department of the corporation to increase the quality of Universal's five-reel features until they approximated the highest quality in feature production.

Immediately greater care was taken in the selection of stories, in the casting of the pictures and in the production. A group of pictures was planned for a tryout of the "better" pictures campaign. These pictures, released as "The Winning Nine," proved to be far better than their predecessors. Then a new group of nine was planned, with greater care in production and consequent improvement in the finished product. This group, which was released as the Prosperity Nine, showed great improvement over the Winning Nine.

The betterment campaign was continued, this time under Mr. Laemmle's personal supervision. The next group proved to be of exceptional quality. They were released as the Laemmle Nine, as the result of the Universal chief's personal O. K. on each picture before it could be scheduled for release. The success of this series was even greater than that of the preceding group.

The planning of the Capitol Series followed. This series of pictures, now being released, represents the last word in the development of strong five-reel attractions. It is the success of this series as the culmination of the betterment campaign developed with this and the succeeding groups that prompted the planning of a continued schedule of high class features for the remainder of the season.

It is of especial note that these forthcoming pictures, many of which already are in production, are to be put in the hands of the exhibitor, Universal asserts at a price that will assure a profit to him.

The forthcoming weekly releases are being made from carefully selected stories of especial strength, and will be made with stars and players of proven popularity. A group of Universal's best directors have been assigned to make them.

Among the stars so far selected to play in these pictures are Herbert Rawlinson, Gladys Walton, Hoot Gibson, Roy Stewart, Ethel Grey Terry, Niles Welch, and others. The directors include Jack Conway, King Baggot, Stuart Paton, Herbert Blache, Edward Sedgwick, Henry Lehrman and others.

Submarine Production Completed

"Vengeance Of The Deep" Said To Reveal Remarkable Underseas Scenes

AMERICAN RELEASING CORPORATION announces the recipt of its submarine production just completed in Honolulu by A. B. Barringer and delivery of this picture is now being made to its exchanges. "Vengeance of the Deep" is a romantic melodrama with a big submarine episode. The undersea scenes were taken at great depth in the waters around Honolulu where the producing company has been at work for the past three months.

Ralph Lewis has the role of a brutal ship's captain who has pearl concessions in the South Seas; Virginia Brown Faire is his daughter; Van Mattimore is a beach comber; Harmon McGregor, a pearl diver; Maida Vale, a native girl, and Smoke Turner, an island ruler.

"Vengeance of the Deep" is said to be unlike any other with undersea episodes. Among the outstanding moments are the running down of a native proa by a schooner; a native's undersea swim to tie a knot in the diver's air pipe; an attack upon a native diver by a tiger shark; the rescue of the diver; the weird and perilous jungles of the ocean's bed; a new type of diver's helmet which generates its own air, shown for the first time on the screen.

"Vengeance of the Deep" is said to afford unusual opportunities for exploitation. The picture is scheduled for release in the latter part of March.

Stan Laurel, who has been engaged to star in the Hal Roach one reel comedies for Pathe release.

"Suzanna" Gets Approval of Detroit Critics

"Mabel Normand never has been so successful, so captivating nor so merry as in Mack Sennett's newest comedy-drama, 'Suzanna,'" said the reviewer for the Detroit Free Press when this Allied Producers' and Distributors' Corporation release was shown recently at the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit. "The story is alive with action and contains thrills in which the life and happiness of the heroine are at stake."

"Every full-length photoplay turned out thus far by Mack Sennett has represented a real stride in the art of the cinema, and 'Suzanna,' the latest Sennett opus, means so many more stale movieisms gone the way of the dodo," said the critic for the Detroit News. "Billed as a comedy-drama, it is more drama than comedy with banal suggestiveness and pathos omitted. Mabel Normand is the featured player in a competent cast. There is much beauty in the settings. 'Suzanna' distinctly belongs on the credit side of the ledger."

"The combination of Mabel Normand and 'Suzanna' supplies an attraction that has had few equals and no superiors at the Broadway-Strand," said the review in the Detroit Evening Times.

King at Work on New Rural Comedy

Carlton King, president of the Carlton King Productions, is back at work in the Hollywood studios after a trip to New York with his manager, J. Frank Moore, and reports good progress on the fifth of his series of twelve two-reel rural comedy dramas.

Producers Security will issue one a month. Each drama is complete in itself but the character of Jad, the town marshal, runs through the series.

60,000 Visit At United Studios

Public Takes Advantage of Invitation To See Pictures In Production

MORE than sixty thousand persons, mostly visitors to Southern California, are interested in the current production of Associated First National for that many were entertained one day during First National week at the United Studios where all the independent producers are at work on forthcoming Associated First National releases.

John McCormick, western representative of Associated First National, conceived the idea of giving the public a view of picture-making and Joseph M. Schenck who recently bought controlling interest in the United Studios and Mike Levee set the date.

The huge crowd that gathered had a glimpse of Norma and Constance Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald, Colleen Moore, Jackie Coogan, Dorothy Phillips, Noah Beery, Jack Mulhall, Barbara Tennant, William V. Mong, Marguerite de la Motte, Virginia Brown Faire, Harold Goodwin, Walt Whitman and many other players. They also had an opportunity of watching Frank Borzage making tests of players for his initial First National production, "Sands of Time," adapted from the story of "Terwilliger;" and Allen Holubar who was finishing "Slander the Woman," with Dorothy Dalton.

Noah Berry, screen villain, staged a fight with Barbara Tennant on a special stage for this vast crowd which watched Jack Mulhall come to Barbara's assistance.

They saw also the big sets that remained from "Oliver Twist" and heard Jackie explaining some of them. They walked through the beautiful garden sets of "Within the Law," and saw the streets of "China" used in Constance Talmadge's "East is West."

James Young gave a talk on picture making.

Mr. Schenck, Maurice Tourneur, Sol Lesser, Sam E. Rork and M. C. Lever helped make the visit enjoyable.

Maurice Tourneur's sets for the "Isle of Lost Ships," which is to be released soon was an especial point of interest to the visitors.

Dorothy Dalton brought 20,000 autographed photographs and in half an hour they were "grabbed" by the visitors.

Hundreds of feet of film were "shot" of the visitors and it is said this will be distributed to the theatres throughout the country.

Warners Plan Art Competition

Invite Institutions To Submit Original Poster Ideas On Productions

AN OPEN poster art competition which will involve every art institution in America is to be launched by the Warner Brothers for the coming series of eighteen productions which are to be produced and publicized at an approximate expenditure of $5,000,000, according to an announcement this week by Harry M. Warner.

The twofold purpose of the plan is to seek original poster ideas for lithographs and to stimulate interest in the art of motion picture billboard advertising. A series of prizes will be offered for the best ideas submitted for each production.

While the many posters that are being issued with the current series of Warner classics, namely, "Rags to Riches," "Heroes of the Street," "The Beautiful and Damned," "Little Church Around the Corner," "Brass," and those being drawn for "Main Street," combine both artistic and commercial value, it is Mr. Warner's conviction that there is still room for improvement.

He says: "We will endeavor within the very near future to infuse into the making of posters some new and totally different ideas. We want ideas that are original, ideas that will help exhibitors and create favorable comment for their theatres. And it is this comment which will make institutions out of unknown and unrecognized theatres.

"Now in order to create this new interest, and in order to secure fresh ideas for our posters, we will enlist the aid of every known artist and art institution in America, offering prizes, of course, to the best posters submitted and accepted."

Details of the plan outlined by Mr. Warner have not as yet been completed, but it is stated that following the completion of "Main Street," which is being made at the coast studios under the direction of Harry Beaumont, letters explaining the idea will be sent to every art institution in America.

"Vanity Fair" Press Book Is Ready

One of the most beautiful and artistic of the exhibitors' press and service books which Goldwyn's advertising and publicity department has been preparing for the firm's twenty big specials for the year is that just off the presses for the Hugo Ballin production of "Vanity Fair," starring Mabel Ballin.

The front cover is in black and red and shows Miss Ballin as Becky Sharp, holding a mask in her hand. Her figure is reflected in a mirror. This poster is also used as the window card for the production.

The posters, pictured on the back cover, are of an unusually artistic and appealing quality. The 24-sheet is a lettered poster in which the letters of the title are printed in red, each letter being about four feet high, against a black background.

The three-sheet shows Beck Sharp in the likeness of Mabel Ballin, rising from the book's pages

DRIVEN

"DRIVEN" REACHES HEIGHTS OF BEST AMERICAN FILMS

By P. W. GALLICO.

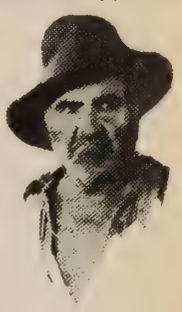
Title of picture, "DRIVEN."
Produced and directed by CHARLES BRABIN.
Released by UNIVERSAL.
Presented at the CRITERION THEATRE.

"Driven," to us, stands out as one of the best photoplays we have ever seen from an American producer. This is a tall statement, but we stick to it. It is powerfully dramatic, brilliantly acted and directed, and makes no concessions.

The producer set out to tell a story of the kind of people who inhabit the mountain regions of the South, and he did it unflinchingly. It is not a pretty picture, but it is an honest picture.

The story is so simple it can be told in a few words. A drab, miserable mother of a vicious mountain brood sells information which leads to its being wiped out in order to assure happiness to her youngest son.

We can recall, perhaps, only two other photoplays in which the inevitability of circumstances has been as powerfully rendered in a series of pictures as it is in "Driven." There is more real despair and heartbreak in this short film than in all the rest of the so-called "heart" and "mother" pictures put together.



Burr McIntosh

Acting honors belong to Emily Fitzroy, whose portrayal of the woman of the mountains whose family have crushed everything but life out of her is a marvelous bit of acting. Charles Emmet Mack is seen as her youngest son, who is different from the others. With Elinor Fair, he shares next honors in this remarkable picture. Miss Fair plays Essie, the girl, thrown in with the brutal family of Tollivers when one of them murders her father.

Elinor Fair and Charles Emmet Mack

George Bancroft and Burr McIntosh have the other two telling parts, Bancroft, as Lem the killer, who desires Essie, and McIntosh as Paw, the head of an unholy family of moonshiners.

We haven't the space to be as enthusiastic about this film as we would like to. We suggest that you see it.

The photography is excellent, because it does just what it should. It helps to tell the story. The love element between Tommy and Essie is handled as charmingly as we have ever seen it done. It is a picture of life. It is.... oh well, see for yourself.

United Studios Busy with Productions

SINCE Joseph M. Schenck took over the controlling interest in the United Studios in Los Angeles all of the independent producers who are making pictures for Associated First National are making their headquarters there.

At the present time five directors are at work on First National releases and at least three more will be "shooting" in a short time. Edwin Carewe is making "The Girl of the Golden West," Frank Borzage is making "Sands of Time," based on a magazine story called "Terwilliger;" Maurice Tourneur is finishing "The Isle of Lost Ships;" James Young has begun "Wandering Daughters."

Richard Walton Tully is preparing to begin the making of "Trilby," and Norma Talmadge will soon start "Ashes of Vengence," while Constance Talmadge is getting ready for "Dulcy."

Laurette Taylor Book Store Tieup Made

Laurette Taylor's prominence in the theatrical world made possible a book tieup for the Metro picture, "Peg o' My Heart," with Kaufmann's department store, Pittsburgh. This establishment had never before consented to aid in the exploitation of any motion picture. The stunt was arranged in connection with the presentation of the photoplay at the Grand theatre.

C. C. Deardourff succeeded in arranging the tieup, which took up an entire window of the store on the main street. The simple display was centered about a framed painting of Miss Taylor in costume, one of the accessories available for the production. Copies of the novel, "Peg o' My Heart,"—which J. Hartley Manners wrote from his stage play—composed the rest of the exhibit. The fictionized "Peg" shown is the special photoplay edition which Grosset & Dunlap have published in connection with the Big Cast For "Miles Standish"

Eighty-Seven Name Parts Listed For Present Charles Ray Production

"THE Courtship of Myles Standish," which Charles Ray is now producing, under the direction of Frederic Sullivan, has a cast of eighty-seven name parts, the largest number, it is believed, ever assembled for a photoplay.

These eighty-seven, moreover, are in addition to more than 900 Indians who are to be seen in the production. The braves who are thus appearing in their first motion picture impersonate representatives of the nine tribes of Indians with whom the Pilgrims engaged in deadly struggles in the early days of New England. They will give a highly colorful touch to the big attraction, besides filling a very necessary part in the dramatization of one of the most important and fascinating chapters of American Colonial history.

Charles Ray will play the role of John Alden, the young man who did not "speak for himself," but who won the alluring Priscilla Mullins, notwithstanding. Enid Bennett, now best known for her Maid Marian in "Robin Hood," will impersonate Priscilla, while Fred Warren, well known character actor who has had important parts in many recent Goldwyn productions, will be Myles Standish.

Captain Thomas Jones will be portrayed by Stanton Heck, who had leading roles with Mr. Ray in "A Tailor-Made Man" and "Scrap Iron"; Edward Winslow, by Thomas Holding, who was conspicuous in Marshall Neilan's "The Stranger's Banquet"; Fallon, the rebellious pirate by Tom Wilson, familiar for many parts in Charles Ray, D. W. Griffith and Douglas Fairbanks pictures; John Carver, by Sam De Grasse, recently in "Robin Hood"; Elder Brewster, by Joseph Dowling, one of the hits of "The Miracle Man"; Governor Bradford, by Norval MacGregor; Steven Hopkins, by Max Asher, long a featured comedian; Mary Chilton by Charlotte Pierce; Edward Dotey by Sidney Bracy; John Howland by William Sullivan, and Isaac Allerton by Frank Farrington, both of whom terminated stage engagements in the East to join Mr. Ray in this production.

"Merry-Go-Round" Approved

Universal Chief Declares It Biggest Super-Production Company Has Made

WORD has been received in New York from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, who now is at Universal City, Cal. that "Merry-Go-Round," the Universal Jewel production now nearing completion under the direction of Rupert Julian, is the biggest superproduction that Universal ever made.

Julian now is in the last stages of editing the picture. Its 200,000 feet of negative are down to about twenty reels. This will be halved before it is ready for the screen. It is probable that a finished print will be on the way to New York in several weeks. According to present arrangements the picture will be Universal's first big fall release. Its early completion assures ample time for the Universal Exploitation Department to get behind it in a big way and to make it a nationally known picture before it is ready for release.

Universal is projecting a national campaign for this feature, which will far excel anything ever attempted in the way of picture exploitation. It is planned to conduct such a thorough campaign that every exhibitor's patrons will be well acquainted with the picture and will await its advent in the local theatre.

There will be an unusual number of accessories and striking posters on "Merry-Go-Round." The title lends itself excellently to exploitation purposes, and Universal is not overlooking any bets in taking advantage of this situation. Shortly after the picture is finally prepared for release, the corporation's exploitation corps, numbering more than half a hundred exploitation experts, located in various sections of the country, will start a concerted drive to prepare the way for the exhibitor booking the Julian super-feature.

The cast used in "Merry-Go-Round" never was equalled before in a Universal picture, say Universal. Headed by Norman Kerry, Mary Philbin and George Hackathorne, it includes such well known players as Caesar Gravina, Edith Yorke, George Seigmann, Dale Fuller, Lillian Sylvester, Spottiswoode Aitken, Dorothy Wallace, Al Edmundson, Albert Conti, Charles L. King, Fenwick Oliver, Sidney Bracy, Anton Vaverka, Maude George, Jane Sherman, Helen Brunneau and Helen Holte.

Rickenbacker Plane for "Going Up"

Out in Hollywood, where production work on "Going Up," Douglas MacLean's first feature for Associated Exhibitors, has been in progress several weeks, a large tract of land adjacent to the star's studio has taken on the appearance of an aviation field in war times. The flying scenes in the picturized version of the well-known musical comedy, and the mechanical equipment necessary for their "shooting" have compelled the purchase of a whole fleet of aeroplanes.

Most prized of the fliers is a high-powered Italian Ballila, which Captain "Eddie" Rickenbacker, celebrated ace, used in many of his most daring exploits during the World War.

Schulberg Production Plans Announced

THE next series of pictures scheduled for production by Preferred Pictures for distribution through the Al Lichtman Corporation has been announced by B. P. Schulberg. As soon as Gasnier completes "Mothers-in-Law," which is now under way at the Schulberg Studios, he will direct "The Parasite," from the well known novel by Helen Martin.

Upon completion of "April Showers," Tom Forman will begin on "The Broken Wing," the stage success by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard for which he is making elaborate plans. He will take his company to Mexico where the picture will be made in the exact locale described in the original play.

The cast has not yet been announced though it is expected that the leading masculine role will be given to Kenneth Harlan who was recently assigned to Forman to appear exclusively in his productions.

Title of 6th All-Star Comedy Decided Upon

The title and cast of the sixth All-Star Comedy to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has been announced. This comedy is burlesque on Shakespeare's "Hamlet" under the title of "So This Is Hamlet."

The cast is composed of Charles Murray, Felix Adler, Charlie Hines, Bill Neil, Dan Duffy, Dorothy Walters, Dorothy Allen and Little Russell Griffen.

The All-Star Comedies are produced by C. C. Burr, featuring Charles Murray, for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It is said that "So This Is Hamlet" offers unusual treatment in some highly amusing comic incidents surrounding one of the greatest works of Shakespeare.

According to those who have previewed this production it is said that it is distinctly out of the ordinary. It gives Charles Murray every opportunity for the presentation of highly amusing comedy situations. He is ably supported by an exceptionally strong cast, directed by Richard Thorpe.

"Truth About Wives" Is Completed

B. B. Productions, Inc., announces the completion of the third Betty Blythe special feature, "The Truth About Wives." This is described as a highly dramatic treatment of a modern American domestic problem.

Miss Blythe's role is that of a young American woman who makes an unfortunate marriage, and is unjustly accused of a serious crime. The story is by E. C. Holland. The cast, in addition to Miss Blythe, is as follows: William Carleton, Tyrone Power, Anne Luther, Fred Jones, John Daly Murphy, Marcia Harris, Nellie Spaulding, Frankie Evans.

Charles Murray as he appears in the C. C. Burr comedy for Hodkinson. "So This is Hamlet."

Wells Latest Author Won to Screen

To George H. Davis goes the distinction of recruiting to the ranks of great authors now writing for the screen another big name, with the advent of H. G. Wells' great novel "The Passionate Friends" as a motion picture.

Mr. Davis, whose name has been long associated with the production of screen offerings of merit, among them "Isobel," or the "Trail's End," "The Heart of the North," "Life's Greatest Question" and others, saw the tremendous possibilities in the works of Wells as screen material long ago and determined that if ever Mr. Wells could be persuaded to let one of his works serve as screen material, he wanted to be the man to produce that picture.

His determination was realized with the production of "The Passionate Friends" which is, perhaps, one of the greatest of Wells' products. Made under the personal supervision of the author of the "Outline of History," "The Passionate Friends" has lent itself admirably to screening, it is claimed.

Production Completed on "Temptation"

Actual production was completed this week on "Temptation," the third of the C. B. C. Film Sales Series. According to word from Director Edward J. Le Saint this feature was completed on schedule time, every detail of production running smoothly with not a single hold-up of any kind.

Mr. Le Saint has wired from the West Coast production center that everyone concerned is highly enthusiastic over the result.

Foreign Deals Closed on "The Curse"

The six-reel melodrama adapted from Charles E. Blaney's famous stage play, "The Curse," has been sold by Export-Import Film Co., Inc., which handles the foreign rights to the feature, for the South American territory including Argentine, Uruguay, and Paraguay.

Exclusive Distribution for Powers

Independent Movie Supply Takes Over Large Territory

WILLIAM H. RABELL, President of the Independent Movie Supply Co., New York City, announces that his company has been made the exclusive distributor of Power's Projectors in New York State, North of Trenton in New Jersey, and part of Connecticut. In Connecticut the Independent Movie Supply Co. will distribute Power's Projectors throughout the state but the right to sell exclusively is limited to a line west of the 72° 30'.

Offhand, this does not seem to be a very big territory but when you consider that about one-eighth of the population of the United States is concentrated within this comparatively limited area it will be seen that the franchise is a valuable one and that the transaction is one of the most important made for some time in the cinemachinery industry. This territory has a large motion picture loving public and the number of theatres in it is probably well in excess of one-eighth of the total number of best known and most successful houses in the United States.

William H. Rabell is one of the best known and most successful motion picture equipment dealers in the United States and the Independent Movie Supply Co., has been made Distributor of Power's as a well deserved reward for its success in handling Power's Projectors under the more limited rights heretofore granted by the Nicholas Power Company. Although the Independent has been handling Power's for about two years this firm has installed Power's Projectors in a large number of well known motion picture houses, but Mr. Rabell is now putting into effect plans for going after business on a much larger scale and in a more vigorous manner. The Independent Movie Supply Co. in addition to its main also has branches at Albany and Buffalo, New York and New Haven, Conn. and other branches will be added if it is found necessary to develop new business and give efficient service to the customers of this Company.

"Bill" Rabell, as he is popularly known, has been a well known figure at many of the important social events of the Motion Picture industry, for nearly fifteen years, but no night has ever been too long to prevent his being at his desk early next morning. His success has been due entirely to his own efforts, as he started at the lowest rung of the ladder in the motion picture supply business some years ago. The Imsco is exclusive distributor for Power's Projectors, General Electric Motor Generators, Superlite Screens and other well known motion picture equipment, because Bill Rabell knows how to go after business and take care of his customers after he gets it. His motto has been and still is "Courtesy with Service."

"Message of E. Coue" in Demand

Bookings in Big Houses Indicate Picture Meeting with Popularity

WITHIN the next two weeks many of the most representative houses in the United States will be showing the Educational Pictures Special, "The Message of Emile Coue." The list of bookings already arranged includes the largest and finest houses in the country.

Among the first to book this short subject special were the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, for a total of three weeks. The picture will show at one of the houses for two weeks.

In Chicago, Balaban & Katz broke their established precedent in booking this picture day and date in all of their theatres.

Detroit responded with a booking which is perhaps a record in booking speed. Twenty-four minutes after the Detroit office of Educational had received the wire from New York announcing that M. Coue would appear in a two reel special for Educational, John H. Kunsky booked it at his Capitol theatre for the week starting Feb. 18, as well as in five of his large suburban houses.

Guests of the Al Lichtman Corporation assembled at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, New York, on Thursday, February 15th, in a testimonial dinner to Al Lichtman on the eve of his European trip.

Mrs. Reid's Picture Gets Women's Endorsement

Endorsement by State Federations of Women's Clubs throughout the nation is being given the picture produced by Mrs. Wallace Reid, in co-operation with the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League.

At the invitation of this organization, the California State Federation of Women's Clubs will send their president, Mrs. W. A. Fitzgerald, to Washington to aid the Government in its campaign against the drug evil. Mrs. Reid's picture, which is being produced in conjunction with the League's crusade to arouse public sentiment against narcotics, will be urged as the screen's best portrayal of the miseries of the unfortunate addict and the most powerful medium for disseminating knowledge of the menace.

Mrs. Fitzgerald will appear before the Porter Committee if the sessions of that body are still in progress. She will also incite the other state federations to follow the lead of the California organization and join them in the effort of the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League to ally the screen with the press of the nation in the fight against the drug evil.

"Fighting Blood" Goes Into Big Houses

"Fighting Blood," the series of twelve two-reel pictures adopted from W. C. Witwer's Collier's Weekly stories, have already been contracted for by the largest first-run houses in the country, announces Film Booking Offices of America, which is distributing the pictures. The first episode, "Fighting Blood," was issued on February 18th, and is to be followed at intervals of fourteen days by the remaining eleven.

"Fighting Blood" is a series of stories of boxing, which contain in addition much wholesome comedy and clean romance. They are directed by Mal St. Clair and feature George O'Hara, with Clara Horton in the leading feminine role. The stories have been published over a period of ten months in Collier's, the last appearing in the most recent issue. The screen adaptations are made by Beatrice Van. The first eight have already been completed at the F. B. O. studio in Los Angeles.

Fox Specials in Record Day and Date Runs

The popular demand for exhibition of the current list of Fox special productions is exemplified by unprecedented day-and-date engagements which have been played and which are scheduled for the near future in many cities, according to announcements from Fox Film Corporation.

Forty-seven Chicago theatres with a total seating capacity of approximately 37,000 ran "Silver Wings," with Mary Carr, to record attendance during the week of Washington's birthday. This special, which was released late in 1922, has been greeted with a waxing enthusiasm in houses throughout the United States and all the foreign exchanges where Fox is represented. The Chicago bookings are the first of a series about to be inaugurated in various other key centers.

The week of April 1st will see "The Town That Forgot God," another special released February 11th, in 23 Cleveland theatres.

Both productions have had successful Broadway, New York, runs, "Silver Wings" having played all summer at the Apollo theatre and "The Town That Forgot God" having had three months at the Astor.

Ethel Shannon Signed by Schulberg

After a careful survey of available feminine screen talent, B. P. Schulberg has announced the first of a number of contracts he expects to close securing the exclusive services of actresses to be featured in Preferred Pictures released by the Al. Lichtman Corporation. He has signed Ethel Shannon, the petite brunette who did splendid work in Gasnier's picture, "The Hero," and recently completed a part in Tom Forman's "The Girl Who Came Back."

The long-term agreement giving Preferred Pictures exclusive control of Miss Shannon's screen work is the third step in the formation of a permanent stock company. Kenneth Harlan and Gaston Glass were Schulberg's first acquisitions.

Ince Completes Deal For Cuba

Negotiations were closed last week between the Thomas H. Ince Corporation and the Caribbean Film Company, whereby the latter will distribute five Ince pictures in Cuba and Porto Rico.

The pictures, "Homespun Folks," "Hail the Woman," "The Cup of Life," "Mother o' Mine" and "Lying Lips." The deal was negotiated by Chester E. Sawyer, vice president of the Caribbean Film Company.

Humane Society Endorses "Just Tony"

The Toronto Humane Society, through its manager, J. M. Wilson, delivered written appreciation to the Pantages theatre of that city for its exhibition of "Just Tony," the Fox production, which stars the famous Tony, Tom Mix's steed.

Much Activity on Goldwyn Lot

Eight Units In Operation Or Busy With Preparations For New Productions

THE topic of conversation that keeps cropping up wherever two or more exhibitors, or an exhibitor and any member of the Goldwyn staff, in New York, at the studios and in the exchanges get together, is the great activity now taking place at the Goldwyn studios.

A telegram just received from James R. Grainger, now at the studios after a trip which has covered the majority of Goldwyn's branch exchanges, states that on every hand he found this expansion of activities by Goldwyn the big theme in picture circles everywhere.

"The consensus of exhibitor opinion is that Goldwyn is making faster strides than any other company in the industry," states the message.

"'The Christian' has aroused their enthusiasm and I found them eager for information on 'Vanity Fair,' 'Mad Love,' 'Lost and Found,' 'The Eternal Three,' 'Red Lights,' 'Tess of the D'Urbervilles,' 'Greed' ('McTeague'), 'Three Wise Fools,' 'The Spoilers,' 'Ben-Hur' and the new pictures which have not even been placed in preparation yet."

On his arrival at the Culver City studios Mr. Grainger found 800 persons on the payroll, with the biggest production schedule in the history of the company in operation. Eight units are either actually in operation or preparing feature pictures. These are the eight pictures for which work is now progressing: "The Eternal Three," Marshall Neilan's original scenario, which he is directing; "Greed," Erich von Stroheim's first Goldwyn picture, a film version of Frank Norris' "McTeague"; "Souls for Sale," Rupert Hughes' picture based upon his own novel of that title; King Vidor's production of "Three Wise Fools," from Austin Strong's popular play; Hugo Ballin's production of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," starring Mabel Ballin, which is now editor; Jesse D. Hampton's new film version of Rex Beach's novel, "The Spoilers," directed by Lambert Hillyer; "Red Lights" which Clarence Badger is directing, a film version of Edward Rose's mystery play, "The Rear Car"; and Elinor Glyn's "Six Days" which Charles Brabin will direct.

Guy Bates Post Starts New One

"Man From Ten Strike," Curwood Story, Enters Production At Ince Studios

WORK will begin this week on the Guy Bates Post special to be made by E. deB. Newman and Robert T. Thornby of the Courtland Productions, and for Principal Pictures Corporation's release. The picture will be made at the Ince Studio, where Guy Bates Post will soon make his temporary professional abiding place.

The story, "The Man From Ten Strike," as it will be seen on the screen, is a free adaptation and development of a short story by James Oliver Curwood. The adaptation and continuity are now finished and are the work of Fred Myton, whose skill at such kind of service is attested by many successful pictures, his latest work being a new adaptation of "The Spoilers." The role of the hero as presented by Mr. Post will reveal that distinguished American actor in a part said to be eminently suited to him. It will not be a costume role, but one essentially human, masculine and vigorous.

When the story opens the hero, disillusioned and wronged in his early married life, appears on the scene of action a rugged, mature being animated by a single impulse. Mr. Post himself is enthusiastic over the possibilities afforded by this broad-gestured, tragic yet sympathetic character and the play, set as it is in the great out-of-doors, is precisely the kind in which the vigor and power of Robert Thornby's directorial art are revealed.

As the first product of the Courtland productions in association with Sol Lesser and his organization, this big feature will be awaited eagerly not only by picture fans and admirers of Guy Bates Post, but by the trade in general.

That no expense will be spared in the production of this picture is evidenced in the fact that the company will probably begin its work not at the Ince Studio but on location in the Yosemite Valley.

Elaborate Press Sheet for "Luck"

C. C. Burr offers an elaborate array of publicity, exploitation and advertising helps for the exhibitor for Johnny Hines' latest melo-comedy, "Luck."

The press sheet contains a series of teaser cuts with two teaser campaigns outlined. Other material presented consists of descriptions of lobby displays, ballyhoos, "Lucky" day contests, newspaper tie-ups, a novelty cut-out puzzle stunt for the kiddies, suggestions for putting over a wishbone matinee and illustrations and descriptions of the specially constructed flashing window and lobby display showing the great mine scene from "Luck."

One of the finest twenty-four sheets ever turned out is available on "Luck." It shows Johnny Hines posing with dice, horseshoes, wishbones and four-leaf clovers, all forming the word "Luck." The two three sheets show snappy scenes from the picture, the two ones were specially designed and give a good idea of some of the humorous situations in this melo-comedy.

"Passionate Friends" Sales Announced

With the sale of "The Passionate Friends" the picturization of the famous H. G. Wells novel to Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Film Corp., Sam Grand, Federated Film Exchange of New England, C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation reports a rapid closing out of the domestic territory on this picture.

With the announcement in last week's trade papers that George H. Davis, had selected C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to handle the distribution on this picture inquiries poured into the office from distributors and exhibitors all over the country.

It is believed that the remaining unsold territory will be closed immediately. Mr. Brandt leaves New York Monday for an extended trip through the West in the interests of "The Passionate Friends" and it is expected that we will have some important sales announcements to make next week.

Sam Zierler will distribute "The Passionate Friends" in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. Sam Grand will handle the picture exclusively in New England.

Dinky Dean Kid Star, Says Chaplin

Charlie Chaplin believes that the future of Dinky Dean in motion pictures is assured. If Charlie is as as good a prophet as he is a picture artist, there will soon be a new "kid" star on the picture firmament.

Dinky's real name is Dean Franklin Reisner, and he is the lad who appears in Chaplin's latest First National Attraction, "The Pilgrim," and adds quite a "punch" to the picture—and to Chaplin's face as a matter of fact. He is four years old and is the son of "Chuck" Reisner, song writer, playwright and heavy in many of Chaplin's comedies. In fact Dinky was born while his dad was playing a "Dog's Life."

Producers Security to Release "The Beast"

"The Beast," Thomas Dixon's new super production for which Producers Security has the releasing arrangements, is said to be the seventh straight success from this famous writer's pen.

Madlyn Clare plays the leading feminine role, and Warner P. Richmen, well known stage and screen actor, handles the juvenile lead. In "The Beast" Mr. Dixon is said to outdo all his previous sensational successes.

"Strongheart" Picture Sold in France

"Strongheart," the Jane Murfin-Laurence Trimble wonder dog, will soon be seen in France, French African Colonies, French African Protectorate, Belgium and Switzerland. The Societe des Etablissements Goumont have signed a contract with First National for the distribution rights in that territory of this popular dog in "Brawn of the North."

Accessories Ready for "Salome"

Attractive Aids Are Announced by Allied for Nazimova Production

BEARDSLEY studios in "black and white"—this is a phrase which aptly might be applied to the lithograph paper, lobby display, ready made ads and the exhibitor's campaign book issued by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation in connection with Nazimova's production of Oscar Wilde's poetic drama "Salome" now in an extended run at the Criterion theatre, New York.

As has been widely announced all the settings and scenery in the picture were designed by Natacha Rambova after the style of Aubrey Beardsley, famous English artist who illustrated the original edition of the Oscar Wilde text. These designs were carried out in making the lithograph paper of which there is but one style of twenty-four sheet, one six sheet, one three sheet, one one sheet and one half sheet window card. These lithographs are in black and white on a gray background, the only bit of color being a narrow ribbon of red on the border and a touch of red on the lips of the figure of Salome.

In the 11 x 14 lobby display cards a border drawing after the style of Beardsley surrounds each still from the production, and the cards are finished in solid blacks and whites. With the 22 x 28 lobby cards the same designs as those on the twenty-four and one sheet posters were used, again the colors being black and white.

The same Beardsley effect is carried out in the one, two and three column ready made advertisements which are exceptionally striking and which are of such a nature that they will stand out strongly against any other advertisement on any amusement page.

The exhibitor's campaign book of sixteen pages is in straight black and white all the way through, the front cover page being made up of one of the scenes from the Dance of the Seven Veils, the veil forming a white background for the gray figure of Salome, the whole setting against a dead black background which runs flush to the edges of the page.

Paper, lobby display and campaign book have been widely commented on and praised by exhibitors who have booked Nazimova's "Salome."

N.Y. Will See "If Winter Comes"

Fox Screen Version Of Famous Story For Broadway Before General Release

THE extraordinary success of A. S. M. Hutchinson's book "If Winter Comes," which, notwithstanding the fact that it is now in its second year of publication, is still one of the best sellers, has given added impetus to the interest aroused by the announcement that the William Fox screen version of "If Winter Comes" will be given a Broadway showing before being released generally throughout the country. The book has already had an enormous amount of advertising both in this country and in England.

The guarantee given the screen version by Fox Film Corporation's production is found in the nature of the adroitly selected cast, headed by Percy Marmont and Ann Forrest; also in the reputation for splendid results of Harry Millarde, who directed the picture, and the care and expense put on its filming here and in England. Many months of the closest application to the work in hand were required, and the services of all grades of English society were employed as a suitable background to the military and mob scenes while the exteriors were being shot.

Never before has the remarkable picturesque scenery of the land of George V. been so faithfully reproduced by an American film company it is claimed. Its famous castles, manor houses, cathedrals, village streets and country lanes have all been used just as they were introduced into the story by the celebrated author.

The filming of the novel created every indication of keen interest among the inhabitants of the towns and villages. Roy W. Hinds, an American writer who was in England at the time, bears witness to the enthusiastic reception given the American director and the members of the company.

Strong Cast for Second Nigh Production

The effort of Director Will Nigh and his distributors, L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North to capture the finest screen stars available for their second release, has been crowned with success. Not only have Tom Moore and Ann Forrest been secured, but an aggregation of sterling screen characters as famous in their particular roles as the leads are in theirs, has been added to the cast. Harry T. Morey, foremost "society strongman," and star of "Beyond the Rainbow" has been cast for a fitting role in Nigh's second, now being made at the Metro Studios, New York.

Edmund Breese, veteran paternal character of the stage and screen, plays his famous role in Nigh's second production.

Florence Billings is remembered from her past performance in "Who Are My Parents" and "What Fools Men Are."

Shannon Day is another favorite included in the cast. She appeared in "Manslaughter," "Affairs of Anatol" and "One Clear Call."

EXTRA!

DRIVEN

"Driven," the motion picture of Southern mountaineer life which opened an engagement at the Criterion Theatre yesterday afternoon, is one of the most genuine films even shown on Broadway. Except for its ending, which is, in part, a concession to the popular taste for theatrical hokum, it is convincingly sincere. And, most important of all, it is intensely dramatic. It is dramatic because it is rooted in reality, in a true situation, and grows logically, inevitably, up from its solid ground.

And it is unusually well made. Charles J. Brabin, who broke away from the movie millyard to do something he wanted to do in motion picture creation, went down into the Southern mountains to make this film. He sought a natural setting, he took competent players with him, and he grasped the fundamentals of life in the mountains before he used the camera. Then he made the picture. He brought technical skill and an instinct for cinematographic expressiveness to his task, and the result is a story in living pictures, pictures that you can't get away from and are not likely to forget for a long time. There are scenes in "Driven" that reach the summit of cinematographic power. It is impossible to imagine how the things they say could be more effectively told.

As the mother in the mountains, Emily Fitzroy gives a thrilling performance. Her life is dead. She is broken. Her face is forever set in weariness—except when it blazes in resolution. And when it blazes, the spectator sits up in his seat. He feels the fire. The others in the cast are also good. Elinor Fair, as the girl, is appealing, and Charles Emmett Mack, though not altogether a happy selection for his rôle, still gives it the essential character it demands. He weakens it chiefly in the close-ups, of which might be fewer. Burr McIntosh, as the father and George Bancroft as Lem are true to their type and make themselves plain. Altogether, the acting is excellent.

Failure," Release

Interest in the release, March 18th of the Associated Exhibitors six-part feature, "Is Divorce A Failure?" the first of the Leah Baird 1923 specials, has been intensified by the agitation for and against Senator Arthur Capper's bill for a federal marriage and divorce law. The measure, now before Congress, has received the endorsement of influential women's clubs and other organizations, and the discussion is filling many columns of newspaper space.

In view of the popular interest in a project to make conditions of marriage and grounds for divorce uniform, the date set for the release of the Leah Baird photoplay, in which the divorce question forms the basis of the plot, is regarded as peculiarly timely. But there are said to be nearly half a dozen other angles to the picture, any one of which, developed in real life, would be handled under scereheads in every newspaper.

"Wonders of Sea" on F.B.O. List

J. E. Williams' Under-Water Picture Favorably Received by N.Y. Critics

"WONDERS OF THE SEA," J. E. Williamson's under-water photoplay, is now on the F. B. O. release schedule. This picture on the occasion of its presentation at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, won a favorable reception on the part of the Metropolitan critics. Among the comments made by the newspaper reviewers were the following:

Evening Mail—"This sample of underwater photography is a marvelous piece of work, as thrilling as the most sensational melodrama and as beautiful as a visioned fairyland."

Evening Telegram—"'Wonders of the Sea,' which has been shown for a week at the Rialto with remarkable appreciation, is a gripping story of adventure among the denizons of the deep."

Evening Mail—"The best picture this week at the Rivoli is 'Wonders of the Sea,' which last week held forth at the Rialto. For the matter of that, 'Wonders of the Sea' would be just about the best picture in any film program in which it held a place."

The Times—"One of the most unusual and peculiarly fascinating motion pictures Broadway has ever seen."

Tribune—"'Wonders of the Sea,' made by J. E. Williamson, has been added to the feature at the Rialto, but it seems that the deep-sea picture ought to be feature enough all by itself on any program."

The trade paper critics were also favorable in their reception. The Exhibitors Herald called the picture "a remarkably interesting film depicting the wonders of the deep, with much beautiful photography and many thrilling dramatic moments. It is 4,500 feet in length and worth playing as a feature. . . . All in all, 'Wonders of the Sea' is a splendid achievement for the camera."

Harrison's Reports stated that the new F. B. O. release was "actually a treat, and the kind of a treat that makes picturegoers." The Moving Picture World called it an attractive offering on any production and they advised that it was good for any house anywhere.

Mr. Williamson is in receipt of many inquiries from exhibitors throughout the country who were influenced by the above reviews, and who have been eagerly awaiting the announcement of the picture's release.

"Wife In Name Only" Due Soon

Once Popular Stage Play From Bertha M. Clay Novel Is Nearing Completion

ABOUT twenty years ago, a certain manager of a theatrical stock company in Kansas City came to the conclusion that if he could advertise his shows with glaring lithographic posters, he would increase attendance regardless of the kind of shows he put on. Consequently, he collected the most glaring posters he could lay his hands on, and hired a little girl, just graduated from school, named Adeline Leitzbach, to write "plays" to fit these posters.

It was at this time that the novels of Bertha M. Clay were at the height of their popularity, and Miss Leitzbach got permission from the publishers to "dramatize" one of them. She succeeded in tailoring "Wife In Name Only" to enable her employer to use the posters that "glared" the most. The play was produced and presented, and the posters, the manager claimed, "packed 'em in to S. R. O."

To-day, at the studios of the Pyramid Pictures, Inc., in Astoria, L. I., under the direction of George Terwilliger, and with a cast of noted screen luminaries including Mary Thurman, Edmund Lowe, Florence Dixon, William H. Tooker, Arthur Hausman, Edna May Spooner and others, this same Adeline Leitzbach's dramatization of Bertha M. Clay's novel, "Wife In Name Only," is being made into a photoplay which the producers expect will be one of the outstanding cinema successes of 1923. Also, Miss Leitzbach's newest play, "Old Man Smith," is now in rehearsal at the Frazee theatre, and will shortly be presented on Broadway, featuring Tom Wise.

Alfred Lunt Heads "The Ragged Edge" Cast

Alfred Lunt, the handsome new star from the legitimate stage, evidently is in earnest about pictures. Having just completed work in "Backbone," which had its first private showing at the Mark Strand theatre, New York, on February 20, he is now dashing off to tropical climes for the filming of "The Ragged Edge" in which he also has the lead. Both of these pictures are for the Distinctive Pictures Corporation and will head a list of about twelve features for the year.

"Backbone" is Lunt's first appearance on the screen, he having broken into the films at precisely the same time as Glenn Hunter, with whom he appeared in the Broadway success, "Clarence." Lunt likes the work so well he started on "The Ragged Edge" at the Distinctive Studios with only a few days rest after the completion of "Backbone." Harmon Weight is directing the new picture.

The interiors for "The Ragged Edge," which is based on Harold McGrath's novel of the same name, have been filmed at the studios in the Bronx, New York, and the exteriors will be shot off Miami, Fla. Howard Estabrook, assistant production manager for Distinctive, has made two trips to that city to make arrangements for locations.

Paramount Campaign for Great Britain

A national advertising campaign for Paramount Pictures designed to reach the exhibitors and public of Great Britain has been launched by the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Paramount distributors in the United Kingdom, of which John Cecil Graham is managing director. This campaign has been patterned along the lines of the national advertising campagn conducted in this country by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and, according to advices received by E. E. Shauer, director of the company's foreign department, has been eminently successful.

Approximately one hundred newspapers, divided into three groups in accordance with their size, are being used in this advertising campaign, the first of its kind to be launched in Great Britain.

Another country which has made excellent progress in a national Paramount trade mark advertising campaign is Australia, which has been using the leading newspapers in the larger cities for several years.

Release "Shooting of Dan McGrew" in Fall

It has been definitely decided by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of S L Pictures, that their special production for Fall release will be "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." Due to the time which will be given the making of this picture and the desire of Arthur H. Sawyer to gather a superlative cast for the various principal roles, the production will not be started next month, as originally scheduled, the time being consumed by Mr. Sawyer in perfecting his plans for making this one of the most important offerings of the year.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" will present among other stellar players, Willard Mack, Lon Chaney and Barbara La Marr. Several weeks of preparatory work has already been done by the S L organization prior to the preparation of the continuity.

Screening of "Brass" Brings Bookings

FOLLOWING the screening of the Warner Brothers classic of the screen, "Brass," a Harry Rapf production directed by Sidney Franklin, before a representative audience of New England exhibitors, the management of the Park Theatre, Boston, booked the picture for an indefinite engagement, according to report, and it will be shown at that theatre beginning March 5.

The Strand Theatre, New York, has booked the picture for the week beginning March 11. For this showing the Warner staff has devised a number of exploitation stunts which are calculated to arouse further interest in the production.

"Famous Mrs. Fair" Is Endorsed

Fred Niblo Production Just Released Brings Much Favorable Comment

THE Fred Niblo production, "The Famous Mrs. Fair," which has just been released by Metro Pictures Corporation after six months of intensive studio work, has already proved to the industry that the careful attention given to its production has been warranted according to Metro. Endorsements, fully as enthusiastic as those given to the story in the stage version by James Forbes, have already been received for the photoplay, and Metro officials regard it as one of the best of their season's output.

Metro's confidence in the ability of this Louis B. Mayer production to make a high place for itself among the season's hits is based on several factors, each of the highest importance. In the first place, the play ran for a solid year on Broadway, with Henry Miller and Blanche Bates in the leading roles. For two years afterwards, three hundred American cities applauded it. Secondly, there is the skill of Fred Niblo which has time and again called for the highest tributes from photoplay critics. The director of such big productions as "Blood and Sand" and "The Three Musketeers" has enlarged on the stage version of the play, and the result of his labors is a heightening of the vital appeal of the drama in the story.

Thirdly, there is the cast, each member of which has been chosen solely on the basis of his or her fitness for each particular role. Myrtle Stedman, film actress of splendid capabilities, plays the role of Mrs. Fair; Huntly Gordon, a screen newcomer whose artistry has been promptly recognized, is seen as Jeffrey Fair; and others of importance in the large cast are Cullen Landis, Marguerite De La Motte, Ward Crane, Helen Ferguson and Carmel Myers.

Fred Niblo directed "The Famous Mrs. Fair" from Frances Marion's scenario of the great American play by James Forbes. Charles Van Enger photographed it.

"Village Blacksmith" Is Praised

Fox Reports First of Special Releases Being Well Received by Audiences

"THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH," the first of the recent list of Fox specials to be released, is receiving the wholehearted acclaim of audieinces throughout the nation, according to reports to the Fox offices from exhibitors in many of the key centers.

The Fox publicity department writes of the picture:

"In settings of pristine loveliness, the story of the village 'smithy' is unfolded. The film contains some of the most beautiful photography ever shown. It is an idyl of small-town life.

"Jack Ford, who directed the production, merits much commendation. He has kept the picture from becoming saccharine. It is as lovely as a New England springtime, and as rugged and strong as the sinews of the blacksmith. This is due to intelligent and capable acting. Bessie Love quite surpassed herself in a role of youth and charm.

"The Longfellow poem is too familiar to require elaboration in comment. The picture, founded on the poem, should have a tremendous success. It is universal in its appeal, is filled with honest sentiment and possesses many scenes of great beauty."

The cast includes Miss Virginia True Boardman, Miss Ida Nan McKenzie, Dave Butler, Gordon Griffith, George Hackathorne, Pat Moore, Tully Marshall, Miss Caroline Rankin, Ralph Yeardsley, Henri de la Garrique, Francis Ford, Miss Bessie Love, Miss Helen Field, Mark Fenton, Lon Poff, Miss Cordelia Callahan, Eddie Gribbon and Miss Lucille Hutton.

The scenario is by Paul H. Sloane, while George Schneiderman is the photographer. It was directed by Jack Ford, and according to the announcement is a 1923 melodrama.

Clifton Tells Perils Of Picture Making

Thousands of radio fans throughout the United States and elsewhere, possibly—"tuned in" on Weaf's concert program last Wednesday night and enjoyed hearing Elmer Clifton, producer of the Hodkinson super-special "Down to the Sea in Ships," which is now showing in New York, for an indefinite run at the Cameo theatre, and in several other cities, tell of the perils encountered by motion picture producers in filming novelties for the screen, and especially with reference to the dangers met in screening his own production.

Mr. Clifton, who is an interesting talker, held undivided attention for fifteen minutes while he related the adventures of his expedition to the Caribbean Sea.

"Isle of Lost Ships" Prints Arrive

Prints of Maurice Tourneur's "The Isle Of Lost Ships" have arrived in New York from Los Angeles and the production is said to have been approved by those who saw the preview. For some of the scenes he gathered together many old and new hulks of the sea from barges and sailing ships to submarines and liners.

The cast includes Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Frank Campeau, Walter Long, Hershell Mayall and others. The picture is a First National March release.

"Notoriety" Sold in Southwest

The territory including Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas was sold by Sam Sax, sales manager for L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, to the Southern States Film Co., Inc., of Atlanta, on the Will Nigh photodrama "Notoriety." This sale almost completes the disposal of state-rights on the society drama.

An early first-run has been arranged on a Southwestern circuit, and an exploitation campaign to be conducted on one of the largest scales the territory has yet seen, will soon be launched. A tie-up with the Dallas newspapers on an Anti-Notoriety campaign is being perfected. Previous to the opening of the picture, an elaborate preview is planned, where the leading public officials will be invited.

Choice Productions Is Busy on Series

The Choice Production studio is a bee-hive of industry these days where Tom Mills is directing the production of a new series of comedy subjects for that company. This series is said to bring to the screen an angle of life heretofore overlooked by producers which is replete with clean comedy and heart interest, the first subject is now in the cutters' hands.

These productions, together with the Comparable series of which four have been completed provide an excellently balanced lineup of two reelers. The Choice Productions, Inc., were fortunate in securing as technical director W. E. Shepherd whose artistic work in designing the sets for the "Connecticut Yankee" was to no small extent responsible for the success of that production.

"Alice Adams" Given Approval

Associated Exhibitors announces that already there has been an exceptionally heavy booking demand for its seven-part feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," though the picture is not to be released until April 8th. The National Committee for Better Films accorded this attraction a star rating.

"Pilgrim" Makes Critics Laugh

New York Reviewers Admit Falling Under Chaplin Spell In His Latest

IT'S a rare thing when critics agree but the New York critics are of one opinion as to the entertainment value of Charlie Chaplin's last First National funmaker, "The Pilgrim," which began a two weeks' run at the New York Strand on February 25. One writer, Joseph Mulvaney, in the New York American, admitted that he tried to view the picture from a critical angle but was compelled to forget that he was a critic and joined with the big crowd in the Strand in uproarious enjoyment of the fun.

Here in brief is what the New York critics wrote:

"If Chaplin had never made another comedy, if he had never been heard of before, 'The Pilgrim' would be a hit. That's the test and no one can doubt, surely, that 'The Pilgrim' meets it."—The Times.

"You'll feel ashamed of yourself for laughing at the incredibly grotesque adventures of Chaplin in this new picture, and yet you can't help it."—The American.

"It is incredibly funny. It contains elements of humor as vitally laughable as anything that has ever been written or said. Please don't miss it."—The Herald.

"We liked 'The Pilgrim' better than almost any of his other pictures and . . . we like 'The Pilgrim' . . . because it was filled with incidents you could not anticipate, presented in a way you do not expect."—The Tribune.

"There is quite a lot of the old-time sure-fire stuff throughout 'The Pilgrim,' although being only four reels long, the picture is at no time padded or tedious. It had them rocking in their seats yesterday."—The World.

"Is it funny? It is. It is screamingly funny, measured from the standard of things that make us laugh. We howled, we roared, we slapped our sides. If you love Chaplin as we do you'll see this picture. And if you don't love him perhaps you will after seeing it."—Daily News.

N. Y. Cameo Policy Changed

During Run Of "Down To Sea In Ships" Eight Shows Will Be Given Daily

OWING to the unprecedented public demand to see the Elmer Clifton production, "Down to the Sea in Ships," now said to be playing to capacity crowds at the Cameo theatre, New York, it is stated that beginning with Washington's Birthday and continuing for the balance of the run the doors of the Cameo theatre will open at 10 A. M., eight shows being given daily.

This radical change in policy of the theatre was made in order to accommodate the enormous crowds attending the theatre. Thousands of people have been turned away, it is said, and standees have been so frequent as to warrant the prediction that this latest Hodkinson feature might remain at the Cameo indefinitely.

"Down to the Sea in Ships" was sponsored by the citizenry of New Bedford, Mass., the home of the whaling industry on the Atlantic Coast. It was personally directed by Elmer Clifton in the quaint Massachusetts town and on the high seas, and was made with the co-operation of the Old Dartmouah Historical Society.

The New York critics and public hailed the photodrama as an epoch making event, and were unanimous in declaring the whale hunt and other thrills of this picture of the sea, to be beyond question the finest of its type ever screened

"Othello" Popular At Criterion

Picturization Of Shakespearian Drama Attracts Crowds To N. Y. House

WHEN Ben Blumenthal and David P. Howells decided to test the drawing power of Shakespeare by presenting "Othello," at the Criterion Theatre, New York, they did not dare to anticipate anything approaching the great demand for seats following the announcement of the public showing of the continental production

In order to better gauge the interest of the public in the presentation of the first really great picturization of a Shakespearian drama it was deemed advisable to have an advance ticket sale. A private showing of the film before a distinguished gathering of stage and screen notables brought a few laudatory paragraphs into the daily papers and was the means of attracting immediate interest in the advance sale of seats. By Thursday evening, a day after the box-office had opened on the advance sale, there was not a single seat to be had for the opening day, Sunday, February 25th, it is said.

The advance sale of seats has already reached such proportions that the first week's business at the Criterion is certain to reach a record figure, it is claimed.

The screen version of "Othello," because of its magnificent production and remarkable acting will, it is said, bring an entirely new element into motion picture theatres. It will appeal to the "high-brow" and low-brow in any city.

For these reasons both Mr. Blumenthal and Mr. Howells expect "Othello" to exert a splendid influence for good in motion picture progress. And at the same time widen the field of silver screen appeal.

John Barrymore, who has been engaged by Warner Brothers to appear in the title role of "Beau Brummel" as star of a special production.

War Veterans Featured In "Lost"

Ex-service men had an opportunity to display their medals during the filming of a big hospital set used for "Lost," a Regal Production special, starring Madge Bellamy, which is being made at the Thomas H. Ince studios.

World War veterans exclusively were used, those with medals being placed on the preferred list. One man, a Belgian, played a small part with an array of his ten medals across his chest.

Madge Bellamy as a Red Cross nurse and her leading man, Warner Baxter, play a number of big scenes in the opening sequence of the production, which is laid in the hospital, where the "hero," shell-shocked and without memory, is provided with an identity which leads to later dramatic situations.

First National Makes Big Foreign Deal

E. Bruce Johnson, foreign manager of Assotiated First National, has just concluded another deal with Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires for eight more new First National releases for distribution in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Boliva and Ecuador.

The pictures taken over by Glucksmann are "The Hottentot," "Skin Deep," "Bell Boy 13," "What a Wife Learned," "Man of Action," "Scars of Jealousy," "Sunshine Trail," all Thomas H. Ince productions and "Lorna Doone," a Maurice Tourneur production.

Glucksmann only recently took over thirteen other big First National attractions, including several Norma and Constance Talmadge pictures for the same territory.

Extra Box Office for "Third Alarm"

For the first time in its history, Barbee's theatre in Chicago was granted permission by the Chicago Building Commission to erect a temporary box office on the sidewalk to handle the crowds. The picture was "The Third Alarm," distributed by the Film Booking Offices of America.

Description of Method and Construction for Prologue Presentation

Articles by Lee S. Ferguson

THROUGH the courtesy of Edward L. Hyman, Manager of the Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and also with the cooperation of his Publicity Director, L. S. Ferguson, this department of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is to present a series of descriptions on the prologues presented each week at the Mark Strand Theatre.

These descriptions will take up in detail the mechanical construction and lighting employed to secure the desired effects which are employed in that theatre permitting the proper atmosphere for the picture showing. The mechanical construction and lighting of such prologues is in itself relatively simple and may be easily duplicated as a whole or in part by other theatres. The art in this presentation is in knowing how to secure the most striking results from inexpensive equipment. As this series of articles progresses, the majority of managers will undoubtedly find valuable suggestions which they will be able to incorporate in presentations in their own theatre.

WITH the building of new, modern theatres and the remodeling of others to bring them into popular favor again, presentation is the thing which is being most considered by the live exhibitor to keep his house three jumps ahead of the sheriff. Presentation may mean merely a song number, or a dance, or a jazz orchestra sidetracked in a box, or it may mean a synchronization of lighting, staging and orchestration to bring out not only an entertaining effect but an artistic one as well.

In the latter instance it is true that the number of theatres is in the minority, but their pace is being followed by more and more as time moves forward.

Probably the best equipped theatre in the country for presentation is the Brooklyn Mark Strand, of which Edward L. Hyman is managing director. Because Hyman is a firm believer in presentation has brought this fact about. This house was not so well equipped when he took charge of it, but through installing lights and other equipment it has been brought on a par with the finest in the land—it was already architecturally so. Its success proves the wisdom of this.

The stage presentation number which we take for example this week, in expectation it may prove beneficial to exhibitors in various sections, is a prologue to "Fury" used by the Brooklyn Mark Strand the week of February 18. Managing Director Hyman, because this photoplay is heavy drama, wanted lighter stuff in the specialty presentations, thus he chose a song number that had to do with the sea (in keeping with the picture) and to be sung by a bass singer. The usual doleful, sad vocal numbers heard frequently were avoided, and instead one with a lilt, a carefree note, was selected. This was "Bells of the Sea," by Lamb, and sung by Carleton Gerard.

Now, with the song number and singer all set, the question of staging came next, and from the possibilities were chosen the stage setting as photographed herewith. Its effectiveness, however, can not be fully realized from the pictured reproduction, because lighting played an important part, and as yet the photographer has not found a way to "shoot" it.

The presentation stage at the Brooklyn Mark Strand is about forty feet wide, thirty feet high and ten deep. The back drops are, therefore, made 30 x 40. In this prologue the back drop was a neutral blue, a painted drop that can be used to denote sea and sky. Immediately in front of this drop, centered, was placed the set piece representing the boat. This set piece consisted of a straight canvas, battened, for the outline of the boat to be painted upon. A light scaffolding, and legs, behind this held it secure, and a platform is used for the singer to stand upon.

For "water" in front of the boat a ground cloth is laid. This is scrim dyed light blue, and undulating from about one-third the way up the boat to the floor of the stage, reaching out toward the orchestra a distance of about six feet. Upon this ground cloth is thrown the surf effect from lights at each side of the stage. Thus surf effect gives the appearance of water splashing against the boat. To the right is the lighthouse in the distance, and to get the proper effect a "skiddoo" light, or flasher socket, was used. This flashes on and off regularly, a glowing, white light. For a smoke effect from the funnel of the boat, salamoniac placed on an electric heater turns the trick, making a steady and easily seen smoke without fumes or disagreeable effects. The windows of the cabin of the boat are transparencies, and behind them is placed a single red light, to lend that touch of necessary color, or contrast.

Now for the lighting. A steel blue spot light was focused on the singer from off stage, on a line with his face; the cove lights were blue; two magenta (reddish purple) entrance spots and two medium green, focused on the ceiling. The result was an ocean scene at night, with no great amount of detail but a soft blending of outlines, the swish of the ocean and the singer's song floating out from the ship. The orchestra accompaniment carried out the scheme, with chimes used for bell effects.

As devised and carried out by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman this prologue was the last word in effective presentation, and it can be duplicated or modified for almost any theatre, whether or not lights and equipment are available. For the exhibitor using it as described, the set piece representing the boat may be made of compo-board, the local sign painter making a cut-out for the rail, cabin and funnel. The flasher plugs for the lighthouse sell for about seventy-five cents anywhere, and a 10 or 25-watt globe screwed into the plug socket, or even a 50-watt lamp, will do the work. For smoke, if electric heater is not used, a bellows puffing up flour gives the effect. A hand bellows is nearly always available. A spot as described for the singer, and soft blues bathing the whole set, with surf effect, will get over nicely.

For the exhibitor without lights, or with only the spot, more detail should be worked into drop and boat, as the white lights would search out defects. Clouds in the sky and waves painted on the bottom section of the boat, with a clear outline of the lighthouse in the distance should be added. When the song starts the footlights or borders could be switched off and nothing would remain but the singer in the spotlight, or, if desired, the surf effect beneath. At the finish the lights could flash up again to show the set.

But what if you are among those exhibitors who have no stage? It means eliminating the set only, for if you have a space large enough for the singer to stand there is no reason why you should do without the number. Properly attired, in oilskins and the customary fisherman or sailor whiskers, and covered by a spotlight while all other lights are off, the singer would create an illusion that if used just preceding the picture 'Fury" would serve as a most suitable prologue. Organ accompaniment would be ideal, thus no orchestra is necessary for the music.

For the exhibitor who desires to use a little more space than enough to stand on, the suggestion is made that a frame about four feet wide by nine or ten feet high be put together and over this hang a transparency upon which is worked spars, masts, a sail or anything suggesting the sea. The light can be placed behind this transparency, giving a good effect, and a light can be thrown on the singer from the side but so that it doesn't fall on on the transparency. A frame like this can be placed at the side of the curtain or screen if desired, with a plush or velvet draw curtain over it to be opened and closed at the proper time. Or the frame can be centered before the screen and the curtains parted just far enough to reveal it. The singer, of course, would stand directly in front of the transparency.

Thus, it is seen that an elaborate presentation can be used.

Joe Moulton Dies

The motion picture industry will learn with the sincerest regrets of the death of Joe Moulton on February 13th, 1923. Mr. Moulton was exceedingly well known in this industry through his connections with the General Electric Company as New York manager of small motors and also through the distribution of motor generators and similar theatre equipment. Mr. Moulton had been active in this field for many years and was a member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

Baltimore's Metropolitan Simplexized

The Metropolitan theatre, which recently opened in Baltimore, Md., has as fine a projection room as anyone would want. It measures 10 feet by 18 feet and is equipped with three type "S" Simplex projectors with Snaplite lenses which project a 12-foot by 16-foot picture on a Minusa screen at a distance of 93 feet.

The above projectors were installed by N. C. Haefele & Company of Baltimore, as well as the following equipment: G. E. 100-ampere Generator, Kliegl Spotlight, Safe "T" First Film Cabinet and an enclosed film rewinder. N. Basil Morgan is the projectionist.

"A Striking Appearance"

EXHIBITORS realize that "a striking appearance" in a theatre-front pays dividends. Mr. Ed. Harvey, owner of the theatre shown above, tells us that because his theatre-front compels the attention of passers-by he is able to get more business—at better prices. And he credits a large part of this money-making distinctiveness to Terra Cotta, with which his theatre is effectively trimmed.

Terra Cotta will add to the business-getting attractiveness of any theatre. It permits the use of beautiful ornament that would be unreasonably expensive in any other equally effective material. And it permits the use of color as does no other facing material.

Terra Cotta costs but a moderate amount and pays for itself over and over in the people it brings in to your theatre. You don't have to spend money on its upkeep. If, in time, it gets soiled with dust and dirt, it can be washed down with merely soap and water, and made as spotless as new. It has an impervious surface—proof against weather and time, waterproof and fire-resistant.

CHAPTER III

REFRACTION—When light passes from one medium to another of different density it is refracted or bent, as shown in diagram No. 5. The different colored rays

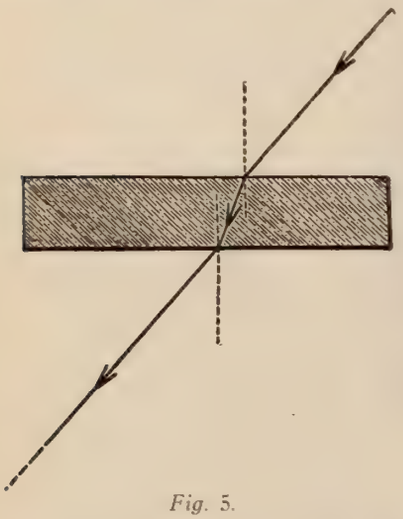

Fig. 5.

When a ray of light strikes another medium of greater or lesser density than the one it is leaving then, unless it strikes exactly perpendicular to the surface of the new medium, it will be bent or refracted. Figure 5 shows a ray passing through a block of glass and suffering two refractions, one upon entering and one upon leaving. In this case the two surfaces being parallel, the first refraction is neutralized by the second and the light ray continues in its original direction slightly displaced but parallel to its original course being refracted or bent in different degrees. Upon this principle depends the construction of lenses.

Dispersion is shown in diagram No. 6, that is, light in passing through a glass prism is separated into its component parts, and in case of white light into the spectrum colors violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and red.

Absorption—When light falls on an object which neither reflects, refracts nor transmits, the light is said to be absorbed. No known substance is an absolute absorber of light; that is, an absolute non-reflector. A flat or matte black surface comes the nearest to being a total absorber of light, but it is not possible to paint an object so black but what sufficient light will be reflected from it to reveal its details when brilliantly illuminated. Thus we see that what we call blackness is not caused by no light reaching the eye but when very little does. The blackest object looks gray in comparison to what is called Chevreul's black, which is the darkness of the mouth of a dark cavern or a hole in a large box lined with black velvet.

If the object reflects only red all the other colors are absorbed; if only yellow is reflected, then all others are absorbed. Again, if we use, as our incident light, any particular color of light which happens to be wholly absorbed by the object, that object will appear black; if, for example, we look at a yellow and a blue flower by the yellow flame of a spirit lamp with common salt in the wick, the yellow flower appears distinctly yellow, for it does not absorb yellow light on reflection, but the blue flower looks black, for it absorbs all the yellow light and reflects none of it.

We have briefly discussed four qualities of light. The entire science of optics is embraced under these four sub-heads, and the better we understand these properties of light the more intelligently will we be able to know how to illuminate a scene and what lenses to use, in order to obtain any photographic result that we wish.

We have already found that light is propagated outwardly in straight lines in every direction from a luminous object. When it strikes a smooth reflecting surface, such as a mirror or a pool of still water, it is reflected back from the reflecting surface at the same angle at which it strikes, or in more scientific terms, the angle of reflection is equal to the angle of incidence, as shown in Figure 8. As we have become accustomed to visualizing objects as being in a straight line before us, since light always travels in straight lines, when we look into a mirror we do not see the mirror itself but the image which it reflects, and the reflected image appears to be behind or beyond the mirror, since our habit of sight perceives the reflected object in that direction. If, however, the rays of light fall upon an object which is not perfectly smooth, each tiny particle which composes its surface presents a different angle to the light rays than its neighbor, so that the light will be reflected at a different angle from each of these particles. This light reflected from the rough surfaces has thus had its direction broken so that it travels in many different directions. This is shown in exaggerated form in Figure No. 9.

Such light is called a diffused light, thus, on a cloudy or hazy day the light of the sun is diffused by its many reflections and re-reflections from the particles of watery vapor in the atmosphere. On a clear day the direct rays of the sun cast a dark shadow when any object is interposed between the sun and any surface upon which its rays fall, but when the light is diffused the reflected rays from many directions fall beneath the object, since the object is not in line with these reflected rays, and illuminate the surface beneath the object and we are not able to distinguish any perceptible shadows.

Practically all interior illumination is diffused light, for we can only have direct illumination where the sun shines through a window or other opening. We find it necessary to diffuse the light in interior scenes in order to make them appear natural, for it is not yet possible in the majority of cases to obtain sufficient illumination in an actual interior to act upon a photographic film with sufficient intensity in the short time of the exposure necessary with the motion picture camera. We have to build our interior sets in a studio leaving them open to the light at the top, and generally upon two sides, thus allowing a flood of light to enter. If the stage is an open platform, or if the studio is not of ground or ribbed glass, which of itself diffuses the light, it becomes necessary to suspend screens of thin white cloth called diffusion or halation screens above the set, to break up and diffuse the direct rays of the sun.

When light strikes a smooth reflecting surface such as a mirror or a pool of still water it is reflected back at the same angle at which it strikes or in more scientific terms the angle of reflection N, C, B in figure 8 is equal to the angle of incidence A, C, N, both angles being measured from a line perpendicular to the reflecting surface at the point where the reflection takes place. These two angles always lie in the same plane with the perpendicular line which is always at right angles to the reflecting surface

We can all recall witnessing, even very recently, interior scenes taken in the direct sunlight where the pictures hung on the wall cast long oblique shadows and the characters, as they went through their actions on the screen, were each accompanied by a funereal silhouette which mocked every gesture in grotesque distortion upon the floor or wall. Happily, such scenes have now passed into the limbo of fading memories. When artificial lights are used, such as arc lamps, the light is diffused by ground or ribbed glass screens or with tracing cloth or similar material. The tubes of Cooper-Hewitt lights cover such an area that it is not usually necessary to use a screen for them, for the light, coming from so large an area covered by the tubes, is already sufficiently diffused.

When we produced the spectrum by passing a ray of light through a glass prism we found that the beam of light was bent or turned to one side by the glass; that is, the light was refracted. This refraction only takes place at the point of entrance between two mediums of different density. After being refracted at the surface the light continues to travel through the second medium in a straight line from the point of entry to the point where it emerges on the other side where a second refraction takes place, light again continuing to travel in a straight line. This angle of refraction varies according to the density of the medium in its relation to light and is always the same in the same medium, thus different kinds of glass and all transparent crystals and liquids have different angles of refraction. This angle of refraction is called the index of refraction. These indexes of refraction have been measured by mathematicians who make calculations for manufacturers of lens and predict all of its properties before one has been made. Such calculations are, however, far beyond the scope or needs of any ordinary photographer.

In Figure No. 10 we have a point from which emanates rays of light. Suppose we take a number of prisms with varying angles as illustrated in the diagram, the angle of each being such that each ray which passes through each prism is refracted to the point so that each of these rays is again collected at this point. Let us now examine the line of prisms which we have thus placed. The central prisms have sides which are nearly parallel, which progress outward from the center, the angle increases until the two faces come together. We will now replace the line of prisms with a lens covering practically the same range as the prisms as in Figure No. 11. We find that the lens also gathers all of the rays as the prisms did and refracts them again to the same point, so that we can consider the lens as a number of prisms rounded off into a single piece, or speaking still more exactly, that the lens is a continuation of an infinite number of prisms, the flat surfaces of which are too small for the eye to detect. This infinite number of surfaces, or points, we find, ranges itself into the segment of a circle. This refraction of rays emanating from a point back to a point again is termed a "point of focus."

If we now take two luminous points at the same distance from the lens but separated a short distance from one another, as in Figure No. 12, we will find if we have a screen for the rays to fall upon, that the two points will be reproduced side by side in exact miniature

This is the same as Figure 10 with the proper curved surfaces substituted for the angular surface of the joined group of prisms

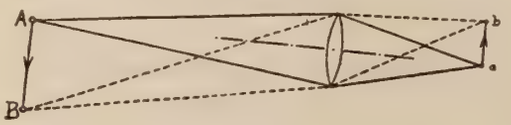

Fig. 12

If we take two luminous points, A and B, we find that the lens will form images of these two points as a and b. The point A being on the principal axis of the lens its image will be formed at a, also on the principal axis any motion of B will cause a diametrically opposite motion in b

Let us take the points A and B in these two diagrams. In both the upper and lower diagrams the image of A will form in the plane a and that of B will form in the plane b. It is in these two planes that the sensitive surfaces should lie to render sharply the images of A or B as the case may be

We desire to receive both of these images, however, on the plate at once and utilize the two following means for obtaining the result. First we compromise between the two planes a and b and place our plate in the plane "C." We do this becaue the circle of confusion at C, is common to both and is the smallest mean between the planes a and b. This compromise prepares us for better results in our 2d procedure. This consists of placing a diaphragm close to the lens. This diaphragm is a piece of black cardboard with a smooth, round hole in it and its function is to diminish the angle on the rays of light that represent the extremes of the cones of light which form the images a and b. This has the desired effect of reducing the size of the circles of confusion at C to an inappreciable size. This size depends on the distance between A and B and on the size of the hole in the diaphragm. A circle not greater than 1/100 inch is permissible in stills but for the cinema film one of 1/400 inch is about the limit of size

The Laws of Magnetism

Lesson II—Part I

THE ancient Greeks know of a magic stone which had the power of attracting to it bits of iron. This wonderful stone they called a magnet, after Magnesia, a country in Thessaly, where it was first found.

Many years later some one discovered the fact that a long, thin piece of such a stone, if suspended, or hung, by a silk thread, would swing around until one end pointed nearly north and the other south. Silk thread was used because it has no tendency to twist or turn of itself; thus any turning must be due to the action of the magnet. For this reason it came to be known also as a lodestone (leading stone). Mining men speak of it as Magnetite (Mag-ne-tite), which is an oxide of iron. Not all pieces of magnetite, however, have this power of attracting iron particles.

Magnets are divided into two general classes, Natural and Artificial. The lodestone, or magnetite, is a natural magnet. An artificial one is one which is created by contact with a natural magnet or some other method.

If a bar of steel is stroked in a certain manner with a magnet, and the stroking repeated a number of times, it will be found that the steel bar also possesses the power of attracting pieces of metal such as iron, steel, nickel, etc. This stroking can be done in two ways. In Fig. 1-A the magnet is placed on the left end of a steel bar and then moved slowly over to the right end. This operation is repeated a number of times by lifting the magnet off the strip of steel and carrying it back to its starting point, as shown by the dotted line. This precaution must be observed, since if the magnet is drawn back over its first path, the bar will be demagnetized; that is, will lose whatever magnetism it obtained by the first stroke. This method of forming an artificial magnet is called the "single stroke" method.

Another way is shown in Fig. 1-B, whereby two magnets are used to stroke the steel bar. In this case, however, the starting point is at the center of bar to be magnetized and the magnets are drawn away from each other, one to the left end and the other to the right end of the bar. This stroking is also repeated a number of times, care being taken to lift the magnet off the bar at the end of each stroke and return them to the starting point, as shown by the dotted lines. This is known as the "double stroke" method.

Artificial magnets are in turn divided into permanent and temporary magnets. The steel bar described above is a permanent magnet because after being stroked a number of times, it will hold its magnetism for a long while. In other words, its magnetism lasts, and thus a new magnet has been created. Hence, the word permanent magnet. If a bar of soft iron, however, had been used instead of steel it would only have retained its magnetism while under the influence of the stroking magnet and as soon as the stroking stopped, it would have lost practically all its magnetism. So soft iron can only be magnetic while another permanent magnet is either touching it or else very close to it. In other words it is a temporary magnet.

The earth is a huge natural magnet. One end is called the North Pole and the other the South Pole. These names are arbitrarily given to the two poles. Now all magnets have a north and south pole, and if two strips of magnetized steel are each hung by a silk thread and brought close to each other they will twist themselves around until the north pole of one is as close as it can get to the south pole of the other. If, however, the two north poles are placed together, they will repel, or push away each other. Since this is also true in the case of two south poles, a very important law of magnetism can be stated as the result of the above experiment. This is "Like poles repel and unlike poles attract." In other words, two north poles will repel each other but a north and south pole will attract or draw each other.

Knowing this law, we are in a position to attempt an explanation of some of the action of magnets. A common theory for explaining the formation of magnets is as follows: In Fig 2-A is shown a bar of demagnetized iron. This bar is made up of countless thousands of little particles which are themselves tiny magnets. Each has a north pole and south pole. The black portion of each particle represents the north pole and the white the south pole. It will be noted that these particles are all jumbled up, having no particular order or formation. Hence the combined effect of all the jumbled up particles is to leave the iron bar without any noticeable magnetic effect. They neutralize each other, so to speak.

But suppose this iron bar is stroked once with a real magnet. Some of the particles will then arrange themselves in order. That is, they will move so that the north poles point in one direction and the south poles in the opposite direction. If the bar is stroked again more of them will arrange themselves in order, and this will continue with each stroke until practically all of them are lined up as shown in Fig. 2-B. Thus all the black ends, which are north poles, will point in one direction and the other ends in the opposite. One end, to which the blacks point, will become the north pole of the magnet and the other the south pole.

Now the difference between a permanent and temporary magnet is simply this: In a permanent magnet the particles stay lined up as shown, and in a temporary one they quickly disarrange themselves and go back to their former state of disorder.

If one end, say the north pole, of a magnet is cut off, a new north pole is immediately formed in its place, and the piece cut off also becomes a magnet (Fig. 3).

Lines of Force

The action of a magnet can be pictured by imagining lines of force coming out of the north pole and swinging around through the air to the south pole. The lines then enter

UNDOUBTEDLY there are certain phases of electricity and mathematics which are being treated in this series of articles that are not made entirely clear to every projectionist. As it is essential that all the points brought out in the articles be thoroughly understood, it is suggested that points which need further explanation be called to the attention of the Editor. A thorough study made of these articles will enable the projectionist to gain a relatively comprehensive grasp of electricity as needed for his work. It is therefore highly recommended that each article as it appears be given considerable study for, as the subject progresses, constant references will be made back to past articles. By keeping this series of articles it will be possible for the projectionist to secure a file of very good material on the subject of electricity.

Simplified Electricity for Projectionists

the south pole and go through the magnet to the north pole (Fig. 4). It is these lines of force which exercise the effect of attracting or repelling bodies as the case may be. Thus if two north poles are brought near each other, since the lines in each case are leaving the north poles, they will buck each other and hence push the two poles away. In the case of two south poles, however, the lines are both going in the same direction leaving the north pole and entering the south pole so the two poles will be attracted.

The reason why certain demagnetized pieces of metal are attracted to the north or south pole, as the case may be, is explained as follows: If a piece of soft iron, for example, is brought near the north pole of a magnet, it will be magnetized as explained before and lines of force will flow from the first magnet to the nearest end of the soft iron and induce or set up in it a new south pole. The opposite end will become a north pole. As unlike poles attract each other the soft iron is drawn to the magnet. The process is reversed in case the soft iron is brought near a south pole. The action of inducing a pole in an iron bar is as follows: Fig 5 shows the lines of force coming out of the north pole of a permanent magnet. Now it is a fact that the air offers a greater resistance to these lines than does the iron. Since the iron offers an easier path to the lines from the magnet, more of them will be drawn to it. Hence the lines will crowd into this end of the iron bar, and since the condition for a south pole is that the lines of force must enter it (Fig. 4) a new pole is created which is a south one.

The opposite end of the bar must then become a north pole since there can be only one north and one south pole in any given magnet at the same time. If the first magnet should be removed from the soft iron bar it (the bar) will immediately lose its magnetism.

Dear Sir:

Although I am not what one might call a professional projectionist, yet I have operated machines of various makes since my sixth grade in grammar school. We are having a show a week here and as we are having a great deal of trouble, due to misframes, bad mending and the like, I am tendering my application to join the League. I realize that the pledge contains very concisely the film evils and I willingly take it and resolve to do my best to correct these faults and to always send away a film in better condition than I receive it.

Enclosed please find 25 cents in stamps for button, and please send me membership card and shipping blanks. Let me know of any charge.

on the screen, but that the point of illumination which is above the original point of illumination is reproduced below the point of the original point of focus of the first point. If we now move this screen closer to or farther away from the lens, we find that the point of light enlarges in a circle of illumination. This is termed the circle of confusion. By moving the screen back and forth we also find that there is only one position in which the points of illumination are perfectly reproduced. If, however, we now move one of these points of illumination to a much greater distance than the other, we find that while one is sharp and distinct the other forms a small circle of confusion and that when we move the screen so that the more distant one is in focus, that the other becomes a circle of confusion, or out of focus, as it is termed. If, however, we move the two points closer to one another, but still at different distances from the lens, we find that we can bring them both to a focus on the screen or rather, so nearly to a focus that the eye is not able to distinguish the difference in sharpness between the two. This difference of distance between the two points of illumination is called the depth of focus.

Let us now take the points of illumination, as in Fig. 13, with one of the points focused sharply. If now we interpose a piece of black cardboard, in which a small round hole has been cut, close to the lens so that this hole is near the center of the lens, we find that the brightness of the images is much decreased but that the image of the point which was out of focus is now much sharper. Let us refer to our Fig. 13. Our images are not nearly so brilliant because much of the light which formerly came through the lens has been cut off by the piece of black cardboard; but as the cardboard has narrowed down the angle which the light ray takes from the lens to the focal plane, we have narrowed down or made smaller, our circle of confusion.

"The Covered Wagon"

Governments have been overthrown by smaller armies than the one Paramount sent into the wilds of the Western country to make "The Covered Wagon." It cost Columbus less to discover America than it did James Cruze, director, to produce his supreme Paramount achievement.

It's a picture of which the whole industry should be proud. Small wonder then that Paramount wanted the artistic and dramatic value of Carl Brown's photographic masterpiece carried through from camera to screen.

The superiority of STANDARD SERVICE and STANDARD PRINTS had been demonstrated on previous Paramount productions. These producers confidently entrusted this great picture to STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. The excellence of the negative and prints we made justified this confidence. We are proud of our part in bringing "The Covered Wagon" to the screen.

"The COVERED WAGON"

A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION

IN investment of time, money, talent and resources, "The Covered Wagon" is Paramount's biggest enterprise. Nothing was spared in making it, for Paramount has had from the beginning full confidence that it would be the greatest popular attraction ever offered to the American people.

On the following page you will find further FACTS about this picture.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

THIS IS No. 2 of a Series

"The COVERED WAGON"

The Indian Attack

One of the many thrills in "The Covered Wagon."

THE attack of a thousand Indians on the two mile wagon train is one of the greatest thrills ever staged. These Indians were brought from reservations hundreds of miles away to appear in this episode.

It is one of the things which make "The Covered Wagon" the greatest theatrical attraction in all history.

Adapted by Jack Cunningham from the novel by Emerson Hough

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

DE MILLE DID IT!

"ADAM'S RIB" HAS BROKEN

RECORDS IN EVERY CITY WHERE IT HAS BEEN SHOWN

IN NEW YORK

"Adam's Rib" on its opening date took in 8,992 paid admissions. "Manslaughter" drew 8,939. It's now in its second week, doing capacity.

IN LOS ANGELES

In its first four weeks "Adam's Rib" beat "Manslaughter" for same period by 751. It's still doing capacity.

IN SALT LAKE CITY

Broke all records for attendance at Paramount Empress Theatre. Showed to over 18,000 paid admissions in four days, in 1,400 seat house.

IN OMAHA

Gross business over twenty per cent better than "Manslaughter." Capacity business prevailed. Critics and audience applauded.

AND IN A SMALL TOWN

"Adam's Rib" is unquestionably the finest photoplay ever made. I thought I was hard boiled but this picture got me for two hours of solid enjoyment. Take all you can of the greatest pictures since nineteen twelve and "Adam's Rib" is greater than all combined. Have never seen anything like it.—George Rea, Colonial Theatre, Washington, Ohio.

Every DeMille Picture is a Record Breaker.

"ADAM'S RIB" is the biggest of them all!

"ADAM'S RIB" was written by Jeanie Macpherson.

When the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announced that Walter Hiers would be starred it was generally agreed that the last effort to re-establish Roscoe Arbuckle on the screen had been abandoned. Though not so large as Arbuckle, Mr. Hiers is physically ample, and his style of comedy is more or less that common to the fat man. So it was taken for granted that he would be put forward as Arbuckle's successor.
And now his first comedy has come to the Rialto. It is "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," an adaptation by Albert Shelby Le Vino from the story of the same name by Dana Burnet, and it was directed by Wesley Ruggles—all of which is necessary and perhaps interesting information, but the first question is, Does Mr. Hiers land in Arbuckle's place? And the answer is, He does. Or rather, he doesn't—for he goes beyond Arbuckle, higher or further, whichever way you choose to measure his distance. Mr. Hiers is a real comedian, which means that he is an actor. Arbuckle at his best was only an amusing clown with a foolish smile. Hiers, on the other hand, has the smile and a whole lot more. He ought to go much further than Arbuckle ever did.
The comedy in which he makes his first starring appearance is a diverting piece. It is padded beyond its best length and therefore moves slowly in places, but it is bright, in the main, and at times scampers merrily along. Its story is that of a haberdashery clerk who falls in love with the picture of a South American beauty, is fired for being late from lunch, spends his last dime for a cigar with the beauty's picture on the band, and as a result of these incidents finds himself catapulted into the midst of a bloodless but very active revolution.
Abetting Mr. Hiers in getting the fun out of the comedy's situations are Jacqueline Logan, George Fawcett, Robert McKim and a number of others. Wesley Ruggles, the director, and Albert Shelby Le Vino, the scenarist, also did their parts.
The whole Rialto program is good this week. Holding its own with the feature

Tying Up Your Public With Your Picture

Some pictures float along on the screen with a good cast, good photography; an interesting story—apparently a fine photoplay. But the story drifts away from your audience. The picture and your public don't get together.

The Real Audience Picture

Is the one that reaches right out at the beginning and pulls your audience right up into the screen; makes them go WITH the action in the story straight through the picture. What happens to the characters also happens to your audiences. Your people then don't just WATCH something! They actually LIVE something!

When you give your patrons one of these pictures, you not only entertain them, but you put something NEW into their lives.

That's the kind of audience picture you will get in D. W. Griffith's "One Exciting Night"

NAZIMOVA'S "SALOME" STARTLES ALDINE, PHILLY, BY BIG GROSS

Held Over—Expected to Do $5,000, Did $12,000—

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.

The surprise feature last week in films here was the good business turned in by Nazimova's "Salome" at the Aldine. Here was a feature touted by nearly everybody here as too highbrow to draw, especially in the Aldine which has not been doing especially well since its opening over a year ago. It was booked for a week, and generally figured to gross around $5,000 in this medium capacity house. Instead after a weak opening "Salome" commenced to drag them in. The dailies were enthusiastic, and one drastic critic devoted most of his Sunday column to it. None of the reviews were of the usual cut-and-dried nature, and all commented on the fact that "Salome" was a little bit different from any other feature ever made.

The crowds began to come. By the middle of the week it was decided to hold "Salome" over for another six days, the first time this has happened at the Aldine since last fall. The crowds were curious, though it is not likely that any were expecting risque stuff, as the reviews especially noted the absence of sensationalism. It was felt by many that the demand would slump after the first brigade of curious had passed, but despite some very cold weather business continued big all week, and with the warmer spell this week the gross expected to hold up.

Exhibitor Value

Because both producer and star are known wherever motion pictures are shown.

Because Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand are strong at the box-office everywhere.

Because the producer declares "Suzanna" to be the best picture he ever made.

Because the star says she has done the best work of her career in this film.

Audience Value

Because this picture has everything in it for any group of patrons anywhere.

Because there is a splendid all-star cast that put actual life into their roles.

Because there is a beautiful love story, smoothly told, full of action and thrills.

Because there is plenty of good comedy as relief to suspense, adventure, big romance.

MOTION picture fans are anxious to see the most talked of woman in the world today —Pola Negri.

Since her arrival in this country, her name has been headlined by every paper in a series of news stories which have resulted in an interest in this remarkable star such as has never before been observed in the amusement industry.

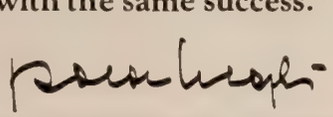
Everyone is eager to see this star in her latest picture, "Mad Love," the first to be released since her arrival, and which, over her own signature, she claims to be her greatest success since "Passion."

Its two first openings (New York and St. Louis) have resulted in breaking all house records.

As a showman you will undoubtedly be quick to grasp the money-making possibilities of Pola Negri in "Mad Love." Here is opportunity knocking at your box-office window.

What Pola Negri Says:

"I trust that 'MAD LOVE' will receive a cordial response from the American audiences. In Europe its success was unparalleled, even by 'PASSION,' and I hope that the exhibitors in America meet with the same success."



What the New York World says:

"The throngs which stood six deep swinging away a block and a half down Broadway with their eyes upon the lobby of the Capitol Theatre at six o'clock last night constituted, we thought, something that resembled a kind of Pola expedition.

"It is a mark of rare distinction for any motion picture player to be able to fill the gigantic Capitol and congest Broadway outside. And there is no hesitancy on our part in saying that at the moment Miss Negri is unquestionably the most popular woman screen player in the world. As a cinema play 'asset' there is no one to touch her. Of course, her title writer and bedroom decorator are great little helps. 'MAD LOVE' WE BELIEVE, IS A PLAY FAR SUPERIOR TO 'PASSION.'"

Pest of the Storm Country

You've seen burlesques and burlesques, but you haven't seen nothin' yet, until you see "Pest of the Storm Country." It's a Mermaid, made by Jack White under the direction of Robert Kerr, and it's a wow!

It has Louise Fazenda, Harry Gribbon, Jack Lloyd and some other Mermaid funmakers in it, and all in all is about the funniest thing that has been produced by this or any other company.

Louise has a persistent lover, who plays various musical instruments, rain or shine, and hangs around her cottage door. Finally, one night, when an awful storm comes up, she invites him to stay all night, and while she's fixing the spare room in the shed he runs home for his pajamas. Not new. No. But funny. And such a storm. Twice as many trees fall as in "One Exciting Night" and the wind blows twice as hard. Louise's pet dog just floats through the air at the end of its leash. There are plenty of laughs in this two-reeler. Our advice is to hop out and get it. And advertise it.

"DOWN to the SEA in SHIPS"

"One of the Most Marvelously Amazing Attractions Ever Offered to Owners of Motion Picture Theatres"

— Motion Picture World

A FRAIL boat and its six occupants towed at express-train speed toward three thousand miles of open water, through a sea lashed into foam by a maddened whale. A sudden turn; a shout, "Look out, he's heading for us!" The oars are splintered along one side of the whaleboat; before the startled crew can back-water, the monster of the deep is upon them!

A flip of its death-dealing "flukes," and both craft and its occupants are tossed high in the air. The boat falls back into the sea a battered wreck, its crew floundering about in shark-infested waters.

Such is the climax of the most astounding piece of realism ever photographed—a motion picture made in the broad reaches of mid-Atlantic, with a 90-ton sperm whale as the principal actor, and the hand of chance directing as fierce a battle between man and mammal as the long history of whaling has ever known.

It required eighteen months to make "Down to the Sea in Ships." It is utterly unlike any other production ever filmed, because it is nature at her most thrilling moments.

Yet back of this vivid picturization of daring runs one of the sweetest love-stories ever unfolded on the screen, a romance breathing all of the quaint customs of the most famous whaling city in the world.

The leading motion picture houses of the country are showing "Down to the Sea in Ships." If it has not yet been shown in your community, ask the manager of your motion picture theatre when he expects to play it. He will be glad to give you the date. Better still, fill in, tear off and mail the coupon opposite, upon receipt of which we will mail you without charge an illustrated souvenir booklet fully describing "Down to the Sea in Ships," together with a plan for encouraging its exhibition in your town.

What the Press Thinks:

"One of the most interesting pictures ever produced. . . . It combines pretty nearly the best in everything, acting, photography, direction and cast."
—Philadelphia North American

"Probably one of the most beautiful photoplays ever made. . . . The enthusiasm grew by leaps and bounds."
—Boston Globe.

"One of the real surprises of the season . . . one worthy of a place among the finest of the year . . . there have been no more thrilling escapades ever caught by the camera . . . a film that will blaze the trail for the new type of pictures that are bound to come."
—Detroit News.

"In this picture the screen has gained one of its few veritable classics. It is visual literature, hauntingly beautiful. A truly great film."
—Boston Advertiser

MOTION PICTURE NEWS (covers / is filed throughout) the field

THERE is a lot of human interest in this picture, as well as numerous "big punch" situations. It registers as a good, wholesome melodrama, with plenty of rapid action, and carries a popular appeal. Also, it is decidedly refreshing to meet with such a rare type of screen hero, who is anything but heroic, rather a weakling in fact, but when thrown unexpectedly into an atmosphere altogether foreign to his nature, suddenly braces himself to meet the emergency, shows an undaunted front to his enemies, defeats their plans and wins a girl worthy of his love.

That "The Inner Man" will please a majority of film patrons is a safe prophecy. It abounds in beautiful photography; is free from padding and should prove a satisfactory box office asset.

The role fits Wyndham Standing like the proverbial glove. It is a capital bit of character work. Dorothy Mackaill is an exceedingly pretty and convincing heroine.

The continuity is even and the action swift from start to finish.

EVELYN MCCOY	BERTRAM JOHNS

A TASTE OF THE PLOT

A man, primitive, masterful—a girl who loves his strength and fears his domination—and a polished man of the world. Comes a terrific conflict in the elemental, and the struggle to win a woman's soul. A story of the lonely spaces of the Northwest and Broadway's swarming nights—of a fiery, dominant man and a cultured city-bred woman.

CHARACTER OF THE STORY

Big in dramatic thrill—bigger still in spectacular sensation. Few have seen anything to equal the terrific dam-burst that sends flood waters seething over the countryside in miles-wide sweep of disaster, nor anything to surpass the mad stampede of a thousand steers, crushing life beneath flying hoofs, thundering down on the man who stands alone to check them. Thos. H. Ince has made those moments masterful.

READ WHAT T H CRITICS SAY:

INTENSELY INTERESTING DRAMA OF SOCIETY

"A thoroughly convincing and well-acted melodrama. The characters are well drawn and the work of the entire company brings out various situations in the best light. The story is both interesting and amusing and has good lighting and artistic settings.

"An intensely interesting play of the 'society' type. The centre of interest is fastened upon three characters and it is all the more praiseworthy that the situations and acting create such good entertainment.

"John Bowers, in the role of Jim Russell, is well fitted for the part. He acts with restraint and is very effective as the young, struggling engineer. Marguerite de la Motte has an equally important part as Sheila Dorne, an authoress and playwright who finds a husband rather a nuisance when she goes after a career. Milton Sills plays the role of the producer of plays, Rudolph Martin, with his usual reserve and conviction."—Exhibitors Herald.

WILL BRING GOLD TO THE BOX OFFICE

"Excellent entertainment is offered by this production which is in every way up to the high standard of previous Thomas H. Ince pictures. A clear, well constructed plot, photography of the best grade, intelligent acting by a talented cast and skilled direction are the qualities which register 'What a Wife Learned' as a feature worthy the attention of all exhibitors and likely to bring golden box office returns. The love interest gathers and develops without once striking a jarring note. The narrative gets into its stride quickly, there are no dull moments nor slackening of speed from start to finish. The big flood scene will surely thrill all beholders and a most satisfactory climax is achieved."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

Gentlemen:

I know that you will be interested in knowing that "The Hottentot" shattered all previous box office records at this theatre. This covers a period of almost four and one half years.

I am not exaggerating in the least when I say that we have never shown anything in the past that satisfied the general public, as has this attraction.

I have seen thousands of pictures in the last eighteen years, but have never witnessed an attraction containing so great a combination of comedy, action, thrills and daring horsemanship as is contained in "The Hottentot".

My heartiest congratulations to Mr. Thos. H. Ince, the producer, and to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., may we get many more of this type of pictures.

Yours very truly,

"Scars of Jealousy"

Coming!
The Novelty Melodrama of the Year

Galleons, derelicts, once-proud clippers, stately liners, caught in the grip of the weird Sargasso Sea through centuries and wedged by sea-weed into an island of lost ships. A colony of men and only two women inhabit it, a rabble ruled by a giant with the right of might. Escape is impossible. Each new wreck adds castaways, desperate men—sometimes a woman, and she, by community law, must marry within one day, choosing her husband from the mob. The man she takes must defend her against all-comers.

To this island drift a millionaire's daughter, a New York detective and his prisoner, an ex-naval officer charged with murder—sole survivors of a wreck. And although the girl would give a million for reprieve, she must choose her mate from the men who offer. Two want her—the brute who rules and the man accused of murder.

Director Maurice Tourneur tackled a big job in filming this story of Captain Crittenden Marriott's. Not only was there drama of the strongest kind, but also the unprecedented locale of the Sargasso Sea with its waste world of stagnant weed, its submarine monsters, the hundreds of ships it never lets go. A sailor's myth some call the Sargasso Sea; yet the atlas shows it at the Gulf of Mexico's very door. Thus Tourneur has depicted both island and people, in scenes that come as some new, almost incredible wonder.

With Anna Q. Nilsson, Milton Sills, Frank Campeau and Walter Long in the cast, produced at M. C. Levee's vast United Studios, at Hollywood, "The Isle of Lost Ships" will be discovered as that rarest of jewels—a photoplay the like of which has never been seen.

Yo ho, me hearties! Bend a sail!

Motion Picture News

State Rights

THE Arrow Film Corporation takes exception to some recent editorials of ours on distribution and percentage playing.

"You condemn the entire system of motion picture distribution as in vogue at present," writes W. Ray Johnston, "and we agree with you that the charge is right under certain conditions: but we wish to call your attention to a fact you have overlooked—that this does not apply to the independent producer and distributor of motion pictures."

Reciting that, in the State Rights field, the picture is sold individually to the independent exchangeman and, in turn, rented individually to the exhibitor the writer goes on: "He (the independent exchangeman) does not sell (pictures) in a group, he does not force an exhibitor to contract for a lot of inferior product in order to secure one or two superior pictures—which is one of the reasons why the bigger and better producers are turning to the independent market more rapidly every day and why independent productions are earning more money for their producers, distributors and exhibitors, than other pictures."

Theoretically, the independent exchange—independently owned and operated, independent of production and exhibition—is the ideal agent for marketing film.

There's little argument about that.

Not only does the independent exchangeman know his customers and their needs and resources better than New York knows them, but also he has full power to deal as he himself decides and there's no production pressure put upon him to sell in block, or in any other way unfair to the producer on the one hand and to the exhibitor on the other.

Today it would seem that the independent exchangeman has become practically as well as theoretically strong.

He has come into his own.

And why?

Because, at last, he is getting product—good product, product that will compare with the best.

We all know what prestige means in any selling field.

When a salesman with prestige—the prestige that consistently good product carries—approaches the customer, the latter meets him half way or more.

Today the exhibitor knows that the independent exchangeman bears a place in his consideration of the market that the independent exchange has never before held. He can now look to this source for an assured number of highest grade pictures—and he is looking.

Product and advertising are the two great forces in any merchandising field.

In the picture field, because product varies so greatly, these two forces are joined more closely and sympathetically than in any other sales field.

As J. D. Williams recently pointed out—the first executive to do so—the poor picture does not deserve advertising, cannot stand advertising in the interests of all who handle it, and of the business as a whole.

But the good picture will stand all the good advertising it can get.

And now that the state right field has received good product, it will need good advertising if its pictures are to have their place in the public sun.

Its pictures will need advertising to the exhibitor, for the exhibitor and to the public through the exhibitor—plenty of it, judiciously and efficiently done. And this demands resources. It can't be poorly or partly done.

Good product is part of the battle. The other part is advertising.

And advertising is the problem today, the big and pressing problem that confronts the independent exchange field.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

THAT Charlie Chaplin is still the greatest of favorites is attested to by the reports coming in from First National on "The Pilgrim." Already the bookings at the New York Exchange of this company show that one hundred and thirty houses will show the comedian's latest picture during the week of March 12.

Here is F. N.'s evidence: Six Keith houses, six Moss houses, eight Fox houses, four Proctor houses, three Consolidated houses, four Sydney Cohen houses, five M. & S. houses, twenty-one Loew houses, seventy-two Independent houses and one Yost house. During the week of March 19 ninety-nine Brooklyn houses will show the Chaplin picture. Can you beat it?

THE recent opening of Tut-ankh-amen's tomb near Luxor, and the widespread publicity it has been given, will shortly be reflected on the screen. "Bella Donna" will have scenes laid in the very locale now receiving such wide notice. William P. S. Earle is to do a picture under the title "Tut-ankh-amen," using the process of combining artist's drawings and studio scenes, as was done in "Omar Khayyam," by Ferdinand Earle. Tom Terriss is taking a company to Egypt and will film scenes, no doubt, around the now famous tomb. Already, along Fifth Avenue, the Egyptian note has been struck in gowns, and the screen, always in the lead of fashion, will shortly reflect that tendency. It's an Egyptian year!

KATHERINE HILLIKER and H. H. Caldwell, having finished titling "Mad Love" and "Lost and Found" for Goldwyn, for which they came to the Coast some weeks ago, are enroute to New York to reopen their freelancing offices. They are leaving the Coast, not because they love Los Angeles less, but because they love New York more. Katherine Hilliker is Mrs. H. H. Caldwell in private life.

MEMBERS of the Screen Writers Guild are listening attentively to John Russell's earnest plea that they accompany him on a trip to the South Sea Islands. The idea was broached last year by the author of "Where the Pavement Ends" and the boys, in talking it over, practically settled on saving a certain sum of money by the spring of 1924—the cash to be used in buying or chartering a boat and paying expenses to Robert Louis Stevenson's paradise. John Russell has lived in the South Sea Islands for many years and it is his intention of showing them some sights that are not on the map nor are generally seen by white people visiting the Islands.

The writers who have "yes-ed" Russell include Tom Geraghty, Ralph Block, Perley Poore Sheehan, Frank Woods, Harvey Thew, Bernard McConville, Eugene Lewis, Rob Wagner, Lucien Hubbard, Frank Condon, Frank R. Adams, Waldemar Young, Percy Heath, Peter B. Kyne, Elmer Harris, Victor Clarke, Grant Carpenter. Doug is scheduled to go, also the directors, Charles Eyton, Tom Forman and William de Mille.

HAROLD LLOYD and the Mrs. have returned from their honeymoon and may be found parked in a snug little bungalow for two. Rumor reaches us that the young benedict and his better half will soon make a trip to Broadway. We take this occasion to acknowledge the announcement of the marriage of Mildred Hillary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard B. Davis, to Mr. Harold Clayton Lloyd, on Saturday, the tenth of February.

THE Board of Trade of Forest City, Pa., has offered to get up a first class rousing "Old Home Week" next summer if S. L. Rothafel and Pat O'Malley will return to the prosperous coal town for a few days. We all know that the impresario of the Capitol hailed from Forest City, where he began his career, but it is not generally known that Pat, the actor, was not so long ago employed as a miner in the coal town at a wage of one dollar and a half a day. When the project was made to have both S. L. and Pat return to their native heath for a week's festivities, the screen actor wired: "I will if you will." And Rothafel answered: "You're on."

SPEAKING of Rothafel reminds us that his recent entry into London was similar to Caesar's triumphal entry into Rome after his Alps campaign. The Daily Express waxes very enthusiastic over the American impresario, calling attention to the big theatre over which he presides and mentioning that the Broadway cinema theatres take more money in one week than the average good film takes in the whole of Great Britain during its entire run. Some typical Rothafelogues which the Express quotes are: "No one knows what the public wants, least of all the public."

"Good taste is the foundation on which successful entertainment is built."

"The exhibitor who underestimates public intelligence gambles on himself versus his seating capacity."

"The motion picture is not yet an art, but it can be wedded to the art of music."

The Express calls Rothafel Moviedom's high priest and paints a colorful eulogy of the man and his showmanship. The Kinematograph Weekly also pays tribute to the New York impresario who held a trade audience for an hour and a half with his ideas of conducting a picture theatre. This trade magazine hopes that S. L.'s visit will work a miracle among British exhibitors—that if his ideas are adopted the London cinema palaces can be placed on as high an artistic plane as his own Capitol.

The Film Renter and Moving Picture News, another of London's trade papers contributes a page editorial over its editor's signature—an editorial headed: "Go Thou and Do Likewise." The title of the article is enough indication of what the editor is advising the exhibitors of the British Isles. They should emulate Rothafel.

WITH five companies at work and three stories in preparation for early production, March will be the busiest month at Paramount's Long Island City studio since it was reopened several months ago. Tom Meighan, Dorothy Dalton, Bebe Daniels and Antonio Moreno are busy completing scenes, and production will soon start on "Lawful Larceny," "Bluff," and "White Heat."

W. R. ROTHACKER is traveling again. He doesn't postcard us from Baden-Baden or Vienna or Venice or Paris or dear ol' Lunnon, but from Miami, Florida. W. R. is leaving the Southern resort after a happy vacation and will park himself under California skies just as soon as he has attended to some business matters in the old home town, Chicago.

THOMAS H. INCE'S publicity department is authority for the statement that the director has hit upon an entirely original scheme by which the usual process of adapting novels for the screen is reversed. Two novels are being specially written in collaboration with a screen expert to insure big screen material and ideal situations for the camera.

Talbot Mundy, the British novelist, has lent himself to this experiment. He is completing a new novel, "The Devil's Own," and Bradley King will not only make the adaptation of this story but also is collaborating with the author in working out the tale. A second Mundy novel, already in synopsis form, has been purchased by Ince and will be written in collaboration with Miss King.

Fiction publishers have long been complaining that writers are working with screen rewards in view and are sacrificing literary style to camera requirements. "Serving two masters" they call this sort of composition, and they are frank to say that they don't like the result. Looking at it from this angle the Ince scheme doesn't look so "entirely original" even though it registers frankness.

Nevertheless the director's experiment is interesting and its outcome will be watched by writers.

AMONG the arrivals on the Majestic in New York on Friday of this week was C. S. Trowbridge, general manager of Allied Artists, the English branch of the United Artists corporation, who will remain in New York for a short while in connection with the British release of that company's product.

RICHARD ROWLAND, general manager of Associated First National, went to Los Angeles this week, where he will take part in a series of conferences on that organization's expanding production activities.

STARS of the stage and screen did their share in attracting some two thousand persons to the ball given at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel last week by the Newspaper Women's Association of New York. Among the players noted in the throng were Marion Davies, Eleanor Fair, Hope Hampton, Lew Cody, Juanita Hansen, Anne Luther, Will Rogers (who was on the program, of course), and a host of others.

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, writing to "Artie" Brilant, his personal representative, speaks enthusiastically of his trip around the world, from which he will return about May first. He reports that American-made pictures are in great favor in the Far East, especially comedies, which cause them to fairly double up with laughter. The Japanese theatre, with its excellent acting and sets, and its revolving stage, have made a great impression on him. He has been received warmly everywhere, and has been made much of by newspapers and the public at the various points at which he has touched. In conclusion, he says: "The trip so far has proved a great success. I wouldn't have missed it for the world, and in spite of having only a short time in each port it has been long enough for me to gather plenty of good material, and my camera has been quite busy shooting characters and scenes that will be of use to me in my future productions."

FOLLOWING a brief stay in New York, M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, has returned to the West Coast. It is understood that he closed arrangements for a number of productions to be made at United.

EXTENSIVE comment has been aroused among the so-called intelligentsia concerning the purchase by Goldwyn of "R. U. R.", the Theatre Guild stage production which has been one of the highlights of the current theatrical season. Written by Carel Capek, the Czecho-Slovakian dramatist, it deals with the invention of Rossum's Universal Robots, mechanical men, made in a factory, to do the menial work of the world, and with the ultimate destruction of man by these Robots, which finally reach a point where they learn to think for themselves. This play has the makings of a screen drama that would be distinctly different, rightly handled, and the fact that the script will be under the supervision of June Mathis is excellent assurance of that. It is understood that a number of offers have been made for "The World We Live In," or "The Insect Comedy," written by Capek in collaboration with his brother, and presented on the New York stage by William A. Brady, and that it is likely that this will be filmed. This, too, is unusual in theme and treatment, dramatizing, as it does, the problems of society, the middle classes and the masses in terms of the insect world.

HUTCHINSON'S novel, "If Winter Comes," is something the reader can turn to any time and find great spiritual comfort. As a screen drama it succeeds in retaining its spiritual quality. Many have said and many will continue to say that this exceptionally gifted stylist cannot be translated into celluloid—that the import of his message must be absorbed through page after page to realize its significance. This is true in a sense. Yet Harry Millarde has done a very creditable work by the story. True the tale carries nothing of physical conflict—rather is it a tale of the reactions of life upon a highly sensitized character, Mark Sabre—one of the most lovable characters which ever found its way to the printed page.

The director has caught the Hutchinson idealism in a manner which makes the picture an inspiration. Could he do any more than that? We defy anyone to make the author's introductory chapters—sketchy as they are—anything but episodic. It takes words deftly put together—as Hutchinson weaves them—to make the pattern complete and coherent. Yet the staunch foundation is there always—the great humanity, the noble integrity of the man, Sabre, caught as he is in a maelstrom of unaccountable events. Never once does Millarde lose contact with the idealization of this character. He brings forth the humanness and whimsical humor of the man; he emphasizes the sharp discords in his life; he, in fact, catches the true psychology of the figure

The picture has been staged in the exact locale of the story and its characters for the most part live. Particularly does Sabre live as humanized by Percy Marmont who catches the quaint whimsy, the noble simplicity, the brooding torment of soul when he is perplexed by people and problems, the charming humaneness, the trusting conscience—qualities which he emphasizes through a highly sensitive face which records every impression—just as Hutchinson would have it.

Famous Files Reply to Vitagraph

Denies First-Run Monopoly; Admits Kent Letter; Cites "Little Minister" Offers

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION has filed an answer to Vitagraph's suit alleging damages to the extent of six million dollars and violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. The answer was filed in the District Court on Friday of last week, March 2nd.

In the matter of alleged first-run monopoly, Famous Players-Lasky declares that it became interested in the acquisition of theatre properties only in such cities as it found necessary to insure for itself adequate representation of the Paramount product before the public. The history of its acquisition of the Criterion theatre in New York is cited specifically in illustration of the point, alleging that Vitagraph in 1916 controlled the theatre and claiming that Vitagraph committed the same act that it now charges against the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

One of the strong points of Vitagraph's bill of complaint against Famous Players-Lasky was involved in the allegation that Sidney R. Kent, in a letter to M. S. Wilson, the Denver Sales Manager for Paramount, instructed the latter to "kick out every Vitagraph account you can find, irrespective of the terms you may have to make, just so you cancel the contract and get them out of the way. As long as they insist on a fight, let's give it to them." Vitagraph further charged that this same letter was partly responsible for its reduction in weekly business to a twenty-two thousand dollar loss which persisted, it is alleged, for a space of about forty weeks. In its answer Famous Players-Lasky admits the writing of the letter quoted by Sidney R. Kent and advances as a reason for the forwarding of the letter to the Denver manager an alleged campaign upon the part of Vitagraph to discredit Famous Players-Lasky and practice unfair competition against Paramount.

The earnings of Vitagraph also come in for considerable discussion in the Famous Players-Lasky brief. The answer declares that in 1916 Vitagraph's earnings were only one-sixth of its earnings for 1913. Moreover, it is declared, Famous Players-Lasky could not possibly be responsible for this alleged loss of business for the reason that Famous Players-Lasky was not formed until 1916. The answer accredits Vitagraph's alleged loss of business at this time to the breaking up of the General Film Company, of which Vitagraph was a part. The Famous Players-Lasky brief further affirms that if Vitagraph's earnings did experience a drop it was because of poor-selling product and not because of any monopoly on the part of Famous Players, as charged by Vitagraph.

The adaptation of Sir James Barrie's "The Little Minister" also comes in for some attention in Famous Players-Lasky's reply to the Vitagraph charges. One of the important points brought out in this connection was that, according to Famous Players, no copyright on "The Little Minister" existed in this country. Vitagraph, it is asserted in the answer filed by Famous Players, offered to sell to the latter company for $60,000 an old version of the Barrie story produced about 1912. When Famous Players-Lasky refused the offer, Vitagraph, according to the answer, reduced the price to $20,000 and later to $10,000. It is next stated that when Vitagraph discovered that Famous Players would not purchase the older version (claimed to have cost about $8,000), Vitagraph hastened production on a modernized version of the subject and rushed its release to the trade for the purpose of competing with Famous Players-Lasky's version, which had been put in production. The Famous Players-Lasky brief further affirms that while no copyright exists on "The Little Minister" in the United States, it has paid Sir James Barrie a certain royalty on the photoplay, a course not pursued by Vitagraph, it is stated.

Hays Completes First Year as M. P. P. D. of A. Head

MONDAY of this week, March 5th, marked the completion of Will Hays' first year as president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

In a resume of the year's accomplishments by the M. P. P. D. of A. under the Will Hays' leadership observers emphasize the victorious outcome of the Massachusetts referendum on censorship whereby the people of one of the greatest states in the Union officially placed themselves on record as opposed to the practice and principle of screen censorship. The adoption by the three major departments of the industry of the uniform contract and its actual inauguration is also advanced as a highlight. Another accomplishment of importance cited is the carrying out of its "better pictures" program with official relations established with representatives of some of the most powerful religious, civic, welfare, and educational organizations in the United States.

Ackerman-Harris Buy Share in Grauman Theatre

An important theatrical deal of the week was the purchase of a fifty per cent share in the ownership of Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, by Ackerman and Harris. It is expected that one result of the deal just closed will be the introduction of a combination vaudeville and picture policy instead of straight film programs. The transfer of interest in the Million Dollar theatre is not taken as indicating any split in the relations between Grauman and Famous Players-Lasky, as it is understood that the Ackerman and Harris negotiations were carried on and terminated with the full consent of the Paramount interests. The Metropolitan and the Rialto, downtown houses of Los Angeles, will continue to present the Paramount product in liberal measure.

New York Theatre Damaged by Fire; $100,000 Loss

The Crystal theatre, located at 48 East Fourteenth street, New York City, was damaged by fire on last Sunday. The total loss sustained by the theatre and the adjoining property was estimated at one hundred thousand dollars.

Crank Bills in Discard as Congress Adjourns

WITH the adjournment of Congress various forms of crank legislation, some affecting the motion-picture industry, passed into the discard. A moderate tariff on film raw stock is now in force. The George H. Eastman Company, which opposed the tariff, has effected a reduction in the price of their raw stock to two cents per foot, as announced in the March 3rd issue. Representative MacGregor's measure to reduce or eliminate admission tax on theatres died without any action being taken, but plans are being formulated to re-introduce the bill again at the next session.

Hostile Bills Die as Indiana Legislature Closes

The session of the Indiana State Legislature closed March 5 without any action inimical to theatrical interests having been taken. The only threat throughout the session was in Senator Steele's movie censorship commission bill, which was killed the first time the Senate had a chance to vote on it, 40 to 4.

This was significant in that for several years there has been serious danger of either censorship or more strict blue-law measures going through. This time the Sunday question was not even discussed, and sentiment against censorship was as outspoken as it was overwhelming.

Restrictive legislation was flayed for its tyrannical effects and increased taxation burdens, by Brigadier General Dwight Aultman, commanding the Fifth Army Area, with headquarters at Fort Benjamin Harrison, who spoke as a guest of the Senate. The General said in part:

"I do not believe the danger in America is that of Bolshevism, but one where a tyrannous majority is forcing restrictive measures on a minority which may in cases be more thoughtful but not as powerful. The simpler the code of law, the easier it is to carry out the code.

"Remember that whenever a restrictive law is passed that a personnel must be created to enforce that law. These laws mean the imposition of a greater burden on the taxpayer. An economic study shows that a very large percentage of people must work with their hands in any nation which is to survive. Now every time you pass a restrictive law you must necessarily create a group of men who are non-productive to administer that law. Hence you decrease the productivity of the nation just so much."

St. Louis Business Men to Finance Wm. Cabanne

St. Louis business men in a $250,000 trust estate are reported to have been interested by William Christy Cabanne in a production enterprise. The first picture to be made under the auspices of the company, which will be known as the William Christy Cabanne Motion Picture Trust, Ltd., will be produced in New York, it is stated. Eighty-eight thousand dollars of the stock has already been subscribed, it is declared, and it is expected that negotiations will be completed in time to permit the start of production by May 1st.

Howard, editor-in-chief of the American Press Association; Charles Pettijohn, general counsel of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; Peter J. Brady, of the New York State Federation of Labor, and Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, and recently elected head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, the motion picture industry carried off the honors of the day at the hearing which was held in the Senate Chamber at Albany, Tuesday afternoon, on the Walker-O'Connor bills calling for the repeal of motion picture censorship in New York State. Politically, these bills are known as the "Smith Administration" measures, voicing as they do the desires of Governor Alfred E. Smith.

Up to the present time no hearing caused so much talk around the Capitol as the one of Tuesday afternoon. A delegation of about thirty-five, headed by Charles L. O'Reilly, came up from New York reaching the Capital City shortly before noon. Other sections of the state were represented, while many exhibitors in Albany and vicinity took advantage of the occasion and were present.

Those favorable to a continuance of censorship were the first to be heard. These included Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein, of New York; Mrs. Ella Boole, State President of the W. C. T. U.; Canon Chase, Mrs. Clarence Waterman, head of the Motion Picture Alliance; Ellen O'Grady, former deputy police commissioner of New York; Mrs. Frederick Pruyn, of Albany, prominent in the Republican party; Mrs. F. W. Coulson, of the State Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. John D. Whish, of the Mothers' Club of Albany; Mrs. Everett Hamilton, of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. L. D. S. Banker, of the Alliance of Women's Clubs of Brooklyn; Mrs. Chauncey Hamlin, representing Buffalo and western New York; Dr. Frederick M. Gordon, general secretary of the Brooklyn Federation of Churches; Mrs. Henry Streeber, of the Women's Club, of Albany; Frank Niles, of Syracuse, and Dr. H. L. Bowlby, of the Lord's Day Alliance.

Rabbi Goldstein contended that censorship was absolutely necessary as a safeguard of moral freedom, while Mrs. Boole claimed that the commission had accomplished what was expected, and that pictures had improved during the last year or so. Canon Chase said that he was speaking as the representative of the New York State Civic League as well as the New York State Federation of Churches.

Before Canon Chase completed his argument he was in a wrangle with Senator Walker, who took certain exceptions to what Canon Chase was saying, particularly as to the assertion made by Senator Walker a year ago relative to what the preacher was receiving in his collection. There was a sharp tilt, which ended in both hisses and applause.

Mrs. Clarence Waterman referred to some of the deletions made by the commission as showing the necessity of censorship in this state.

"I now go to the movies," said Mrs. O'Grady, "without a feeling of shame. If the fathers and mothers were here today they would cry out not to do away with the Commission. If you repeal this law the resultant evil will rebound on you."

The arguments presented by the other speakers favoring censorship were much the same, and consisted mainly in telling the committee before whom the hearing was held, of action taken and resolutions passed by their body endorsing censorship.

Speakers for the industry were announced by former Senator Walter Herrick, the task on the other side having been performed by Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton, of Brooklyn, who introduced the censorship bill in the Legislature two years ago.

The first speaker was Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, who presented one of the most able arguments of the entire afternoon, and whose words were listened to with rapt attention. At the very outset Dr. Hillis stated that he was representing no one but himself, standing squarely on his feet and speaking as a citizen. He declared in the course of his talk that there were no three persons in the world so constituted as to tell the millions just what they should see.

Alice Duer Miller, who followed, admitted that perhaps censorship had been a little better administered in New York State than in some of the other states, but even at that there was absolutely no excuse whatever for its existence. The speaker cited a number of instances where eliminations had been made by the commission, and which were nonsensical in the extreme.

Edward P. Howard, editor-in-chief of the American Press Association, and representing 347 weekly newspapers in New York State informed the committee that censorship was wrong fundamentally, and extremely dangerous to the liberty of the American people. He stated that the newspapers were opposed to censorship and that on the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech rested all of our Americanism.

Frederick Howe, former director of the People's Institute, the next speaker, spoke of the shackles which bound writers who were obliged to shift and twist in meeting the demands of 47 different kinds of censorship. The speaker asserted that if there was anything the matter with pictures today that the industry would clean itself, and in fact had cleansed itself, not through censorship, but by the wholesome natural demands of the people.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the producers and distributors, proved the star speaker of the hearing.

"I'm proud of the industry and its achievements," said Mr. Pettijohn. A moment later, his voice ringing through the Chamber, he told Canon Chase and his associates why the people of Massachusetts had voted as they did on the question of censorship, and branded as a lie the statement made by Canon Chase a short time before that the votes had been bought by the money which flooded the state and which came from the motion picture industry.

"I will not backstep or apologize for a single moment for this industry," said Mr. Pettijohn. "Why did not Canon Chase tell this committee that when this country was plunged into war that the President called upon the motion picture people to prove to the nations of the world that America was in the fight and was to help them?

"That's the first ammunition which was sent abroad; not bullets," said Mr. Pettijohn, and the crowd applauded to the echo.

"Why don't you tell the committee," shaking his finger at Canon Chase, "that today we are furnishing motion pictures free of charge to every hospital where our broken soldier boys are attempting to regain their health? If they are so torn with shock and shell that they can not sit up, then they view these pictures on the ceilings."

The crowd applauded even more vociferously.

An attempt was made at this time by Assemblyman Clayton to bring the hearing to a close, at least so far as those favoring the repeal of the law were concerned. It was clearly evident to everyone that this side was in command.

Chairman Downing objected, however, to Assemblyman Clayton's attempts, declaring that Mr. Clayton was not going to "censor the chair."

Peter J. Brady, of the New York State Federation of Labor, followed with a short argument.

Assemblyman Clayton requested fifteen minutes for rebuttal. Chairman Downing objected on the grounds that both sides had consumed the allotted time. The fairness which characterized the hearing, however, became evident a moment later when, at the request of Senator Walker, Chairman Downing stated that he would allow five more minutes.

Chairman Cobb, of the Motion Picture Commission, was then introduced. He admitted that his Commission was only human, and as such made mistakes. He said then that the motion picture people would admit generally that the Commission had been exceedingly liberal in its judgment of the good and bad in pictures, and always gave the benefit of the doubt.

The last speaker was Charles L. O'Reilly, who cited a number of eliminations made by the Commission, some of which brought forth a roar of laughter from everyone.

The next move at Albany will probably not occur within the next two or three weeks, when the committee will report the bill out and it will go to a vote. There is no question but that it will pass the Senate, which is Democratic by one, but it will probably have hard sledding in the Assembly, which is Republican by a majority of six.

Southern Enterprises in Booklet Brings Out Value of Community Leadership

INFORMATION of interest to exhibitors everywhere, relating to the results accomplished by the Better Films Movement in putting over pictures of a type not usually successful financially, is contained in a booklet issued by Southern Enterprises, Inc., under the title, "Through the Box Office," and prepared by Turner Jones, in charge of the Public Relations Office for that organization. The charts on the page at the left, and the information which follows, have been reproduced from this booklet by permission of Southern Enterprises.

The data presented deals chiefly with high class pictures, such as can be put over only through special effort in appealing to a discerning class of people, and with pictures of a juvenile appeal, and shows what has been done with these pictures through the Better Films Movement, fostered by Southern Enterprises under the direction of Turner Jones.

The booklet opens as follows:

"Through the Box Office it is possible to learn a number of facts, regarding motion pictures, which are of value in conducting any program of work for the development of screen entertainment. The Box Office records tell us two facts of supreme importance to both the theatre and the public—whether or not the picture presented attracts a sufficient number of people to render it a successful commercial venture, and whether or not it attracts a sufficient number of people to make its influence felt in the community. The Box Office measures the effect of a picture on the public just as certainly as it measures the financial effect on the theatre.

"The objective of all, who are sincerely interested in developing the motion picture as a worth-while community institution, must be pictures which are commercially successful and which exercise a beneficial influence upon patrons of the theatre.

"Recognizing that the motion picture business can not be stabilized until it creates, on the part of the public, a demand for and support of better pictures, this company, and many other exhibitors, have been co-operating with Better Films Committees in the southern states for some two years.

"What has been accomplished in the two years?

"John Stuart Mill has warned us that the conclusions of theory can not be trusted unless confirmed by observation; nor those of observation, unless they can be harmonized with theory. It is the accord of these two kinds of evidence separately taken, which promise the only sufficient ground for action.

"The conclusions of theory (in addition to the application of the theory) are contained in the pamphlet "Moving Pictures Forward," published by the Atlanta Better Films Committee. Here, by means of four charts, the attempt is made to arrive at conclusions which are the results of observation, based on specific experience. Many variables, such as weather, counter-attractions, and other local conditions, cause a certain percentage of error in the compilation of these charts. However, these variables have been accounted for as far as possible, and it is believed that in so far as 'the conclusions are harmonized with the theory,' the evidence here presented is valid."

Chart No. 1 lists 13 pictures, mainly of the type not usually considered strong box-office attractions, and one "sure fire" attraction. The vertical line at the center is the dividing line betwen profit and loss—in other words, "the nut"—and those pictures on which the horizontal line falls short of this profit and loss line were a financial failure.

A study of the chart will show that, on the basis of attendance at 27 theatres in as many cities, in seven different states, nine of the 13 fell short of breaking even, one just reaches that point and three went over. For purposes of comparison, "The Sheik" has been included in the chart, and it will be noted that the chart was too narrow to get in the full attendance on this picture.

The three going over "the nut" were "The Devil," "The Little Minister" and "The Loves of Pharoah." The one just breaking even was "Miss Lulu Bett." The nine which failed to show a profit were "Disraeli," "The Ruling Passion," "Doublin' for Romeo," "One Glorious Day," "The Bonnie Brier Bush," "Sentimental Tommy," "The Good Provider," "Hail the Woman" and "The Golem."

Chart No. 2 shows the effect of endorsement by the Better Films Committee, comparing attendance in similar cities with and without this endorsement, eight cities of each sort being taken into consideration.

"It is impossible to render Chart No. 2 as comprehensive as might be desired, due to the lack of available records on more than five pictures in the sixteen cities chosen. It was necessary to choose eight cities in which Better Films Committees were established at the time these five pictures were played and eight cities in which there were no Better Films Committees at that time. Another limitation was imposed in that the cities had to correspond in population.

"It is not known accurately whether or not the Committees in all eight of the cities listed actually endorsed each and every one of the pictures charted or not. It is sufficient to realize that any community in which a Better Films Committee becomes active has its attention focussed upon the necessity for selection and discrimination as applied to entertainment, and that a sense of responsibility for intelligent selection is awakened in the community.

"Beyond this, the chart speaks for itself."

Chart No. 3 takes up a problem of great importance to the exhibitor, the juvenile.

"It is well known that in 1921, 36 per cent. of the pictures produced in this country were suited to boys and girls less than sixteen years in age. Also, it is known that approximately 13 per cent of the theatre audience is under this age.

"The motion picture industry recognizes the impossibility of standardizing an adult amusement for children, and yet realizes that many pictures, beneficial to adults, may prove harmful to children.

"It is an erroneous conception, held by many, that children constitute a large portion of the theatre audience or that they play any great part in the success or failure of a picture. To demonstrate this fact, eight pictures, which make a special appeal to children and are well suited to them, are carried on Chart No. 3.

"In order that a further analysis, and a more accurate one, of the theatre audience may be made in regard to juveniles, the attendance at thirty-two pictures in twenty-seven cities in seven states has been taken.

"Thirteen of these are considered pictures for adults only: "Fool's Paradise," "Sentimental Tommy," "The Golem," "Disraeli," "The Devil," "Lulu Bett," "Hail The Woman," "The Sheik," "Foolish Wives," "Peter Ibbetson," "The Loves of Pharoah," "The Ruling Passion," and "While Satan Sleeps."

"Eleven would be considered pictures for the family group: "I Am the Law," "The Good Provider," "The Bonnie Brier Bush," "The Fast Mail," "The Little Minister," "One Glorious Day," "The Old Homestead," "Turn to the Right," "Three Live Ghosts," "Silver Wings," "Doublin' for Romeo."

"Eight are well suited to juveniles of any age: "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "The Bachelor Daddy," "School Days," "Grandma's Boy," "My Boy," "Penrod,' "Three Musketeers," "The Sailor Made Man."

"The average attendance per day per city for the entire thirty-two pictures was 26,856, while the average juvenile (14 years or less) attendance per day per city was 3,100, or 11.5 per cent of the average attendance.

"The problem would appear to resolve itself into a question of presenting the 36 per cent of pictures to the 13 per cent of the theatre audience.

"There are two objectives of great value to be attained here, (1) suitable pictures afford wholesome entertainment and are of educational value to the child in the formative period; (2) a child accustomed to suitable pictures during the formative period of its life will develop tastes for clean, wholesome and worthwhile entertainment as an adult.

"Chart No. 4 demonstrates the important fact that a certain leadership and direction of the children of the community can be established in the matter of their selection of cinema entertainment.

"The five pictures charted reveal the interesting fact that juvenile attendance was from three to five times as great when the pictures were presented at a Boys' and Girls' Saturday Morning Matinee, as was the juvenile attendance for the same pictures, played at regular performances, over the circuit of

Data Presented on Results of Better Films Aid

SOME months ago Turner Jones, in charge of the Public Relations Office of Southern Enterprises, Inc., wrote a series of articles for Motion Picture News, describing at length the manner in which the Better Films Movement was being organized to aid in putting over pictures of the type that have to be "sold" to the better class of people through special community effort.

Now, in a booklet called "Through the Box Office," Mr. Jones presents actual data as to what has happened as a result. The contents of this booklet is here reproduced, including the charts on the page at the left and the information on this page.

Michigan M.P.T.O. Hold Banquet

Marcus Loew Says Salaries of Stars Are Decided by Public, Not Industry

MORE than 450 members of the M. P. T. O. of Michigan sat down at the second annual banquet of the organization held at the Hotel Statler, Detroit, Tuesday evening, February 27.

While no stars were present, a large number of producers and exhibitors prominent in national organization work, sat at the speakers' table, which was in charge of W. S. McLaren of Jackson, president of the Michigan M. P. T. O.

Clarence Buddington Kelland, well known author, whose novel, "Backbone," has just been made in film form, attributed much if not all of the agitation against pictures to "too many people who are under-brained and over-mouthed."

"These people do not think the matter through clearly," said Mr. Kelland. "They believe the motion picture in ten years should reach the goal of perfection that other arts have been striving for 10,000 years to attain without success. The motion picture is as much a creative art as painting, yet we find no paintings by the great masters that have ever been acclaimed perfect in the strict sense of the word. The producer must, and I believe is striving constantly to better the product, but in the meantime there are only two things for the exhibitor and producer to keep in mind—give as much pleasure to the world as you can and make as much money as you can."

Judge Alfred J. Murphy, counsel for the M. P. T. O., denounced in round terms the waste and extravagance now reflected, he said, in the production departments and criticized severely the policy of "paying half million dollar salaries to eight-year-old boys." Marcus Loew, holder of the new Jackie Coogan contract, sat at the Judge's elbow and after the first shock came to the defense that salaries are regulated by the public, not by the producer or the exhibitor.

Other speakers were Arthur S. Friend, president of Distinctive Pictures; E. W. Hammons, of Educational Pictures; Sydney S. Cohen, of the M. P. T. O. of America; and R. F. Branch, president of the Detroit F. I. L. M.

The chief entertainment feature of the evening was a minstrel show, "A Trip to the Film Building," produced by Ralph Peckham and H. M. Richey, with a cast of H. A. Clever, interlocutor; Richard Lynch and Wallace Baker, end men; and Edward Higley, Jacob Sullivan, Edward Murphy, James Allan, Frank Stuart, Herbert Fawser, J. Oliver Brooks, and R. Peckham as minstrel men.

Dancing followed and closed the evening.

Tax on Receipts Proposed in Pennsylvania

What is regarded by the motion picture exhibitors of Pennsylvania as the most detrimental bit of proposed legislation thus far introduced in the present session of the legislature in Harrisburg, made its appearance in the lower house on February 27, when Assemblyman Samuel J. Perry, of Philadelphia, presented a bill that would impose a state tax of one per cent. upon the gross receipts of all places of public entertainment, specifically mentioning motion picture theatres.

Just what action may be taken by the recently organized legislative committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania, to combat this proposed bill, has not been revealed at this writing, but it is regarded as certain among exhibitors, speaking as individuals, that the committee will adopt active measures to fight the bill.

It is set forth that the tax is to be computed immediately after each performance, and on or before the fifteenth of each month a statement must be forwarded to the Auditor General of the state, under oath, on forms he shall supply, of the amounts of gross receipts taken in during the prior month. At the same time payment is to be forwarded to the State Treasurer. A penalty of ten per cent. additional of the total due is provided for those who do not make the proper returns.

The Auditor General and State Treasurer are authorized to examine the books of all persons and associations and others in the amusement business to verify the accounts.

The penalties for violation of the law or for making false reports or returns is $1,000 and six months imprisonment in the case of an individual offender. The bill will become effective September 1, 1924, in event of its adoption.

Stanley Co. Files Answer to Federal Complaint

The Stanley Company of America, the Stanley Booking Corporation, and Jules E. Mastbaum, in a statement filed in answer to the amended complaint of the Federal Trade Commission against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Stanley interests and others, deny in wholesale fashion the commission's allegations of confederation with other interests "to hinder competition in the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures." The answer also denies any attempt to dominate or monopolize the film industry on the part of the Stanley interests, and likewise describes as unfounded in truth any program by the Stanley interests of acquiring or controlling motion picture houses or enforcing "block" bookings upon exhibitors under coercion.

It was also declared in the answer filed that Jules Mastbaum is not a majority stockholder of the Stanley Company of America.

Court Rules Knickerbocker Corporation May Be Sued

AS announced previously in Motion Picture News, Harry Crandall and associates entered a plea of the non-existence of the Knickerbocker Corporation in answer to the suits for damages growing out of the Knickerbocker theatre catastrophe a year ago in Washington, D. C. The next step in the proceedings was taken on Thursday of last week, March 1st, when Mr. Crandall, as former president of the Knickerbocker Corporation, was called upon to appear in the Circuit Court to defend the declaration that the Corporation was lawfully dissolved in the Chancery Court of Delaware and is now in the hands of receivers. This plea had been previously entered by Crandall as "a friend of the court."

Attorneys for the claimants secured a ruling from Judge Hoeling eliminating Crandall as "a friend of the court." The effect of the ruling is to give district courts jurisdiction as to civil suits here for the claimants, but in case of awards of judgments being laid against the company, assets would have to be reached through the Delaware courts.

J. Lambert appeared as counsel for Mr. Crandall, while Charles A. Douglas spoke for the petitioners.

First Meeting in New York of New Arbitration Board

The first meeting of the new arbitration board in New York City formed under the provisions of the Uniform Contract was held on Wednesday afternoon of this week at 1520 Broadway. Trade press representatives were admitted to the opening session to observe the actual handling of cases involving controversies between exhibitors and exchanges.

Bernard Edelhertz, in an introductory address, explained the purpose and functions of the new arbitration board and described in what ways the old scheme of arbitration heretofore in force differed from the plan of organization just inaugurated.

Under the present plan the theatre owner and the exchange, upon signing the Uniform Contract, automatically signify their willingness to hand over to the board for hearing and disposal any controversy growing out of the terms of the contract. In signing the Certificate of Agreement both parties agree to abide by and carry out the decision of the board within seven days from date of such decision.

A plan of procedure known as the "Rules of Procedure under the Uniform Contract for the Conduct of the Joint Arbitration Board" has been drafted. This describes in detail exactly what each side to a controversy must do in submitting and defending a case before the board. Each step in the hearing of a case is adequately described with the rights and privileges of the parties involved, as well as the members of the board comprehensively defined.

Following are the members of the F. I. L. M. Club who have been appointed to the arbitration board: W. E. Raynor, Pathe; Louis Rosenbluh, Fox; Samuel Zierler, Commonwealth, and J. J. Unger, First National, as alternate. The exhibitor members appointed by the presdent of the T. O. C. C. are: Sol Raines, Joseph Jame, and William Landau, president of the T. O. C. C., who was elected by members of the committee as chairman of the board of arbitration.

Fox Copyright Case Goes to Supreme Court

Question of Succession of Dramatic Rights on Carleton Poems Involves Important Issue

THE action of Fox Film Corporation to sustain its claim to the exclusive rights to present in dramatic form an adaptation of Will Carleton's poems, "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" and "Over the Hill from the Poorhouse," now rests in the hands of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. The ultimate disposal of this case by the highest judiciary tribunal of the country is being awaited with interest by the film industry, as the ruling will set an important precedent for all similar copyright controversies involving dramatic and screen rights, in the future.

Under the present copyright law of the United States the privilege of copyright endures for a period of twenty-eight years. Provision is made in the law for a renewal of the copyright privilege for an additional fourteen years, the requirement being that the application for renewal be filed within the year prior to the expiration of the original copyright term. The law further provides that in the event of the death of the copyright proprietor his widow or children may apply for the renewal within the specified period; and that in the absence of widow or children, the copyright proprietor may delegate in his will to his executor or next of kin the power to apply for renewal, application to be made, in each instance, within the year prior to the expiration of the preceding copyright term.

Now arises an important question: Suppose the copyright proprietor dies prior to the year within which application for a renewal of the copyright may be made, can the executor (assuming that the proprietor is not survived by widow or children) apply for and secure a renewal of the copyright privilege? That, basically, is the issue involved in the case of the Fox Film Corporation now awaiting decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. Two courts have already decreed that the executor, under circumstances such as have just been described, does not enjoy the right to secure a renewal of the copyright. The reasoning advanced by the two courts in support of their decision is briefly this: the right of an executor to make an application for renewal exists only when the privilege of obtaining a renewal was existent in the testator-author at the moment of decease; secondly, as the original copyright proprietor does not possess the right to apply for renewal until within the year prior to the expiration of the preceding copyright term (as provided in the law), hence it follows that if he (the copyright proprietor) dies before such year is reached his executor is left devoid of the right to make application for renewal.

This has been the decision handed down by the Eastern District Court of New York and affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in Fox Film's action against Frederick M. Knowles, Joseph Klein, Joseph Morris, et al. Fox charges these parties with infringement of the dramatic copyright to "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" and "Over the Hill from the Poorhouse," alleging that they have given public performances of a play, based upon the aforementioned poems, in violation of its ownership of the dramatic rights. The District Court dismissed Fox's bill of complaint, embodying this charge against Knowles, Klein Morris, et al.; and when the case was later appealed to the Circuit Court this latter court affirmed the District Court's decree.

Fox Film Corporation next filed an appeal from the decisions of the lower courts in the United States Supreme Court, obtaining from this body a writ of certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Here the case rests for the present.

The history of the copyrights upon these two poems is an interesting one and enters vitally into a judicial consideration of the case. Saul E. Rogers, counsel for the Fox Film Corporation, in the petitioner's brief to the Supreme Court, traces the history of the copyrights, in part, as follows:

"Prior to 1873 Will Carleton was the author of a collection of poems, among which was one entitled 'Over the Hill to the Poor House' and another, 'Over the Hill from the Poor House' (Rec. page 1, fol. 3). Carleton assigned his interest in the poems and collection, together with the right to secure copyrights thereon to Harper & Bro., publishers. On February 21, 1873, said assignees duly copyrighted said collection of poems and published the same under the title of 'Farm Ballads' (Rec. p. 2, fols. 3-5).

"The original copyright procured by Harper & Bro. expired in 1901. The author properly procured a renewal thereof from 1901 to 1915. The author died in 1912 without a widow or children, leaving as his executor and sole legatee one Norman E. Goodrich. The executor duly qualified and as such executor, within a year prior to the expiration of Will Carleton's copyright in 1915, duly made his application for a renewal thereof, and the Register of Copyrights registered such renewal from 1915 to 1929. By operation of law the said executor, who was also the sole legatee, received the benefit of such further renewal copyright, and when he died on July 27, 1915, he had the absolute right to bequeath by will his property, which included the said renewal, to his widow, Alice L. Goodrich, from whom the petitioner received its title to the dramatic copyright by an assignment duly executed on October 26, 1920"

The "petitioner" mentioned in the preceding paragraph as receiving the dramatic copyright from Alice L. Goodrich is the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Rogers thus traces the succession of rights under the copyright privilege from Will Carleton's sale of the poems to Harper Bros. down to the "assignment" of the dramatic rights to Fox Film.

The whole case hinges, of course, on the death in 1912 of Will Carleton, prior to the year (1915) within which Carleton would have enjoyed the right to secure a renewal of his copyright, if alive. Did Norman Goodrich, as Carleton's legatee and in view of the circumstances, actually enjoy the legal right to make application for a renewal of the copyright in 1915, and in turn did his wife really possess by inheritance the dramatic rights on Carleton's poems which she "assigned" to the Fox Film Corporation in 1920?

Disagreeing with the District Court and Circuit Court, which have already answered in the negative, Mr. Rogers declares that the copyright law, properly interpreted, contains no such restrictions or conditions upon the right to renew as have been advanced by the two lower courts. Mr. Rogers further asserts that the legislative intent of the framers of the present copyright law—as shown by written testimony in the official records of Congress—was to bestow, in the order mentioned, upon the widow, children, executor, and next of kin of the deceased copyright proprietor all the renewal rights enjoyed by him and irrespective of the time of the proprietor's demise.

Mr. Rogers also points out that unless the Supreme Court reverses the ruling of the lower courts in the present case the rights of the widow or children of the deceased proprietor will be seriously challenged. He indicates that the widow and children—as far as renewal rights are concerned—are placed in the same general category as the executor. Hence, he adds, if the Supreme Court affirms the decision of the lower courts it will logically follow that widow or children of the deceased copyright holder will be unable to secure a renewal of the copyright unless the author happens to die within the year prior to the expiration of the copyright term. In other words, Mr. Rogers concludes, the renewal rights of the proprietor's widow and children (and executor as well) will be made wholly dependent upon an accident. Such an interpretation of the law is and would be wholly at variance with the recorded intent of those responsible for the present copyright law, Mr. Rogers contends.

N. Y. Times Critic Signed for Post by Universal

JAMES O. SPEARING, motion-picture editor of the New York Times, is to be given the opportunity of putting into practice at a film studio the ideals and principles which he has enunciated for the past five years as photoplay critic of the Times. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, has engaged Mr. Spearing for an important post in the scenario and editing departments of the Universal organization.

Mr. Spearing will leave New York Times in two weeks and go directly to Universal City where Homer A. Boushey, production manager, has important work already mapped out for him in the scenario and editing departments.

Francis Hugo to Promote Non-Theatrical Field

Another step has been taken in the promotion of religious and educational motion pictures. This week Francis M. Hugo, formerly Secretary of State of New York, was appointed chairman of the board of directors and chairman of the executive committee of the National Motion Pictures, Inc., which is headed by Harry Levey.

Mr. Hugo is planning as his first work the formation of a committee of 100, which will include persons prominent in the church and school fields, with whom he will confer with a view to building up adequate production and distribution facilities for the supply of films to churches and schools. Results of Better Films Movement Shown twenty-seven cities, averaged per day. This increase is in reality far greater than indicated, due to the fact that one performance on Saturday morning is being compared with the performances of an entire day over the circuit.

"Again, compare the juvenile attendance for these five pictures at the boys' and girls' matinees in specified cities with the juvenile attendance at regular performances in specified cities of corresponding population—the increase is from two to eight times in favor of the matinee.

"This chart clearly demonstrates the fact that any work with motion pictures for children, to be conducted on a large scale, must be carried out at such performances by selection according to suitability.

"If the attempt is to be made to draw definite conclusions from the information here presented, it will be found that they very nearly coincide with the announced purposes of the Better Films Movement, and they might be listed as follows:

"The majority of exceptional pictures are unsuccessful because of a lack of discrimination on the part of the public in selecting its cinema entertainment.

"The exceptional picture can be rendered financially possible and entertainingly successful when properly promoted by community leaders.

"The Public is susceptible to constructive, positive leadership in regard to the selection of its entertainment, if given accurate information on which to base its choice.

"Entertainment is pre-requisite to education in the theatre, the picture patron being a casual seeker for entertainment.

"Children do not play a sufficient part in the average motion picture theatre audience to enable the theatre to fully adapt its program to them. This can be accomplished only at a special performance.

"The boys and girls of the community will support special performances adapted to them.

"The selection and presentation of pictures suitable for juveniles create a higher taste on the part of the children.

"The conclusion of primary importance is that the fundamental principles heretofore considered cannot be applied by the theatre alone, but only where the cooperation of the community is secured.

"NOTE: The cities from which records have been taken in compiling these charts are: "Atlanta, Augusta, Macon, Griffin, Ga.; Jacksonville, Tampa, Miami, Ft. Myers, Fla.; Asheville, Charlotte, Greensboro, N. C.; Birmingham, Montgomery, Anniston, Gadsden, Ala.; Columbia, Spartanburg, Greenville, Sumter, S. C.; Memphis, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Dyersburg, Tenn.; Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Plainview, Texas."

Sunday Opening Defeated in Mechanicsville, N. Y.

By a vote of 614 to 1,697, the Sunday motion picture proposition was turned down by the citizens of Mechanicsville, N. Y., at a special election last week. All churches in the city united their forces in a campaign to defeat the project of opening the theatres on Sunday. The campaign culminated in a parade in which hundreds of Sunday School children participated.

Selznick Functioning Under Creditors' Management

Several weeks ago bankruptcy proceedings were started against Select Pictures Corporation, the distributing branch of the Selznick organization. Following this proceeding a meeting of creditors was held and a plan suggested whereby the distribution both of old Selznick pictures and of those now in production should be continued under the direction of a committee of five representing the various classes of creditors.

This committee is engaged in securing the consent to the reorganization plan from such creditors as were not present at the meeting, and it is understood that they are making satisfactory progress in lining up the creditors in support of this plan.

A second petition in bankruptcy was filed on March 6th against Selznick Pictures Corporation, another company included in the Selznick Enterprises, and it is impossible at this time to determine what effect this new action will have upon the proposed plan for liquidation. The active management of the Selznick business is now under the supervision of Mr. W. C. J. Doolittle, who represents the Utica bankers who are large creditors. An economical system of operation has been effected, and it was hoped that with the reduction in expense and the profits anticipated from the three new pictures just completed, "Rupert of Hentzau," "The Common Law" and "Modern Matrimony," the debts of the company would be entirely liquidated.

Chicago Holds Examination to Select Censors

Chicago recently introduced a new idea into the experiment of censorship; an examination was held to determine who should censor motion-pictures shown in that city. Forty-three candidates entered the lists and not one succeeded in securing a passing mark of 70 per cent., it is stated.

Here are some of the questions propounded: "What is the meaning of the word 'immoral' as applied to motion pictures?" "Would it be harmful to any class of people to exhibit a scene showing a burglar opening a money safe?" "Would you sanction the showing of a writhing snake?" "Should a picture be shown that depicts a person administering a hypodermic injection which results in death?" "What sort of motion pictures would tend to create hatred or contempt for a particular class of law-abiding citizen?"

The local papers commented upon the examination and its outcome. As one editorial stated, "Nobody on earth can put issues of taste and decency in question and answer form."

Another examination is to be held at a later date.

Censorship and Taxi Bill Before Tennessee House

Tennessee exhibitors are planning to fight a bill introduced a few days ago into the state legislature which provides for state censorship of all motion pictures and a fee of $50 for each picture reviewed, and in addition levies a tax of five per cent upon all gross receipts of the theatres throughout the state.

The bill, introduced by Representative Hamilton, provides for the creation of a Board of Moving Picture Censors, to be appointed by the governor and to hold office for two years. The board shall consist of three members, two of whom shall be known as censors and the third will be secretary. Offices will be provided by the state in Nashville. The two censors shall receive an annual salary of $2,000 and the secretary, $3,600. The secretary is the only one who is required to devote his entire time to the work. Provision also is made for the employment of two to five stenographers at a salary of $1,500, and the secretary may employ one chief clerk at an annual salary of $1,800. In addition to these salaries, allowance is to be made for all traveling expenses.

Exhibitors, under the bill, will not be permitted to show any motion picture before a "permit of release" is issued by the board, and application for such permit must be accompanied by a certified check or cash in the sum of $50. Application for release may be made either by producer or exhibitor. Where pictures are to be shown where no admission charge is made, application must be made and the fee of $10 paid the board. Three affidavits are required in this case.

Another vital clause of the bill provides that every three months, the exhibitor shall file with the board, under oath, a report of the gross income of his theatre and shall file at the same time a certified check for five per cent of the gross income received during the preceding three months. This is termed by the bill "a privilege tax for showing pictures censored by the censorship board."

In recognition of the high respect they have for their former "big boss," J. D. Williams, members of the First National Club, of which Steve McGrath is president, tendered a luncheon to Mr. and Mrs. Williams last Friday at Jim and Jack's restaurant, and after the speechmaking surprised Mr. and Mrs. Williams by presenting each with a handsome, fully equipped traveling bag.

Over one hundred members of the club were at the luncheon. E. Bruce Johnson, manager of the foreign department of First National, was the toastmaster.

Mr. Johnson spoke of the great loyalty of the First National employes for "J. D." as general manager of the company, and "J. D." in answering declared that it was the loyalty of those around him that enabled him to make First National a dominant figure in the motion picture business.

"It wasn't an easy battle, but you helped with your loyalty. You thought First National first and I know that you will continue to think First National first. It is a great organization and will continue to grow bigger and bigger. I feel honored to have you assemble here and tell me of your friendship," said Mr. Williams.

Roach Extending Studio Facilities

Purchases $100,000 "Film Ranch" Which Will House All Exteriors of Companies

PATHE'S new contracts with Hal Roach have caused the producer again to add materially to his Culver City plant. Mr. Roach announces his purchase of a $100,000 "Film Ranch," comprising ten acres adjacent to the "lot" which has been the scene of Harold Lloyd's work and has developed the Our Gang comedies with their "Zoo" accessory.

Producer Roach's statement declares that his new product engagements require him to put $1,000,000 more into his business this year than he did in 1922.

The film ranch acquisition will house all of the exteriors for the seven producing units which Mr. Roach plans to have in operation by the end of March. It will also become the permanent home of the Our Gang company, including the menagerie. One of the first buildings to go up on the new property will contain a school room where the youthful members of "Our Gang" will pursue their ordinary education.

The Pathe-Roach contract with Will Rogers to star in a series of thirteen two-reel comedies enters into the Roach studio expansion plans. It is announced that the famous "Follies" comedian will arrive in Los Angeles to begin his screen activities sometime during the month of March, his contract with Ziegfeld compelling him to remain with the "Follies" show until the completion of its New York run.

A total of eight units will produce under the Roach banner this year, the entire output being for Pathe distribution. Mr. Roach's plans include many new production activities.

"In increasing my program this year," says Producer Roach, "I am trying to keep pace with the added demand for productions of the higher type. Exhibitors are willing to pay big prices for pictures if they are given the right kind, as is exemplified by the tremendous success of the Harold Lloyd product."

Will Promote Pictures in China

Peacock Corporation Backed by American and Chinese Capital Is Formed

C. S. KWEI, a Chinese newspaper man, announced at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, that a new corporation backed by Chinese and American capital has been formed to show motion pictures throughout China. The new organization is called the Peacock Corporation, which has, Mr. Kwei declared, already purchased eighty pictures for showing in the Far East.

Mr. Kwei pointed out that at the present time there were only about 100 picture theatres in all China, and said that the Peacock corporation of which he is now a member intended to build many more and hoped to have a big chain of houses.

"Of course the trouble has been that motion pictures have been shown in China with American and English titles," he told his auditors. "We intend to translate your titles into Chinese, which will not only make them entertaining for our countrymen in general but will have an educational force far greater than the newspapers. The Chinaman seldom reads the newspapers but he will see pictures; he will get instruction in his language and he will learn how others live through the high-class pictures now being issued. However, we must have action pictures to keep our audiences entertained.

"We intend to train a native corps of about 1,000 in the handling of projection machines, and it is probable that before we have erected our theatres we will send out shows in wagons and in this manner pave the way for our theatres."

In explaining further the work to be done by the new Peacock Corporation, Mr. Kwei declared that the company hoped soon to undertake the making of big Chinese motion pictures for distribution in China.

"We want China to know America better and we want America to really know the Chinese. The Chinese like Americans and we have every reason to believe Americans like us. We hope to broaden that good feeling while we are making our venture successful."

Associated Authors Is Organized

New Producing Company Headed by Frank Woods to Release via Allied

ANOTHER producing company is active in Los Angeles, due to the fact that releasing contracts have just been signed at the Pickford-Fairbanks studios by Frank E. Woods, president of Associated Authors, and Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation and Allied Producers and Distributers Corporation.

Associated Authors, made up of Frank E. Woods, Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan, is the newest concern to be established in the picture industry.

"Formed for the purpose of promoting a closer association of authors with regard to the production of pictures," said Mr. Woods, "the Associated Authors will devote themselves to the developing of special features of the very highest type. Our first offering will be 'The Talisman,' and Wallace Beery, who won distinction in the role of Richard the Lionhearted in Douglas Fairbanks' 'Robin Hood,' will be featured in this same role in the Sir Walter Scott classic."

The pictures turned out by the Associated Authors will be released through Allied Producers and Distributers' Corporation, a subsidiary of United Artists' Corporation, owned and controlled by Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith.

It has not yet been decided definitely at what studio the Associated Authors will operate. This is to be arranged shortly by Clarke Thomas, associated for years with Thomas H. Ince, and who has been appointed general manager of the new organization.

Associated Authors will produce in rotation instead of attempting simultaneous operations. The present plan is for Mr. Woods to do "The Talisman" as the first offering, and when photography is complete, Elmer Harris will put a picture into work. As soon as all scenes for this have been taken, Thompson Buchanan will then start a production. This, it is believed, will insure a steady output, and will enable the authors to advise with each other to the best advantage, and to concentrate upon one picture at a time.

In addition to being producers, each of the three authors named is an officer in the new organization. Elmer Harris and Thompson Buchanan are both vice-presidents, while Frank Woods holds the portfolio of president, with Clarke Thomas acting as general manager.

"Now that our releasing agency has been established," said Mr. Woods, "I will start at once to gather a cast for 'The Talisman.' It is our hope to have this production ready as one of the picture offerings for the coming Spring. Work will start as soon as the cast is chosen, by which time we will have been definitely established in a studio."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 725 S. WABASH AVE.

Among the Exchanges

L. A. ULLRICH, well known to exhibitors and exchange men of Chicago, and former owner of the Ben Hur theatre, has joined Manager Martin's sales staff and is covering west side territory for Pathe in place of R. V. Nolan, who is now selling to circuits.

The Chicago exchange of First National has announced a newly-formed plan to tie up the exploitation department with the sales force in such a manner as to be of material benefit to exhibitors. Every exhibitor, hereafter, will have the benefit of the services of the exploitation duo, Hol Olver and Al Sobler gratis, and no house is too small or none too large to call on them for the service. In a recent issue of the NEWS, it was incorrectly stated that Mr. Olver, who was formerly of Paramount, Goldwyn and Robertson-Cole exploitation forces and during the past year, exploitation representative of First National at Boston, had come to Chicago as assistant to Mr. Sobler. The fact is Mr. Olver was sent to Chicago by Ned Holmes, chief of First National's exploitation staff, to afford the local exchange the benefit of two representatives instead of one and there is no difference in rank between the two.

General Home Office Representative A. W. Smith, of Associated Exhibitors, is in Chicago and will make his headquarters for the next four weeks at the Associated Exhibitors office in the Pathe exchange. Mr. Smith is co-operating with Branch Manager Harry Willard in putting over the important new releases of Associated, including the Lloyd pictures and other strong features which have recently been added to the program. Mr. Smith states, that for the purpose of stimulating public interest in the forthcoming Associated Exhibitor releases, a far-reaching national advertising campaign is to be carried out.

Henri Ellman is covering the south side for Manager Harry Willard of Associated Exhibitors and is hard at work on Harold Lloyd's big feature, "Dr. Jack." Mr. Ellman has a wide acquaintance in Chicago film circles, having been connected with Chicago exchanges for many years. Another new Associated salesman is R. J. Morfe, who returns to associated to cover the north side territory after having been connected with another concern for the past year and a half.

Tony Philbin is now traveling western Illinois and Iowa territory for Goldwyn.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," the remarkable whaling picture, which critics have hailed as a great production which marks another advance in the motion picture art, will have its premier showing at the Auditorium the week of April 1, and it is understood the Hodkinson organization will back it up with a strong advertising and exploitation campaign. Harry McDonald, of the New York office of Hodkinson, has been in Chicago for the past week working with District Manager Hurn and Manager Simmons on plans for its first Chicago showing.

Harry Zinc, who for several months has been working in the booking department of Famous Players-Lasky Chicago exchange, has been promoted to salesman and will work with Edward Rosecan in the Indiana territory.

Theodore Roberts, accompanied by his well known cigar, was the hit of the Palace bill this week and was accorded a great welcome by thousands of his admirers. A large party from the Paramount exchange occupied the first and second rows of the Palace at Monday night's performance and when Theodore appeared, arose and displayed a big banner, which stretched entirely across the house, which read, "Welcome Paramount Star, Theodore Roberts." Mr. Roberts was pleased and the audience applauded. The boys brought the banner into the house in sections concealed under their coats and the resulting surprise was a novety in what might be termed "indoor exploitation."

Around the Trade

"DR. JACK," which is generally believed Harold Lloyd's greatest picture, shown in conjunction with Will Rogers' three-reeler, "Fruits Of Faith," packed them in at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum last week and it is understood, broke all house records at this popular State Street theatre. At the present writing indications are that the second week will be even greater than the first, as Sunday and Monday's attendance was better than on the same two days of the previous week.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, held on March 1st, Mr. A. J. Moeller, general manager of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and of the national exposition, which is to take place May 19th to 26th, appeared before the board and asked for support of the project. After considerable discussion a motion was made by Director Glen Reynolds and seconded by Director W. D. Burford, that the support of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners be given to Mr. Moeller in his effort to make the exposition a success. While some of the members of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners were dissatisfied with the manner in which the exposition proposition had been handled by the national organization, and the failure of that organization to give the matter into the hands of the Chicago men, it is believed that this has been smoothed over and that with a more thorough knowledge of the conditions that confronted the national organization in arranging the exposition, the Illinois men are now ready to give hearty co-operation to the project.

Cecil De Mille sent the following telegram from Hollywood to Aaron J. Jones, in reference to the opening of Adam's Rib, at the new McVicker's theatre this week: "With fond memories of the memorable old house where stage plays by my father, my brother and myself have played many performances, I am delighted to hear that my latest film production, 'Adam's Rim,' is to open in the new McVicker's on March 5th. Best wishes to a firm which is perpetuating in new guise the fine theatrical ideals which made the old McVicker's one of the world's most famous theatres." Old timers will remember that it was at McVicker's that William De Mille, father of Cecil and William C., made his debut as an author with "The Charity Ball." "The Girl I Left Behind Me," also had its premier at McVicker's. The showing of "Adam's Rib" marks a change of policy in the new McVicker's as Jones, Linick & Schaefer's executives after viewing this feature felt that it was of such excellence that it should be held over for two weeks, this being the first time that any feature had been shown more than one week in this house.

The National Theatres Corporation is preparing plans for a three thousand seat theatre to be located at the corner of 79th and Halsted streets. It is reported that construction will begin early this summer.

The growing importance of motion pictures has received signal recognition from Marshall Field & Company, who have erected a small motion picture theatre in their book department, wherein trailers from motion picture features, based on famous novels, will be shown daily from 11:00 A. M. to 4:30 P. M., and explanations of how photoplays are made from books will be given the patrons of the world's greatest retail store. Scenes from "The Covered Wagon," "The Stranger's Banquet," "The Christian," "Main Street," and other photoplays based on Grossett & Dunlap publications, will be the first to appear on Marshall Field & Company's screen, and personal appearances of authors and motion picture actors and actresses will be arranged from time to time. E. C. Ketcham, representing Grossett & Dunlap, negotiated the tie-up with Marshall Field & Company, which will mean valuable publicity for the motion picture industry, as well as the publishers.

Max Balaban, of Balaban & Katz, has returned from California, where he put in a couple of weeks visiting with the Hollywood film celebrities and watching pictures in the making.

A house warming party was held at the new Paramount exchange, 1327 S. Wabash Avenue, on Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Paramount Pep Club. The evening was enjoyably spent with music, dancing and refreshments and the many guests of the club had an opportunity of inspecting the commodious and finely equipped exchange, which is now the Chicago headquarters of Famous Players-Lasky.

Sol Fichtenberg and Max Schwartz opened their handsome new Capitol theatre at Kedzie and Lawrence avenues, on Wednesday evening, and got way to a fine start. This is the old Albany Park, which has been closed for several years, but in reality is a new house, as only the old walls were utilized. The magnificent furnishings and equipment installed and its artistic decorations make it one of the finest outlying houses in the city and its policy will be in keeping. Special attention will be directed to giving its patrons the best in music and a Kimball orchestral unit organ has been installed, which is the first of its kind to be put into a Chicago theatre, as well as being one of the largest instruments in a local motion picture house.

Ralph Crocker, of the Star theatre, Elgin, did such a big business during the original three-day booking of "The Third Alarm" that he held it over for two additional days, during which the big business continued. The fire department tie-up and the numerous other stunts Mr. Crocker put over, in co-operation with Publicist Kramer, of F. B. O., kept the city of Elgin on the qui vive during the entire run and it is safe to say that there wasn't a man, woman or child in the city who didn't know about "The Third Alarm," and a large percentage of them went to see it.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have signed up Nora Bayes to appear at McVicker's theatre for one week, starting March 19.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Adam and Eva—

Holding its own on third week. (West.)

A very good production. Patrons liked it very much. Good receipts. (Middle West.)

Not so good as it might have been after "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Played to excellent business, however. (East.)

The World's Applause—

Bebe Daniels and Lewis Stone make strong combinations in this interesting feature. Business was good and our patrons liked it. (Middle West.)

Java Head—

An exceptional picture which did satisfactory business, but which received some adverse criticism from patrons who thought the subject rather dull. (East.)

Business held up good all week with this one. (Middle West.)

Very fine picture, but business under par. (East.)

Nobody's Money—

Jack Holt and strong cast put somewhat weak story over and pleased our patrons. Business excellent. (Middle West.)

Fair picture and business normal. (East.)

Fair picture, but did good business. (Middle West.)

My American Wife—

Stars popular here; did good business on two weeks' run. (Middle West.)

Weather bad; did better than expected. (West.)

Drums of Fate—

A very well liked film with good story and plenty of thrills. Excellent business. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

The Voice from the Minaret—

People who like Norma Talmadge liked this; and nearly all my patrons like Norma. Therefore, good business and good picture. (West.)

The Crossroads of New York—

Picture not very good, but got fair business. (East.)

The Hottentot—

All attendance records went by the board on this one. Anniversary week and big supplementary program helped. (East.)

The Dangerous Age—

Good for the older folk and drew fairly (East.)

Bell Boy 13—

One of Douglas MacLean's best. Did excellently. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

The Strangers' Banquet—

Attendance for this one was good all week. (Middle West.)

Strong and interesting feature. Only adverse criticism, too many people in the cast. Pleased our patrons and played to big business. (Middle West.)

Broken Chains—

An average picture, but it pleased the fans; good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Christian—

Fine picture; better than average business. Held for second week. (Middle West.)

Taken off after a week. Surprisingly small business and slow death. (East.)

Very well liked by all, including critics. Business considerably better than average. (Middle West.)

A Blind Bargain—

Did very well with it. Received good criticism in press and heard favorable comments from patrons. (Middle West.)

Lon Chaney's masterpiece. A very fine picture. Best feature of it is that it is in five reels. Patrons gave it wide advertising. Sold out most of the week for wonderful business. (Middle West.)

METRO

Crinoline and Romance—

Pleasant, but not particularly profitable. Fair business for the week. (Middle West.)

A light picture that drew well and was liked. (East.)

Jazzmania—

They liked it. Mae Murray does a few different things, but as long as they keep coming, I call it a good picture. (West.)

Just the type of picture for patrons of this house. Stood them up every night. Matinees also strong. Mae Murray a prime favorite here. (East.)

All the Brothers Were Valiant—

Lon Chaney has a good following here and the box office returns for a week's run with this one were highly satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Quincy Adams Sawyer—

Feature with good amusement value. Business held up well. (Middle West.)

The Famous Mrs. Fair—

More pictures like this would increase business, generally. Patrons keep coming when pictures are good and this is the kind to build up patronage. (West.)

Forget-Me-Not—

Forget it. People want to be entertained, not made weary with troubles like their own. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—

And still they come. For a picture run, there was never one better. (West.)

One Exciting Night—

The title draws and when they have seen the picture, it causes a lot of argument, hence, mouth to mouth advertising. Did well with it. (West.)

The Girl I Loved—

Brass—

A good picture; business increased as week lengthened. (West.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

The Prince and the Pauper—

Well liked and had not a few laughs with a throb now and then. Good business. (East.)

The Grub Stake—

Personal appearance of star, Nell Shipman, seemed to draw them in. Might not do so well, otherwise, although it is interesting. (West.)

FOX

The Face on the Bar Room Floor—

Wonderful box office attraction. People waiting in line all day to get in. Never had such a crowded week. (Middle West.)

Romance Land—

Tom Mix always pulls them in for me. The Mix fans liked this one. Very good attendance. (Middle West.)

AL LICHTMAN

Poor Men's Wives—

Fair picture and medium business. (East.)

Thorns and Orange Blossoms—

An average production. Receipts up to expectations. (Middle West.)

The Hero—

UNIVERSAL

The Bolted Door—

Average picture of its kind, with enough good action to hold interest throughout. Pretty good week from a box office angle. (Middle West.)

The Flirt—

Pleasing picture, well acted; held for a second week. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

The Headless Horseman—

Business was good on this picture that had much to commend it to the jaded appetite of patrons. (East.)

Free Air—

Very satisfactory. Many have read the story and naturally like to see the film version. (Middle West.)

The Kingdom Within—

Seemed rather weak in makeup and cast, but went very well to good business. (East.)

F. B. O.

The Third Alarm—

Put on for a week with good exploitation campaign, this one held up fairly well sliding off as the week progressed. (East.)

Drew like a house on fire, all week. (East.)

ASSO.-EXHIBITOR

Conquering the Woman—

It can't be done—at least not with this picture. The women kicked and the men laughed. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

The Darling of the Rich—

Went over strong here. Has all the elements of a box office winner. (East.)

Women Men Marry—

Picture and business both fair only. (East.)

Good entertainment value. Business good. (Middle West.)

The Innocent Cheat—

In our judgment a good feature, but it seemed to be an off week and business was poor. (Middle West.)

Prologue to "The Christian" staged at the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga., of which DeSales Harrison is manager. At the opening of the scene, against the setting shown, the children were playing about the stage. Don Ferrandou, baritone, who was formerly with "Hitchy Koo," entered as a monk, and sang "The Rosary," which was followed by the opening of the picture

Seattle, Wash.—Manager Steffey, of Jensen & Von Herberg's Liberty theatre; Barkus B. Woof, of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, and Dr. Frank R. Loope, president of the Seattle Sunshine Club, arranged an excellent exploitation measure in connection with the showing of "The Message of Emile Coue."

Dr. Loope has been bedridden for ten years, during which time he has organized the Sunshine Club, all of the members of which are bedridden like himself. Through the co-operation of the newspaper and the theatre manager, Dr. Loope was shown the picture, and then invitations were issued to all the members of the club to witness the showings. Ambulances for the transportation of the cheerful invalids were furnished by the Post-Intelligencer and the Liberty theatre.

Mayor Edwin J. Brown issued a proclamation setting aside the week of the showing as "Optimistic Week," and advised the adoption of the slogan, "Day by Day, etc.," to be applied to Seattle citizens and business houses.

Street ballyhoo for "The Oregon Trail" used by Manager Allan Simmonds of the Dome theatre, Akron, Ohio

"The Hottentot" Reviewed by Sporting Editor

CUMBERLAND, Md.—A fruitful field for special publicity on "The Hottentot" was found by Robert Slote, manager of Harry Crandall's Strand theatre, when he invited the sporting editor of a local newspaper to review the picture.

The fact that it has a special appeal to horsemen and sporting enthusiasts justified the selection, with the result that the picture not only gained the usual notices but broke into the sporting pages as well.

A street ballyhoo of two jockeys on horseback supplemented the publicity work and the efforts of a telephone operator who called up Cumberland's 1,000 best families to advise them that "The Hottentot" was coming.

Handsome Card Sent to Select Mailing List on "Salome"

Philadelphia, Pa. — When Nazimova's "Salome" was booked for showing at the Aldine theatre, the management, in addition to an extensive publicity and advertising campaign, covered a mailing list of 5,000 leading residents of the city.

The matter sent to this list consisted of a handsomely printed card, on high class stock, announcing the coming of "Salome" and carrying this copy:

"We believe you will appreciate seeing Nazimova in the highly artistic photoplay version of Oscar Wilde's famed poetic drama 'Salome.' That's our reason for calling your attention to this attraction.

"Nazimova has produced a 'Salome' that is non-censorable without stripping the character of all its beauty and glamor; bizarre without being risque; sensuous without being sensual. She has portrayed a 'Salome' that is spiritual rather than carnal. She replaced realism with fantasy and has depicted a 'Dance of the Seven Veils' that is refined in its beauty and captivating in its appeal.

"Nazimova's 'Salome' stands out sharply as a triumphant rebuke to those critics of the screen who have said 'Art cannot come out of a camera.'"

"Poor Men's Wives" Given Aid of Prominent Silk Company

New York, N. Y.—In connection with the showing of "Poor Men's Wives' at the Criterion theatre, Mallinson's, the silk house, gave the picture a large display in a window of its Fifth avenue store.

The centre of the display was a shadow box. This was a beautifully designed transparency draped with a fold of Mallinson's silk and the background pigmented to harmonize with the color and design. The display remained during the run of "Poor Men's Wives" at the Criterion.

It was arranged by Foster Moore of the Exploitation Department of the Al Lichtman Corporation.

Two Flirts Used To Ballyhoo Showing of "The Flirt"

Columbus, Ohio.—The management of the Pastime theatre, in co-operation with Charles Loewenberg, Universal exploiteer, put over a street stunt on "The Flirt" that proved highly effective.

A pretty young lady, looking very much like Eileen Percy, drove around the town, dressed in stunning furs. The car used was a sedan, and over the engine hood an oil cloth sign was placed.

The young lady was seen on the streets of Columbus daily, from 2 p. m. until 5 p. m., visiting various department stores and was accompanied by a midget, two and one-half feet tall. The midget carried a window card of "The Flirt" on his back. He was in full dress with high hat and walking stick. During the evenings the different cafes and hotels were visited. "The Flirt" attended a banquet tendered the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio at the Chittenden Hotel. At each place a special "Flirt" novelty card was placed. The "Flirt" and the midget met nearly every exhibitor that attended the banquet.

In addition to having the signs on the car which the young lady drove through the city in, there was a small card printed and placed on her hand-bag. This read: "The Flirt."

Password Wins Lapel Flower on "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Exploitation of an effective type has been put over by the New Jersey exchange of First National on "Might Lak' a Rose" through a small but attractive rose lapel boutonniere.

The little flowery decoration is so well gotten up that hundreds of requests for them have been made of people who have been seen wearing them. In every case the inquirer has been directed to the exploitation man in charge of their distribution.

But—there's a catch in it. You have to know the password. It's "Mighty Lak' A Rose." Tell the exploitation man that and you get the rose.

The artificial roses can be provided in large quantities at comparatively little cost.

Newspaper Contest Staged On "Pathe News" Photos

Topeka, Kans.—A hook-up in which the Grand theatre, Topeka Daily State Journal and local advertisers figure has resulted in running a display page with the heading, "Grand Pathe Contest."

The page is divided into twelve sections, each containing a film enlargement picture from the current issue of Pathe News, beneath which is the matter supplied by the advertiser. Right and left at the top of the page are the publishers' announcements, which read:

"See America at home the Pathe News Way. Twice a week the Pathe reels at the Grand theatre bring before your eyes the best pictures of the news events just as they happened. It's up-to-date education."

The rules of the contest read: "What cities in the United States do these illustrations represent? Each is depictive of the name of some metropolis having a population of 100,000 or more. Can you figure out what they are? List each illustration according to name of advertiser, and after each number write what you believe to be the correct answer. To the person sending in the first correct answer will be given 14 tickets to the Grand, good for either Tuesday or Thursday night; the second correct answer will be given 8 tickets to the Grand, good for either Tuesday or Thursday night; the third prize, 4 tickets; fourth and fifth prizes, 2 tickets."

Paramount to Give Prizes for Best "Adam's Rib" Stunt

New York, N. Y.—Five Gowns used in "The Ten Commandments" have been offered by Cecil B. De Mille to exhibitors in the United States and Canada executing the best exploitation stunt for his current release, "Adam's Rib." The gowns, in turn, are to be awarded to be used for any exploitation the exhibitors care to stage for "The Ten Comandments," which is scheduled for early fall release.

These gowns were designed by Claire West and are valued at from $300 to $1,500 each. They are not models or copies, but the actual garments used in the picture, and will be shipped to the winning exhibitors direct from Hollywood.

Exhibitors are to file photographs and reports for their exploitation stunts for "Adam's Rib" with the Division of Exploitation, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The competition closes in July.

The campaigns will be submitted to a jury of trade paper editors: Tom Kennedy, Exhibitors' Trade Review; Epes Winthrop Sargent, Moving Picture World; L. C. Moen, The Motion Picture News; John Spargo, The Exhibitors' Herald, and Maurice Kann, The Film Daily.

The campaigns will be judged solely upon their effectiveness irrespective of the assistance of the Paramount exploiteers. The field forces of Paramount will be able to co-operate with only a small portion of the exhibitors playing "Adam's Rib," which does not affect the eligibility of the others.

C. R. Hatcher, manager of the Grand Opera House, Meridian, Miss., devised this setting for a prologue to "My Old Kentucky Home"

Ross D. Rogers, manager of the D. F. & R. Enterprises, was responsible for this "Jazzmania" display, in soft blue, orange and white, at the Mission theatre, Amarillo, Texas. A colored disc was rotated behind the openings in the center and a Magna Vox and phonograph broadcasted jazz music through it

Jackie Coogan Is Tied Up with Salvation Army Drive

Milwaukee, Wis.—A new stunt for Jackie Coogan was evolved in Milwaukee when he was tied up with a Salvation Army campaign for funds.

The occasion for the tie-up was the showing of "Oliver Twist" at the Strand. The Salvation Army's street corner stands were embellished with a six-sheet cutout of young Jackie. Originally this held a porridge bowl, but it was replaced by a tin cup in which charitably inclined passersby could drop their coins.

It was strengthened by the personal appeal: "Oliver Twist says, 'Kids, please help the Salvation Army to help the poor kiddies.' Jackie Coogan."

Jackie Coogan's Kiddie Kandies were good for a window tie-up and the Coogan clothes claimed an entire display by themselves. A special matinee given for a juvenile club made the street car company so enthusiastic that it was willing to allow banners announcing the showing of "Oliver Twist" at the Strand to be plastered over the sides of the cars.

Special window display for "The Isle of Dead Ships" (now "The Isle of Lost Ships") during First National week in Los Angeles to advertise the showing at the Kinema in advance

Sleigh Ride Given as Lure to "Quincy Adams Sawyer"

OMAHA, Neb.—"Be one of the lucky ones to ride in a sleigh to see 'Quincy Adams Sawyer' at the Sun theatre. Enjoy the first sleigh ride that has been possible in five years in Omaha by being one of the first hundred to 'phone the theatre that you want to join the party."

The above announcement was an exploitation stunt for "Quincy Adams Sawyer," when it was presented for an entire week at the Sun. Newspapers called attention to this novelty, and public response was immediate.

Four Tie-Ups Made to Exploit Showing of "The Flirt"

Indianapolis, Ind.—James Kennedy, manager of the Apollo theatre, and W. H. Esch, Universal exploiteer, arranged for four excellent tie-ups to exploit "The Flirt."

Arrangements were made with Mayor Shank to use his name. A three-style, quarter-sheet card was gotten out. This stunt proved most effective and flirts in town walked the straight and narrow, as the town was literally plastered with these cards, and from comments that were heard the card was the big thing in creating a great deal of word-of-mouth advertising for "The Flirt."

An automobile tie-up was made with the Buick Motor Company. A car was paraded for ten days, and at intervals the signs were changed. A very attractive blonde young lady who attracted much attention was driven through the city.

A bookstore tie-up and a music store tie-up were the other features of the campaign. The W. K. Stewart book store arranged attractive windows, using a live model. This young lady was "set in" the large book used in the window, a hole was cut in the cover. She attracted a considerable bit of attention, blocking the sidewalk from the time she took her place in the book until she left.

The music tie-up was made with The Music Shop. A window display of "The Flirt" song proved to be attractive

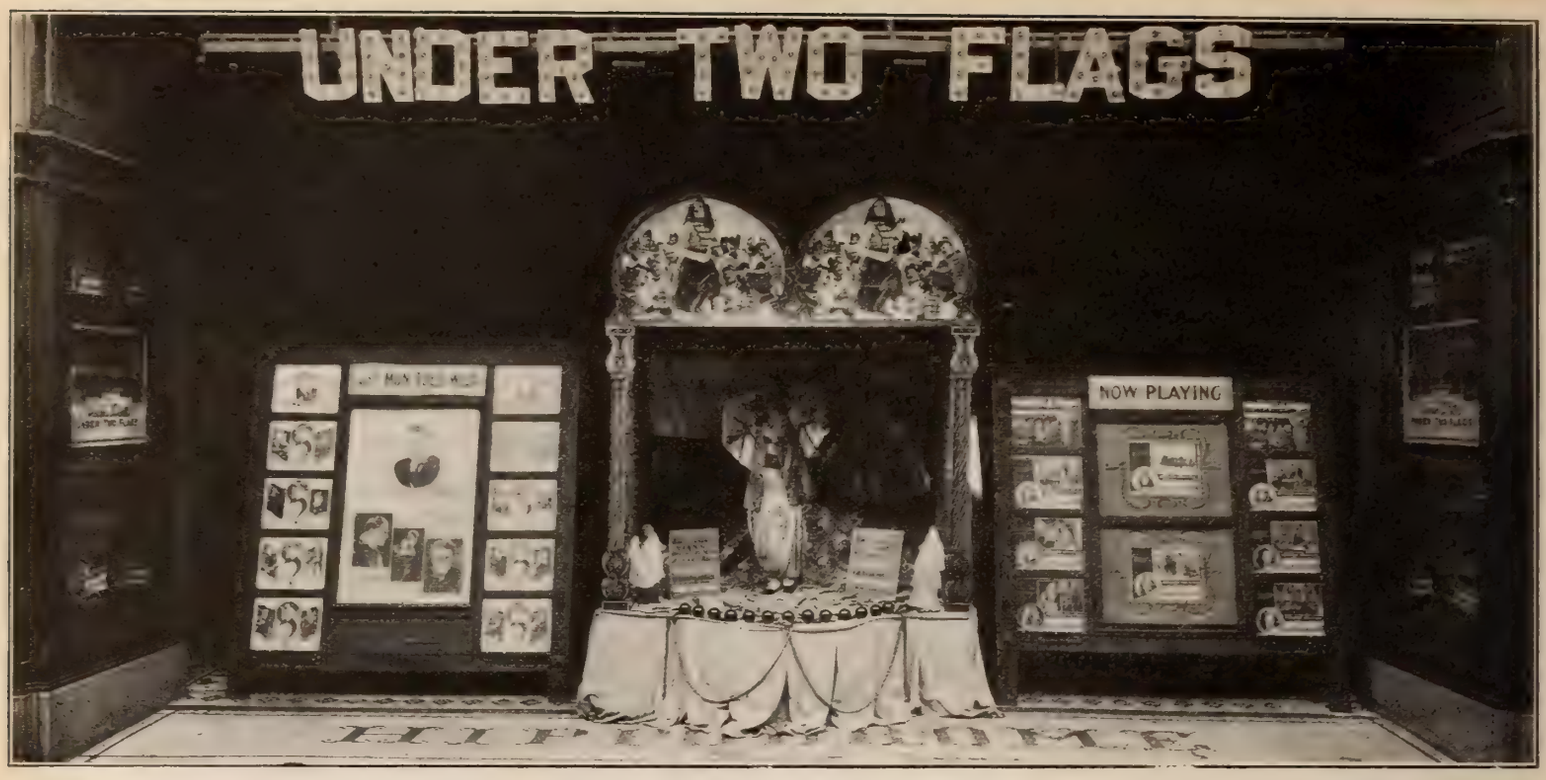
Resemblance Contest Is Space Getter for "Knighthood"

Harrisburg, Pa.—The campaign for "When Knighthood Was in Flower" at the Colonial theatre, staged by the management in conjunction with Eli M. Orowitz, Paramount exploiteer, resulted in a two-column cut on the front page of a leading newspaper as the big smash.

The basis was a Marion Davies resemblance contest. The winner received $250 shopping credit in the largest store in town.

This store also took extra space in the newspaper and advertised the picture continually for the week. For the first three days various poses of Miss Davies appeared on the front page of the paper. After that there were layouts of Miss Davies and the leading contestants. One day, in addition to the front page space, the paper printed a solid page of the pictures of twenty-five of the leaders in the tournament."

M. A. Kashin, manager of the Rialto theatre, Newark, N. J., used this street stunt on "Dr. Jack." A phonograph connected with the horn in the cut-out was used, with a laughing record



The management of the Hippodrome theatre, Lancaster, Pa., used this display on "Under Two Flags," with an effective shadow-box and other accessory material

Novel Publicity Is Obtained to Exploit "Just Tony"

Winnipeg, Canada.—An effective campaign for "Just Tony" at the Province theatre was put over by G. De Grandcourt, Fox Canadian representative, in conjunction with the theatre management.

The exploiteer started out three weeks before the picture played with cleverly written stories in the newspapers that announced to the public that "Just Tony" was the latest slang from the old country. The stories are too lengthy to reproduce here, but, owing to the careful and interesting manner in which they were written, the papers willingly gave them space in their columns. No mention of the picture was made. Following this, every office in Winnipeg was bombarded with blotters containing a joke headed "Here's the Latest Slang Bringing in 'Just Tony.'"

The merchants were approached for ads on a special "Just Tony" page in both daily papers. They readily responded with ads, "Just Tony" chocolates, "Just Tony" clothes, 'Just Tony" meals and "Just Tony" everything. An ingenious "Just Tony" competition was worked in this connection which resulted in the papers receiving between five and six hundred replies each.

A private screening was held for the Winnipeg Humane Society, the Boy Scouts Association and the Girl Guides. These organizations were induced to get behind the picture. The Humane Society sent a splendid letter of endorsement to the theatre and mailed out 2,000 letters to their members and friends, urging them to go and see the picture. The Boy Scout Association canvassed their 2,500 membership, with the result that a special early morning show was held for the boys alone. The Girl Guides did the same, with the same result.

Firemen Parade with Band for "The Third Alarm"

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Getting the entire fire department of a city the size of San Francisco to turn out, headed by its band, to exploit a picture is something of an achievement.

The management of the Century theatre did this on "The Third Alarm," through the fire department tie-up made on the picture. In addition to the parade, made up of old and new apparatus, the department lent the oldest fire engine in the state, hand-drawn, to stand in front of the theatre.

Strong Exploitation Put Back of "The Mystery Box"

St. Louis, Mo.—An unusual exploitation campaign, for a short subject, was put over recently by Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Missouri theatre, on "The Mystery Box."

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch broadcasted the message through Station KSD to the effect that this reel, explaining the mystery of radio, would be shown at the Missouri theatre. Furthermore, it is stated, exceptional newspaper space was given.

Resemblance Contest Exploits "Peg O' the Movies"

Milwaukee, Wis.—For ten days the Contest Editor of The Sentinel has been besieged with pictures and letters of little girls between the ages of 3 and 6 in an effort to find Milwaukee's counterpart of Baby Peggy, whose latest picture, "Peg of the Movies," opens at the Merrill shortly. Pictures of more than 200 kiddies were entered, for not only is the honor great of being chosen because of resemblance to tiny Miss Montgomery, but the awards for the prize winners were fascinating enough to tempt many a youngster and her mother too.

The entire contest was one of the best tie-ups of exhibitor and advertisers exploited by a Milwaukee newspaper in some time. The sum of $25 to apply on the purchase of a Sonora phonograph; a pair of shoes free from Brouwer's children's department; half a dozen baby portraits at Klein's studio; a $10 payment on a $100 bond at the Grossman, Lewis Co., free hosiery from the Phoenix Hosiery Co.; a year's dancing instruction at the Kuhlig School of Dancing; a $100 credit on a Kimball Grand piano ($44.25 credit to each of the other contestants); a $25 savings account in the First Wisconsin Natl. Bank, and free automobile transportation while the winner rides about to collect her various trophies, were the prizes.

"Darkness and Daylight" Is Favorite Play

The Story: The Players: Ready to Use Newspaper Readers

THE story of " Darkness and Daylight " is adapted from the stage play of the same name by Charles W. Henry, first played some fifty years ago and which has remained a favorite for decades. The picture has been adapted by Albert W. Plummer, who also directed, and was photographed by Frank Zucker.

Plummer has been connected with motion pictures the last sixteen years, since his first association with the old Biograph company. His activities have covered practically every branch of production work. For two years he was an exhibitor at Medford, Mass. He was one of the first cameramen to take pictures in Hollywood, Cal. He was also on the speaking stage, having appeared with Julia Arthur, James A. Herne and Roland Reed.

The story is that of a young girl, May Allen, played by Alta Vera, who is persecuted by James Bickford, played by William Black, who desires her, yet hates her because her mother had spurned his love. This persecution also extends to blind Ruth Allen, her younger sister, played by Audrey Berry, and to her brother, just released from the penitentiary, played by Wallace Ray.

The girl is on the eve of marriage to Will Irving, played by Jack O'Brien. The brother returns. Bickford hovers in the background. The girl discovers her brother in the act of stealing certain papers in the home of Will Irving. Irving enters, and since she refuses to explain, assumes that he is a lover.

The girls leave, and the brother escapes, after pursuit by Obadiah Jenks, the comedy relief character, played by Harlan Knight. Obadiah goes to a nearby city as a scissors grinder. He encounters May and finds that they are in poverty. Irving endeavors to find May, and comes to the city. Obadiah meets Bickford, and the latter learns of the girls' whereabouts. May is unable to meet the rent and Bickford has her evicted. Not satisfied with this, he has her framed up on a charge of theft and sent to jail to await trial. He then turns the blind girl adrift in the streets, alone, but Obadiah finds her. He meets Will Irving and tells him of the girls' plight. Irving obtains May's release. The confession of another prisoner clears Dick and puts Bickford out of the way.

Ready-to-Run Press Notices

THE following are suggested as newspaper readers for this production:

Reader No. 1: Adapted from a play that has been a favorite for more than fifty years, " Darkness and Daylight," a Bancroft production directed by Albert W. Plummer, comes to the .....theatre on.... .....

The picture is said to contain more than the usual amount of appealing heart interest and to be highly realistic throughout. It is unique in that instead of filming it in a studio, with its artificial atmosphere, the company went into actual homes in Worcester, Mass., installed powerful arc lights and proceeded to " shoot " the entire picture in genuine settings. As a result, the atmosphere is said to be unusually real.

The story told is that of a family of two sisters and a brother, persecuted by a wealthy man because their mother spurned his love. He pursues them relentlessly, sends the boy to the penitentiary, grinds the two girls down to poverty and casts the one, who is blind, adrift on the streets alone.

The older sister, whom he loves, yet hates because of her resemblance to her dead mother, is framed up on a charge of theft, and things seem very black for the little family.

At this point, however, a surprising twist in the story takes place that points to happiness ahead. A pleasing love interest runs throughout, together with a generous amount of comedy and pathos.

The leading feminine role, that of the old sister, is played by Alta Vera, a promising newcomer to the screen. Audrey Berry appears in the appealing role of the blind sister and Wallace Ray is the brother. The wealthy scoundrel is played by William Black, comedy is supplied by Harlan Knight as a lovable old New Englander, and Jack O'Brien is seen as the sweetheart of the older sister.

Reader No. 2: " Darkness and Daylight," adapted from the famous stage success of the same name by Charles W. Henry, comes to the .....theatre ..... for a run of ..... days.

It was produced by Bancroft Productions, Inc., under the direction of Albert W. Plummer, being filmed in Worcester, Mass., on the actual settings called for in the story.

" Darkness and Daylight " has been played on the stage for more than fifty years and remains a favorite Originally written for a famous stage star in the 70's, it became so popular that several touring companies were sent out with it, and it was played on both sides of the water, having been as popular in the British Isles as here. Since that time, it has continued to be a favorite with stock companies.

Albert W. Plummer, the director, who enjoys the distinction of having been one of the first men to make motion pictures in Hollywood, played in one of these companies some years ago. The great human interest of the play made a deep impression on him, and when he set out to make his own pictures his mind reverted to this drama and its screen possibilities.

As a result, it was selected as a screen vehicle, and has been transferred to the screen faithfully and sympathetically, retaining all of its romance, smiles and tears.

The members of the cast include Alta Vera, Audrey Berry, William Black, Harlan Knight, Wallace Ray and Jack O'Brien, and the picture was photographed by Frank Zucker.

"Darkness and Daylight" Exploitation Aids

IN exploiting "Darkness and Daylight," you have a number of angles to work on.

The play on which it is based (not to be confused with the novel of the same name) is one of your principal selling angles. This was played all over the country, years ago, as well as abroad, and there will be many old timers who will recall this famous comedy melodrama of New England life. It was written by Charles W. Henry for Hughes, a famous actor of the 70's, and has endured to this day, being still used occasionally by stock companies.

Another exploitation angle which has merit, inasmuch as it has not been used, is the fact that the entire picture was taken on authentic settings, the scenes being shot in actual homes in Worcester, Mass., where the picture was filmed. As a result, the sets have a realistic quality—an appearance of being really lived in—not often found.

A simple stunt which might be effectively used in making up any special banners or signs would be to divide the sign into two halves, the one white and the other black, putting the word "Darkness" against a black background and the word "Daylight" against a white background, the words themselves being in a third color. Another application of the same idea would be a background of gray or some other neutral tint, with the word "Dark ness" in black and "Daylight" in white or light yellow.

In co-operative advertising, the title may be hooked in nicely. In tying up with a shoe merchant on an ad, for instance, some such line as this might be used: "There is as much difference between ordinary shoes and Eureka shoes as there is between 'Darkness and Daylight.'" A number of applications of this sort will readily suggest themselves.

A tie-up with the electric lighting company is also possible. A display of lighting fixtures might be used, with a window card bearing some such line as this: "'Darkness and Daylight' are all the same in the home that is electrically lighted. Mazda lamps turn Darkness into Daylight."

If your local savings bank is an active advertiser, you might induce them to put up a display card of this sort: "Life is made up of 'Darkness and Daylight.' Prepare now for the inevitable dark days. Open a savings account. Money in the bank means Daylight when Darkness comes."

The want ad stunt may be used to good effect on this picture. Insert in the classified columns of your paper an ad reading: "WANTED—Information concerning present whereabouts of May Allen and Ruth Allen, believed to be in this city, where they came to escape persecution of wealthy man. Aged 20 and 18, respectively. The younger girl is blind. As they are probably in destitute circumstances, it is important that they be located. For information, call Will Irving at (theatre phone number)."

There is a situation in the story in which Bickford, the wealthy man, persecutes the girl because of her resemblance to her dead mother, who refused his love. He hates the girl because of this, yet is madly in love with her. This suggests an essay contest for the best answers to the question: "Can a Man Love and Hate a Woman at the Same Time?"

Included among the stills on the production are some of Alta Vera in an attractive wedding gown. These, neatly mounted on a card, might be used by your local merchant in a window display of a trousseau. Or, if you wish to carry it a step further, have him select a similar gown, put it on a dummy, and display it in his window with a card reading: "Wedding gown worn by Alta Vera in 'Darkness and Daylight,' the romantic drama of smiles and tears coming to the Isis theatre on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday."

A lobby display stunt with strong attention value can be built, if you care to go to the trouble, by placing a piece of scrim over the front of a box, of any desired size. Place lights inside the box on a flasher circuit, and at the back place a card with the word "Daylight" in prominent letters. Then, on the scrim, letter "Darkness and."

The resultant effect will be that when the inside of the box is dark, with all light falling on the front of the scrim, only the words "Darkness and" will be visible. When the lights flash on inside, however, so that there is a stronger light behind the scrim than in front of it, the words on the scrim will become practically invisible, and only the word "Daylight" will show.

If you have the necessary flasher and some extra porcelain sockets, practically the only cost will be for the piece of scrim, plus whatever time and labor you put in on it, and a device of this sort will attract a surprising amount of attention, especially if you have not used this sort of thing frequently.

Suitable catch-lines would be: "Based on the famous stage play that made millions laugh and cry." "The thrilling drama of two girls who gained happiness, despite the cruel persecution of a wealthy roue." "Life seemed very dark to May Allen, living under the shadow of a great cloud, but she discovered that the darkest hour is just before dawn."

Pre-release Reviews of Features

"The Leopardess"

Paramount—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

HENRY KOLKER deserves unstinted praise for his excellent direction of his first Paramount work. He has given to the screen a praiseworthy subject, which although starting off with the much used South Sea island stuff, soon gets away from there, thrills along over the bounding main and lands one in God's country where the plot continues to carry thrills right up to the close. It is the best picture in which Alice Brady has appeared on the Paramount program and one which gives her opportunity to go the limit. Although we must confess that Miss Brady is not very convincing as a South Sea island belle, she works hard and is very good in the dramatic closing scenes.

The opening scenes, staged in Florida, present a series of eye pleasing natural settings. The battle between Quizz and Croft on the boat, ending with the latter being thrown into the sea during a storm is a thrilling moment, so is that in which Croft forces his wife to dance for his guests under threat of invoking a dread native curse on the girl. The climax is a tense one. Tiara, determined to break the curse, awaits her husband's return with a gun in her hand. A man enters the door. She fires. The man falls. It proves to be the captain—back from a watery grave. Quizz returns anon. Through blood spots and a hat, he discovers the captain's presence. He attempts to kill both the captain and his wife when he releases a ferocious leopardess which, however, springs upon Quizz himself. It is a fine bit of screen craftsmanship.

There is one point in the story that is a bit overdone, and that is where the girl's father consents to give her to Quizz for a case of Scotch. Excellent direction has lifted this subject out of the beaten path.

The Cast

Tiara	Alice Brady
Captain Croft	Edward Langford
Scott Quigg	Montague Love
Angus McKenzie	Charles Kent

In his American home Quigg discovers the captain's presence. He attempts to have a leopardess which he keeps as a pet destroy them both, but the animal kills Quigg. Tiara marries Captain Croft.

"The Bishop of the Ozarks"

F. B. O.—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS story presents a religious motive, and naturally carries quite a moral tone. Yet it contains no propaganda of any sort. It merely tells in a fairly effective dramatic manner the theme of regeneration and the triumph of good over evil. The spectator who has not paid much attention to mysticism will doubtless miss much of its story, since it unfolds scenes depicting a spiritualistic seance and what not. There is also demonstrated in the development of the plot a persistent strain of mental telepathy. Anyone up on things of an occult character will get much more out of "The Bishop of the Ozarks" than one who is uninformed on the subject.

The story is really a simple little document—one not occasioning much suspense in its action, but which reaches its climax with the interest fairly well sustained. The plot revolves around an escaped convict who forces a minister to exchange clothes with him. The dominie is killed which gives the criminal an opportunty to assume his identity as well as the guardianship of his little daughter. The following scenes depict the efforts of the convict to lead a useful life. He wins the love and admiration of everyone who comes in contact with him.

There is a suggestion of suspense because one anticipates his ultimate fall from grace—due to the prison guards recognizing him. Consequently he is denounced before his congregation. The governor of the state, who is one of his most enthusiastic admirers, comes forward and pardons him. During the unfoldment of the main theme there is an undercurrent of romance which offers some conflict.

The Cast

Roger Chapman / Tom Sullivan	Milford W. Howard
Margey Chapman	Derelys Perdue
Dr. Earl Godfrey	Cecil Holland
Dr. Paul Burroughs	Wm. Kenton
Governor of Alabama	R. D. MacLean
Shepherd Woman	Mrs. Milo Adams
Mrs. Jack Armstead	Jasa Melville
Simon	George Reed

By Milford W. Howard. Scenario by Finis Fox. Directed by Finis Fox. Photographed by Sol Polito.

The Story—Escaped convict changes clothes with another man, the latter of whom is later killed. The convict takes up work as pastor in the Ozark mountains. His foster daughter is sought by two young doctors, one of whom offers her a good love while the other has her under his evil influence. She finally accepts the honorable one and her father's identity is disclosed.

Classification—Drama with a religious note.

Production Highlights—The good photography. The moral value of story. The adequate acting.

Exploitation Angles — Might interest clergy and have them give addresses in their churches about picture.

"Are You a Failure?"

Preferred-Al Lichtman—5700 Feet

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

PROOF of the fact that characterization and the human touch can make a mighty entertaining picture out of one of the more or less stock plots is furnished in "Are You a Failure?" in which Lloyd Hughes is called upon to enact the type of hero that Charlie Ray made famous.

There is nothing especially new about the story of the chicken-hearted youth, who rises to the heights of heroism, but in this instance it has been so well cast and directed that it becomes a really diverting tale.

The picture is filled with clever little twists here and there—little variations from the time-honored hokum—that puts it entertainment value above the average. Conflict (a large portion of it in the hero's own soul), is built up slowly and surely, culminating in the magnificent log jam, from which he emerges with full right to be called "a chip of the old block."

Madge Bellamy, as the girl who believes in the hero through his struggle to find himself, is more lovely than ever in an appealing role. She has been photographed to the best possible advantage, even in the all-revealing close-ups, and her characterization of the girl is a deft commingling of shyness and courage, tenderness and strength. Lloyd Hughes, as the hero, gets over well here. He has managed, in the opening sequences, to make the boy weak without his becoming an unsympathetic character, and he also registers well in the latter part.

Tom Santschi is his usual rugged, devil-may-care self, and Jane Keckley and Myrtle Vane contribute excellent work as the hero's two aunts.

The Cast

Phyllis Thorpe	Madge Bellamy
Oliver Wendell Blaine	Lloyd Hughes
Killdevil Brennon	Tom Santschi
Gregory Thorpe	Hardee Kirkland
Aunt Emily	Jane Keckley
Emmet Graves	Hallam Cooley
Aunt Charlotte	Myrtle Vane
Thaddeus Crane	Samuel Allen

Story by Larry Evans. Adapted by Eve Unsell. Directed by Tom Forman. Photographed by Harry Perry. Produced by Freferred Pictures. Released by Al Lichtman Corporation.

The Story—Treats of a youth who has suffered from petticoat tyranny at the hands of two aunts, and whose character, as a result, is hidden beneath an exterior of timidity. He is made to appear ridiculous by Killdevil Brennon, in a burling contest, only Phyllis Thorpe, whose father owns the paper mills, continuing to believe in him. He subscribes to a correspondence course on success, and through the impetus which this gives him he throws off restraining influences. Hs risks his life to blast a log jam which imperils the town, and, on the arrival of Lesson Four, wins the girl.

Classification—Comedy drama with excellent characterizations and a touch of melodrama at the close.

Production Highlights—Hughes' portrayal of the youth. Beautiful shots of Madge Bellamy. The burling contest. The huge log jam and its blasting. The little human touches throughout. The excellent production.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the "Are You A Failure?" angle. Get interviews with successful men of your town as to whether a man can definitely build for success by following certain rules, or conduct a contest along the same line. Run teaser ads similar to that shown in the picture. Use a man dressed as a down-and-outer as a street ballyhoo.

Drawing Power—Should be satisfactory anywhere and entertain any sort of audience.

"Vanity Fair"

Goldwyn—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

"VANITY FAIR" is a personal triumph for Hugh and Mabel Ballin, star and director respectively. It is a thoroughly high class picture, transplanting to the screen in admirable style one of the classics of English literature. It is a succession of massive sets, of glowing color, of charming costumes of another day, of excellent characterizations, of dynamic spectacle.

Here is a picture that should appeal to the high brows—to those who call continuously for "better pictures." The story itself is known to millions. Seventy-five years have passed since the book first was published. It is still a popular work. It is an entertaining story of old England and its charming romances. The leading character, Becky Sharp, is a fascinating little flirt, as pictured on the screen. Mabel Ballin as Becky is simply great. She makes the character live. It seems to step from the screen in its realism. This picture, by the way, is the making of Eleanor Boardman. She screens unusually well and is a striking beauty as well as a clever actress. Mr. Bosworth is an ideal Lord Steyne. Mr. Ford's George Osborne is a delight and George Walsh has never enacted a more romantic role than Captain Crawley.

Meticulous attention to detail is in evidence throughout the picture. The settings are correct to the Nth degree and the costumes picturesque. The gay Napoleonic period has been reproduced with dazzling splendor and the ball on the eve of the battle of Waterloo is one of the most brilliant sets of the year. The scenes on the battlefield and the Napoleon tableau are highlights of the picture.

One of the tense situations arises when Becky's husband gets out of the claws of the police and returns to his home to find Becky in the arms of Lord Steyne. Some real acting follows on the part of Walsh, Bosworth and Miss Ballin. It is a picture that should stand out in the list of good features of the present season. The book has been followed closely. "Vanity Fair" is worth while.

The Cast

Becky Sharp	Mabel Ballin
Marquis of Steyne	Hobart Bosworth
Rawdon Crawley	George Walsh
George Osborne	Harrison Ford
Capt. Dobbin	Earle Foxe
Amelia Sedley	Eleanor Boardman
Joseph Sedley	Willard Louis
Sir Pitt Crawley	Robert Mack

By William Makepeace Thackeray. Directed by Hugo Ballin. Scenario by Hugo Ballin. Photographed by J. R. Diamond.

The Story—Fresh from school Becky Sharp visits the home of her chum, Amelia Sedley, and immediately tries to captivate her brother, Joseph. Failing, she proceeds to the home of Sir Pitt Crawley as governess, where she engineers a secret marriage with Captain Crawley which, however, is not a financial success. Amelia, meanwhile has married a childhood sweetheart, George Osborne; Becky flirts with George, who on the eve of battle, asks Becky to meet him. But their flirtation is soon ended. George is killed on the battlefield. Becky flirts with the wealthy Lord Steyne. Rawdon discovers the state of affairs and leaves Becky. She returns to London to live a quiet life.

Classification — A remarkable adaptation of Thackeray's romantic novel. A costume play of quality.

Production Highlights — Mabel Ballin's interpretation of the role of Becky Sharp, the flirt. The fine support. The exquisite costuming. The massive sets. The ball in Brussels on the eve of battle. The battlefield scenes at Waterloo. The fine camera work and sparkling photography.

Exploitation Angles—The title. Tieups with book stores on Thackeray's works, featuring "Vanity Fair." Put on a special screening for the school authorities. Get a lot of photos from the picture in the window for your advertising. Boost it as especially good for women's clubs and literary organizations.

Drawing Power—Very fine for houses catering to a high class clientele

"If Winter Comes"

Fox—Fourteen Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A. S. M. HUTCHINSON'S inspiring novel—one of the greatest pieces of fiction of all time—has been approached with deep reverence by Harry Millarde, who was assigned to the difficult task of translating the work for the screen.

The director has made a very literal translation of the story—a story which must have taxed his ingenuity because of its episodic character. He has brought forth all the salient points—such as the romantic conflicts and the whimsical touches when Sabre is introduced to the quaint servants, High Jinks and Low Jinks, and when he rides his bicycle home and stakes off the farthest position to which the wheel will glide. The enlistment scene, naturally, is in the picture and the dramatic climax, when Sabre is bewildered as he attempts to defend himself before a coroner's jury of a crime of which he is innocent, justifies the picturization of the story.

Millarde executes this scene with a sure grasp upon the value of contrast. The background is blackened out and first Sabre, suffering untold tortures to his sensitive mind, and the crafty lawyer persecuting him and then back to Sabre again, indicate that the director knows how to balance his conflict.

As presented it is too long. Several of the early scenes could be profitably shortened and the same may be said of the captions which are mostly taken from the novel. This would eliminate the sketchy or episodic character of the picture. Millarde has kept faith throughout. Even his exteriors have been caught in the exact locality of the story and they lend a picturesque atmosphere. The spiritual quality—the dominant factor of the novel—is finely emphasized. Why not with Percy Marmont playing Sabre in a manner which might suggest that the author had the actor in mind. The simplicity of the figure, the whimsical humor which kept him in balance, the pathetic honesty of the man—these qualities are deftly suggested. All the characters with few exceptions are present—and all are competently acted.

It is a picture which transports anyone endowed with the least imagination. It indicates an earnest effort on the part of its sponsors to do a big story in a big way. They have not failed. If it often lacks coherence it is because the author's expression is incapable of being translated. Its reactions on the mind stamp it as a picture with a soul. Which of course makes it exceptionally worth while.

The Cast

Mark Sabre	Percy Marmont
Nona	Ann Forrest
Lord Tybar	Raymond Bloomer
Rev. Sebastian Fortune	Riley Hatch
Effie Bright	Gladys Leslie
Twyning	Sidney Herbert
Mabel Sabre	Margaret Fielding
Old Bright	George Pelzer
High Jinks	Dorothy Allen
Low Jinks	Eleanor Daniels
Young Perch	Russell Sedgewick
Mrs. Perch	Mrs. Eugene Woodward

By A. S. M. Hutchinson. Adapted by Paul Sloane. Directed by Harry Millarde.

The Story—Sabre, a simple believer in the goodness of the world, idealizes everything with which he comes in contact. His house topples to pieces and he is caught in the embrace of three distinct romances. He finds peace and happiness eventually with a woman who understands him.

Classification — Character study of man searching for expression among the commonplace events of life.

Production Highlights—The faithful adaptation. The spiritual quality. The fine direction. The correct atmosphere. The enlistment scene. The climax. The fine acting.

Exploitation Angles—Tie up with bookdealers on sale of author's works, and particularly, "If Winter Comes." Play up author and director and cast.

"Lost and Found"

Goldwyn—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

WE were getting awfully tired of the constant flow of South Sea island stuff. We didn't think there was anyone who had the nerve to make another picture of this type. And then we saw "Lost and Found." Here is a picture that puts all former South Sea productions to rout. It is the best film tale of this land of romance and the hula hula that we have ever had the pleasure of viewing. It will come as a decided treat for a jaded public. This feature was not made in Florida or the Catalina Islands, but right down in Tahiti itself. And the finished product is an artistic, entertaining and thrilling photoplay. From a photographic and scenic viewpoint, it is a thing of surpassing beauty.

R. A. Walsh's direction of the story by Carey Wilson makes the whole scene live. The plot holds the interest from title to fadeout. We meet with the unusual at every point—even giving the observer some shots at real hula hula dancing that will make Gilda Grey jealous.

The cast is one of uniform excellence. House Peters, Pauline Starke, Antonio Moreno, George Seigmann, Carl Harbaugh, and Rosemary Theby do admirable work.

There are so many thrilling scenes in the picture that it would be impossible to enumerate them in the space available. Perhaps the battle between real South Sea natives is the real novelty of the picture. There's another tense moment when Captain Blackbird, after long years of cruising, at last finds the man who ran away with his wife. There is a terrific fistic battle here. Blackbird takes the man aboard and is just about to throw him to the sharks, when he reveals that it was his own daughter whom he left behind on the island.

There is a charming romance running through the dramatic plot with Miss Starke and Mr. Moreno carrying it along to a happy ending. "Lost and Found" is all very fine and we predict for it a real welcome at the hands of the public—always eager for something different.

The Cast

Captain Blackbird	House Peters
Lorna	Pauline Starke
Lloyd Warren	Antonio Moreno
Baby Madge	Mary Jane Irving
Madge	Rosemary Theby
Faulke	George Seigmann
Skinner	William V. Mong
Waki	Carl Harbaugh
Kerito	David Wing

By Carey Wilson. Directed by R. A. Walsh. Scenario by Paul Bern. Photographed by Clyde De Vinna.

The Story — Faulke had tricked Madge to leave her husband, Captain Blackbird, and go with him to Pango in the South Seas. Madge and her daughter Lorna yearn for the coming of husband and father, their case seems hopeless. Lorna is in love with Warren, the American, but Faulke forces her to agree to marry Waki, a native leader. Then one day Blackbird, seeking a doll for his baby, steers his craft toward Pango, meets up with Faulke, whom he abducts. In an attempt to save his life aboard ship, Faulke reveals that Lorna, the captain's other daughter, is back on the island.

Classification—A different kind of South Sea story made in the exact locale of the author's tale.

Production Highlights—The excellent work of the cast. The artistic settings and exquisite photography. The battle between the natives. The hula hula dances. The fire scenes at the close photographed in natural colors. The preparation for the native weedding.

Exploitation Angles—Insert ads in the Lost and Found classified columns of your newspaper. Dress your ushers in South Sea attire—as near as practicable. There are many prologues that will suggest themselves—a Hula Hula dance in Hawaiian setting and with Hawaiian orchestral accompaniment would be fine.

"Daddy"

Sol Lesser-First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT doesn't make any difference what kind of a picture Jackie Coogan appears in—so long as he is over. The precocious youngster could star in a dramatization of the telephone book and make a hit. There are only a few who can get the crowds and little Jackie is one of them.

"Daddy" is mediocre in subject matter—it being nothing else than a vehicle. Naturally the interest centers on young John's performance—as it does when he appears in such a work as "Oliver Twist," only in the present release one is compelled to watch the star because of the plot shortcomings. He has his moments. Watching him toy with the spaghetti pail and endeavor to eat the slippery food is good for a hearty laugh. And his emotional opportunities arrive when death stalks in and robs him of his aged companion.

"Daddy" was surely written with the little star in mind. It may be catalogued as a heart interest story—so obvious and shop-worn as to carry little sustaining value. With a less talented personage than Jackie it would be dismissed instantly as a work of little consequence.

It tells the tale of a mother leaving her husband, a violinist, because she believes him unfaithful and taking her baby son to his grandparents on the farm. There is no real motive for her hasty departure since no conflict is precipitated. The husband is supposed to have been killed in an auto accident, but he bobs up years later a world-famous violinist. Meanwhile the grandparents have gone to the poorhouse, the mother has died, and the boy goes to the city to make money to restore the farm to his aged relatives. So he meets a street musician who happens to be his father's tutor. The scenes between the two are the best in the picture. Eventually the father discovers the child, provides for him and restores the farm to the old people.

The picture did not cost a great deal of money. But Jackie could play in a single setting—one bare of all detail and put a story over. Very few can do that. Cesare Gravina contributes a neat cameo as the old Italian tutor. His scenes with the little star make the feature worth seeing. Jackie needs a story which brings out all the imagination, all the childish impulses and whimsicalities, all the frolic and play of the eternal juvenile. We are anxiously awaiting the next one, "Toby Tyler." Being a circus story, it looks more suitable.

"Just Like a Woman"

Haskins-Hodkinson—4900 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

"JUST LIKE A WOMAN" may be compared to a moon-beam, so light, so penetrable are its contents. Just why the sponsors saw picture material in a story so innocuous and vapid is difficult to imagine. But there it is telling a tale of a boarding school girl who masquerades as a young old maid, prim and proper, in order to show her aunts that she is not lacking in deportment. The story is padded and is so entirely obvious that the finish may be anticipated from the first reel. In fact it is all much ado about nothing.

First we see a group of girls gamboling about on the green. The heroine gets a letter from her spinster aunts asking her to come and live with them—although they are afraid she has inherited the artful ways of her actress mother. Once she is installed in the house, it is her object to put over the "prim and proper" stuff so that the aunts rebel. And the romance is introduced by a wager and the story never gets anywhere.

Just what the title indicates is hard to determine unless it is an attempt to express coquetry. Certainly there is nothing in the action to hold the interest. The youth, a lawyer, meets the girl and catches her in the arms of another man. It is her brother who is introduced for no other reason than to precipitate this scene, although he makes two or three appearances begging money from the girl, notwithstanding the fact that he looks prosperous.

Such a story should have been condensed into three reels. It asks too much of the players as it stands. Even George Fawcett is unable to make anything of his role, while Ralph Graves is considerably awkward and amateurish in his portrayal of the love-sick swain. The spinster aunts who should have provided a note of humor are interpreted in a conventional manner. There is doubtless an audience for this picture if it is shown on double feature day. It is too weak and inconsequential to stand alone.

The Cast

Peggy Dean..... Marguerite De La Motte
Judge Landon..... George Fawcett
James Landon..... Ralph Graves
Abigail..... Jane Keckley

The Story—Boarding school girl receives letter from her spinster aunts asking her to live with them. They have cast aspersions on her actress mother. So she decides to teach them a lesson. She masquerades as a prim and proper girl studying to become a missionary. She falls in love and nearly breaks the young man's heart. But a reconciliation follows.

Classification—Romantic comedy.

Production Highlights—The good staging.

Exploitation Angles—The title might come in for some publicity through a teaser campaign. Also play up George Fawcett and Marguerite De La Motte.

Drawing Power—Best suited for neighborhood houses which cater to feminine clientele. Needs support from another feature.

"Scars of Jealousy"

Ince-First National—Six Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THOMAS INCE sponsors a first rate story of conflict and character development in "Scars of Jealousy," which aside from its hectic title is strong enough in its plot, action and interpretation to interest even the most jaded of fans. We will advise you, however, that you are not in for anything original other than exposing a clannish group of people who live up in "them thar hills"—people who are descendants of the nobles of France, but who escaped the wrath of royalty by fleeing to America, settling down in the hill country of Alabama and taking up the moonshining business.

The story introduces a prologue showing the nobles in conflict with the haughty rulers. It then gets off on another tack, by presenting their descendants. And so to the conflict between the hill people and the proud settlers in the valley.

"Scars of Jealousy" presents Frank Keenan in a role which he can do better than any of his contemporaries—that of a Southern colonel of the old school. His son lacks character and after a wild party the boy is disowned. The pater rides into the hills to adopt a Cajan—the name by which these descendants are known, although they are pictured as people of ill repute, shiftless and of no account.

The story is treated in a manner so that the interest is maintained, due to a well arranged continuity and emphasis being placed upon the feud and characterization. here are some healthy fights between the young Cajan and the colonel's son, but the lad from the hills goes back home when the neighbor's daughter scorns him. The climax presents the conventional conflict between the revenuers and the hill people. And it offers a thrill when a forest fire threatens to wipe out the entire community. The colonel's son is made over into a man when the Cajan compels him to accompany him home and the heroine dashes to the rescue of the hill youth when he is imprisoned on suspicion of killing a revenuer.

Lloyd Hughes cuts a picturesque figure as the young mountaineer. The atmosphere is good and the settings entirely appropriate. The story has vitality and Keenan's acting carries quality.

The Cast

By Anthony H. Rudd. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Produced by Thomas H. Ince. Released by First National.

The Story—Wealthy planter disowns his son for his weak character and adopts a youth from the hills—a youth with Cajan blood in him, which means that his ancestors were nobles in France. The revenue officers are after the youth's people and he is suspected of a murder crime. He runs away from his new home and compels the planter's son to accompany him. Succeeds in developing the character of the youthful planter, but is captured by revenuers and imprisoned. Girl effects his escape and they find love together after saving themselves from raging forest fire.

Classification—Romantic melodrama laid in South.

Production Highlights—Frank Keenan's fine character study. The fine atmosphere. The fights. The capture of the boy. The forest fire.

Exploitation Angles—Play up the Southern atmosphere. Tell something about the Cajans being descendants of the nobles of the days of Napoleon. Feature the cast.

Drawing Power—Will interest the average audience. Good for any downtown house.

"Brass"

Warner Brothers—Nine Reels

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

WITH a cast that reads like the Blue Book of Screendom, with a story that has been read and discussed by millions, with direction that is brilliant at all times, with a scenic investiture that is unusually artistic throughout, "Brass" comes to the shadow stage in a blaze of glory. It is a picture of which everyone connected with its making can be proud and some of the best craftsmen in the industry have labored long and well on it.

The acting is really remarkable. The picture serves to bring forth latent powers we've never suspected existed. Monte Blue, of course, is good, but Marie Prevost is a wonderful selection for the role of Marjorie Jones, the "flapper" who has some tough experiences in the marital game, and Irene Rich as "Mrs. G." contributes a character portraiture that is downright fine, a 100 per cent. piece of work. Harry Myers furnishes the fun and as usual does it well.

The rest of the cast is entirely adequate. Baby Bruce Puerin will make a lot of friends, in fact there is a lot of "baby stuff" in the picture that will please the women folks. The producers have gone to great trouble to assemble a personnel of correct types.

The feature is one possessing real entertainment, but we must confess that it would be greatly improved if the producers had ended it a reel or so quicker and written finis after getting Mrs. G., Philip and the baby together instead of leaving this ending to the imagination. This is the only flaw we could pick in the picture, but we're afraid that many others are going to find fault with the ending.

There is some Avery Hopwood bedroom stuff in the picture that will have to be toned down for certain communities. "Brass" is a great subject for the women. That means that the men will have to trot along—and, well, the brute of the species will find himself liking it immensely after he's seen a few reels.

The Cast

Philip Baldwin	Monte Blue
Marjorie Jones	Marie Prevost
Mrs. Grotenberg	Irene Rich
Wilbur Lansing	Harry Myers

By Charles G. Norris. Directed by Sidney A. Franklin. Adapted by Julien Josephson. Photographed by Norbert Brodin. Produced by Harry Rapf. Titles by Sada Cowan.

The Story—Deals with the romance of Philip Baldwin who after a wonderful period of courtship is married to Marjorie Jones, but soon finds that their tastes are widely different and their marital bark goes on the rocks. Marjorie marries a sporty gentleman, while Philip and his little son both fall in love with "Mrs. G.," a boarder. His first wife tells Mrs. G. her heart is breaking for her child. Mrs. G. goes away. The story ends with Philip and his child praying to God to bring back "Mama G."

Classification—An absorbing story of marriage and divorce told by a notable personnel.

Production Headlights—The excellent characterizations contributed by Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Irene Rich, Harry Meyers and every member of the cast. The attractive subtitles by Sada Cowan. The exquisite photography. The eye-pleasing exteriors.

Exploitation Angles—A book store tie-up suggests itself at once. You have a wonderful list of stars to exploit in type and electric lights. A wedding ring window tieup with your jeweler with two cards, one printed with appropriate wording such as "She changed this ring of pure gold for one of BRASS."

Drawing Power—Should be a box office winner. Cater to the women to build up your matinees.

"The Midnight Guest"

Universal—4795 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS story of a guttersnipe who is lifted from her sordid environment by a good samaritan, but who refuses his honorable love because she is infatuated with his cynical friend does not offer much in the shape of entertainment. There are several flaws in the plot as well as in the characterization, for in the end the spectator doesn't know which man she accepts—although it is indicated that she turns to the cynic who learned something of humanity while convalescing from his injury.

The protagonist is a girl crook who, upon entering a rich man's home, is caught. The cynic is his best friend. The young woman is adopted by the wealthy man whose love is sincere, while the cynic continues to scoff at her. One weakness in the characterization is that of showing the girl becoming a lady so quickly. Another weakness is the insufficient explanation of her redemption.

There is no spiritual tug to the story. The only transformation discernible is the ability of the guttersnipe to wear her gowns becomingly. But she has little to say. The cynic repulsed in his attempts to propose love without marriage leaves for the Congo. During his absence the girl has ingratiated herself into the affections of the rich man. When his friend returns and learns of the affair, he stages a wild party before departing on another African trip. But the girl comes to his house and when the cynic is shot by a crook he appreciates her fine qualities.

The motivation is weak throughout. And it isn't very well interpreted. Miss Darmond in the title role conducts a fashion parade, while Mahlon Hamilton as the cynic is exceedingly awkward while registering intoxication. Clyde Fillmore is more in character as the rich man. The picture is well staged. In fact the settings furnish the only highlights. There is no real redemption and very little conflict and it must be put down as just mediocre.

The Cast

"Mr. Billings Spends His Dime"

Paramount—Five Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE rotund Walter Hiers, whose unctuous humor has manifested itself in scores of pictures, has finally reached stellar heights. Seeing as how he is the only corpulent comedian on the screen there is no reason why he shouldn't established a popular following. There are occasions when stories are offered which feature roly-poly characters. But they have had to use them for slapstick comedies because obesity and slapstick (like Damon and Pythias) always go together.

But Hiers has an adventure comedy here which, while of no consequence in the general run of things, manages to amuse for an hour. The star has a facility in facial expression and succeeds in suggesting that fat people are surrounded by a halo of pathos. He is gifted in shading his role, noticeable in the manner in which he takes advantage of every situation. But the point we like about his work is his effort to appear wholesome—without relying upon exaggerated buffoonery.

The idea is based upon our old friend—the South American revolution formula. There are some variations to be sure, yet one knows for a certainty just how it will develop. Consequently the interest is held by the incident and the interpretation—as well as the colorful detail which the director has given the picture. Hiers plays a haberdashery clerk who spends his last ten cent piece in buying a cigar the band of which bears a likeness of a South American beauty. He crashes into the customary revolution and collects a deal of trouble before he wins the fair beauty's heart and hand. Hiers uses his eyebrows effectively and his smile—a generous one—is ever with him. He has able assistance from George Fawcett, Robert McKim and Jacqueline Logan.

Anyone seeing this picture should feel entertained. The comedy may be light and obvious, but it is clean and wholesome—and Hiers should feel highly elated over his first stellar production.

The Cast

John Percival Billings	Walter Hiers
Suzanna Juarez	Jacqueline Logan
Gen. Pablo Blanco	George Fawcett
Captain Gomez	Robert McKim
Priscilla Parker	Patricia Palmer
Estaban Juarez	Joseph Swickard
John D. Starbock	Guy Oliver
White	Edward Patrick
Diego	Clarence Burton
Manuel	George Field
Martin Green	Lucien Littlefield

By Dana Burnet. Scenario by Albert S. LeVino. Directed by Wesley H. Ruggles. Photographed by Charles Schoenbaum. Produced by Famous Players.

The Story—Treats of a young salesman who is down on his luck. He unexpectedly comes in possession of five thousand dollars and decides to take a vacation in South America. There he finds an engagement in a revolution filled with thrills and romance. He routs the revolutionists and wins the girl of his heart—a girl whose father is threatened and whose difficulties lead him to desert the bandits.

Classification—Romantic comedy-drama featuring breezy American in South American revolution.

Production Highlights—The good work of Walter Hiers in his first starring role. The good comedy moments. The fights and action during the revolution.

Exploitation Angles—Here is your opportunity to acquaint your public with Walter Hiers who blossoms forth as a new star. Make use of the title for exploitation.

Don't forget that he has just been married and that the fans are interested. There is an opportunity to tie this fact and the title up in apt newspaper advertising. Photographs of the bride are available. Use them.

Drawing Power—A very good audience picture. Should draw well in any community.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"A Jungle Romeo"

(Educational—Two Reels)

SNOOKY, a chimpanzee of human intelligence, is the star. A couple of novelties have reached the screen in which one person has portrayed all of the principal roles, severely taxing the artist's versatility and an ability to apply various make-ups. But speaking of novelties, when a chimpanzee can be so thoroughly trained as to play eleven different roles in a two-reel comedy, and play each part with a distinctly different treatment, he is entitled to the description of "the humanzee." Such is Snooky, star of "A Jungle Romeo," whose clever performance in varied characterizations makes the two-reeler one of the most amusing, novel and altogether satisfactory that has ever reached the screen.

Snooky, of course, cannot be credited with the laugh provoking sub-titles, nor can he be given credit without first remembering that possibly the director's patience was tried to the utmost, but that this monarch of the monkey family could be directed to deliver such characterizations at all, borders upon being marvellous.

The first sub-title states that Snooky says both men and women sprang from monkeys, but that women sprang farther. Notwithstanding, Snooky is plainly interested in the daughter of a poor monk, experiencing some difficulty in meeting expenses. Therefore, father monk wishes his daughter to marry the villainous landlord and avoid dispossession from the jungalow.

Snooky, the hero, is not to be deprived of his far one and at the jungle mission takes unto himself a wife, thwarts plans to disturb his peaceful matrimonial existence and eventually saves baby monkey from burning to death, when the bad monk makes his final attempt to win by strategy.

Surely there is no one who would not be amused, entertained and interested in this unusual offering, a sure-fire laugh getter, besides. —LILLIAN GALE.

"Shoot Straight"

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

GETTING out into the open to make a one-reel comedy, so often stupid with break-away vases, pies in the face and fake interiors, this travesty on the amateur hunter is both amusing and novel.

Paul Parrott embarks upon a hunting expedition with a gun and a book of rules, resolving to hunt according to Hoyle. There are some scenes showing how he follows the suggestions given on baiting squirrels. While intent upon following these, one well trained squirrel uses the barrel of Parrott's gun as a trapese.

Field rabbits the amateur hunter finds even more elusive. He finally intrudes upon a hunting party and gets himself in wrong generally by shooting at their decoys. The book of rules does not mention what steps to take in the event a hunter accidentally finds a pretty girl in the marsh, and since there are no instructions to the contrary, he finds it more interesting to try and make a "hit" with the girl (Jobyna Ralston) than to bring down the hunting trophies.

Before the reel is finished Parrott encounters a bear and the usual chase brings the unusually good comedy to an end.—LILLIAN GALE.

A scene from "The Cobbler," the "Our Gang" Pathe two reel comedy, with a cast of all star juvenile players.

"Pop Tuttle's Polecat Plot"

(Plum Center Comedy-F. B. O.—Two Reels)

HAVING seen a number of these truly rural burlesques we must say right here and now that this latest Plum Center comedy tops them all—the reason being that it points some real hokum which is not unduly exaggerated to bring a laugh or three.

The piece offers severe competition between old Pop and a rival who would steal his bus-trade. Pop's buss is an antiquated, broken-down contraption—which ought to be declared unsafe by the "willage" authorities. The competitor drives a deep-sea hack. And from this rivalry there is developed some highly amusing incident.

Pop and his rival, Nosey Nichols, race to meet "yesterday's train," and the passengers climb into Nosey's hack with the single exception of a fair flapper. But when the drummers notice the girl they transfer to Pop's bus. Then it's up to the drivers to get real mean. Nosey loosens the nut on one of the wheels of Tuttle's carryall and old Pop returns the compliments by bribing a pickaninny to throw a polecat—some call it a skunk—into Nichols' cab. And so it is constant shifting by the passengers from one bus to another. But Tillie, the Great Dane, with the aid of a wheelbarrow brings Pop's bus into the hotel on time. So he gets the concession.

It is a smart comedy filled with amusing gags. Look it over, then put it on your program.—LAURENCE REID.

"For Safe Keeping"

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

AS a faint-hearted clerk Paul Parrott assumes the role of an employee burdened with $50,000.00 which he was too late to deposit in the bank. He lets his imagination run away with him, suffers scare and thereby gets himself into real trouble, ending up in the county jail, where he hopes to find safety. Instead, he discovers himself in a cell with a gang of genuine criminals, who are making an escape, forcing him to come along. Then the experiences of a wild night keep the action going until the accidental hero, with the aid of a girl and a monkey finds himself safely in possession of the money entrusted to him, and breathes a sigh of relief when he knows the ruffians are on the way back to jail.

There are a good many laughs in this and a number of exciting incidents. — LILLIAN GALE.

"The Phantom Fortune"

(Universal Chapter Play—12 Episodes)

THE romance of American business has been dramatized in "The Phantom Fortune." The action centers about business and the philosophy of the "go getter," much as did some of the Douglas Fairbanks pictures made in association with Emerson and Loos.

William Desmond appears as an irresponsible young artist whose father dies, leaving him a business on the verge of bankruptcy. Inspired by the "It can be done" philosophy of his attractive secretary, he sets about to overcome all obstacles and put the business on its feet.

In the first episode, the creditors and employees demand money. When it seems impossible to get it, the hero sends a letter of acceptance to the trust, which wants to buy him out. This means defeat, however, and his secretary, played by Esther Ralston, persuades him that he should not sell, so he sets out in a blinding storm to overtake the letter. His car is wrecked and he falls among highly charged electric wires.

In the second installment, he escapes from this situation and obtains the letter just as it is to be delivered. He sells his house to raise the necessary money, but on the way to the works to pay the men, who threaten to quit at four, he is robbed, and arrives without the money.

In the third episode, he recovers the money and restores harmony in the factory. Success, however, depends upon a large order which a friend of his will give him, and on two carloads of rubber necessary to make up the order of tires. His enemies prevent his seeing his friend, and send the rubber cars toward an oncoming train.

There is action aplenty, here, and a novelty of theme that is refreshing among serials. Good stuff, this, and it should carry an especially strong appeal to young men.—L. C. MOEN.

"Partners Three"

(Range Rider—Pathe—Two Reels)

LEO MALONEY, who in this picture is cast as Harmony Larkin, plays his role of the great-hearted, altogether square western hero, the direct opposite of his cousin "Surley" Larkin, characterized by Bud Osborne. The two young men are partners in the "Circle A Ranch," but Surley is inclined to get more than his half and when he thinks the ground is going to be worth a lot of money, endeavors to force Harmony into selling his share. Nearby, however, is a neighbor with a lovely daughter who appeals to Harmony's fancy, and whose admiration is reciprocated. Her father, becoming discouraged, talks to Harmony about selling out, and without knowing the plan Surley has to become owner of the territory and marry the girl, Harmony suggests that the two men talk business. It is then disclosed that plans for a new railroad are under way, which would increase the worth of the property many fold. Harmony arrives just in time to save his sweetheart's father from being tricked out of his returns, and when he interferes, there follows a good fight, Harmony out-manning Surley and his two confederates. Then the partnership for life is formed embracing Harmony, the girl and her father, who remain to enjoy the prosperity and peace to reign again at Circle A ranch under the new management. Good scenic value; splendid action and fights.—LILLIAN GALE.

Greater Boston has been treated of late to several fires, and near fires, in motion picture theatres. The most serious was in Gordon's Central Square, Cambridge, and caused about $10,000 damage to the building, a two-story brick affair. It started in a bowling alley in the basement about 10:30 o'clock in the evening, but actual fire damage was confined there, only smoke getting into the auditorium. Two men were injured, one by an engine and the other by a bursting hydrant. Practically the entire audience had filed out quietly through the emergency exits, when someone smelled smoke and yelled fire. Two women immediately fainted, but recovered after being carried out.

Another fire burned the top off a building across a narrow street from the Lancaster theatre, near the North Station, Boston, while the show was going on. No one in the house knew of it, though, and though the flames threatened the theatre building at times it was unharmed. Sergeant Livingstone of the police guarded the lobby, but at no time was there danger of panic.

A small fire was discovered the other day on the roof of the Day Street theatre, Somerville, but after Manager J. Frank Mixer had spoken from the stage and asked the 350 present to leave quietly there was no trouble. The blaze started from sparks out of a chimney on an adjoining apartment block. A similar fire was caused on February 5 from the same cause.

In some unknown and undiscoverable manner the police of Boston got a tip that a gang of desperate bandits had left New York for the Hub with the avowed intention of making a series of raids on the city's theatre safe and box office cash drawers. As a result there was a special guard of policemen on duty at every theatre.

More than 1,700 employees of the city of Boston were the sole invitees to the world premiere of the city's own motion pictures, given for their benefit Sunday afternoon, March 4, at the Globe theatre. The films were on accident prevention, health and coal relief, and will be shown in local neighborhood programs. Two of the titles were "Why Are We Careless?" and "How Boston Relieved the Coal Situation." Corporation Counsel E. Mark Sullivan addressed the meeting in the absence from the city of Mayor Curley.

Evidence that an attempt had been made to set fire to the theatre lay in the discovery of a pile of shavings, papers and boards on the landing of the stairway of the theatre balcony. The pile of trash had been covered with crude oil and a bottle partly filled with oil was found nearby.

During the storm his hands were frozen and it was only expert medical aid upon his return that saved him from the necessity of having his hands amputated. However, the aldermen were overwhelmingly against the measure.

"Robin Hood," the Douglas Fairbanks superfilm, has been booked by the Liberty theatre for a run beginning March 17, according to the announcement of Ray Grombacher, manager. "Robin Hood" is now playing to big houses in Seattle, reports state.

Two Peter B. Kyne pictures competed against each other at the Liberty and Clemmer theatres here the week beginning March 3.

At the Liberty theatre Mirma Cooper was being starred in "Kindred of the Dust," while Marjorie Daw and Ralph Graves held forth in "The Pride of Palomar" at the Clemmer theatre.

W. C. Pugh, of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., arrived here March 1 to make Spokane his headquarters for a territory including Spokane and Butte, Mont. Mr. Pugh will handle Encore Pictures and Harold Lloyd releases.

Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, "Safety Last," was screened for local critics by Mr. Pugh and C. M. Van Horn, of the Pathe Exchange, and received an ovation that promises much publicity for the picture when it is booked locally.

First Four of Series of Comparables Shown

The officials of Choice Productions, Inc., gave an invitation showing of the first four of their series of twelve "Comparables' 'recently at the Roosevelt theatre in Los Angeles and the consensus of opinion of ministers, teachers, parents, children and distributors' representatives numbering one hundred who were present was that three were excellent and the fourth was good.

The four 2-reel pictures shown are titled "Now and Then," Matrimonial Rush," "The Baby Bond" and "Honor's Reward." Each of the four subjects carries a story that compares conditions of today with those of the after-war conditions of 1865.

Each of the 100 odd guests at the showing was given a blank and pencil on which to make comment and all were asked to seriously criticise the pictures. The comments were later collected and summarized.

Shipment of the first prints of "Comparables" will be made to state right exchanges within the near future. The work of completing the series is now being carried on by Choice Productions staff.

Mal St. Clair Directorial Leader

Is Applying Feature Principles to Filming of "Fighting Blood" Series

BY APPLYING the principles of feature production to short subject work, Mal St. Clair, who is directing "Fighting Blood" for the Film Booking Offices of America, has established a standard of merit rarely reached in the field of short subject production, according to executives of F. B. O.

Although only twenty-five years of age, Mr. St. Clair has several years of solid experience, beginning as a comic on the Keystone lot, behind him. He has, in the opinion of F. B. O., originated an entirely new idea in the filming of two-reel subjects. He has made "Fighting Blood" not a series of two-reel comedies, but, by exercising the utmost discrimination in the choice of backgrounds, in lighting, costuming and development of the plot, St. Clair has virtually lifted them into the feature class.

Film Booking Office is selling "Fighting Blood" as two-reel features, stressing the fact that these picturizations of the Witwer-Collier's Weekly stories are not mere comedies, but continued stories, asparkle with buoyant and breezy spirit of youth.

"It has long been my intention," commented St. Clair, "to prove to many doubters that two-reel subjects could be lifted at one stroke out of the ordinary slapstick comedy class into the feature class. This, of course, could only be done by putting into effect the highest principles of feature production. In 'Fighting Blood' I have made it a point to duplicate to the last detail the atmosphere of the college campus and high school class room. I saw to it that all my characters, important or otherwise, dressed their parts with the utmost fidelity. I saw to it, too, that lighting was of a higher grade than usual in short subject productions and that my backgrounds always gave forth a note of beauty and distinction."

St. Clair became famous as a Los Angeles newspaper cartoonist before he turned his footsteps toward the screen industry. He rapidly rose from "extra" and property boy to assistant director and then to director. He was directing Carter DeHaven in the latter's comedy series for release through F. B. O. when P. A. Powers selected him for the important task of producing "Fighting Blood." It took no more than a few episodes to vindicate Mr. Powers' judgment as to St. Clair's talent.

Einstein Film Given B'way Run

Has Three-Week Pre-Release Showing at Rivoli and Rialto, New York

THE acclaim with which the screen version of a highly complex scientific subject such as the Einstein Theory of Relativity, was received by the patrons of the Rivola and Rialto theatres during its three weeks pre-release presentation at these theatres, demonstrates in a conclusive manner the giant strides made in the motion picture industry. The success of the Einstein film will be a matter of great encouragement to every one who is interested in the welfare and advancement of the silent art, and that a production of this character will doubtless be welcomed by the biggest exhibitors, may be deduced from Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld's action in not only giving the Einstein relativity subject such a place of honor on the program of the two theatres under his direction, but from the fact that it was necessary to give special morning performances which were remarkably well attended, long lines of patrons actually eager to learn more about this fascinating subject, standing in line during the coldest days of the winter waiting for the theatre to open.

A huge task confronted the sponsors of the Einstein Theory, as it was necessary to cull and select from the 18,000 feet of negative produced by the European scientists the proper footage as shown in the revised American version. Prof. Einstein had stated that only twelve men in the world actually understood his theory, six of whom were actively engaged in the production of the film. The herculean task of making this revolutionary scientific hypothesis so simple and clear that it could be comprehended by the average person, was successfully accomplished by Prof. Garrett P. Serviss, the famous American scientist, who attended to the purely scientific aspect of the subject, and by Max Fleischer, the well-known creator of animated drawings, who made the necessary diagrams and drawings to illustrate many of the important angles of the subject.

So well did they accomplish their task that they have made Einstein's abstruse theory not only acceptable to the lay mind, but an absorbing one of the most interesting subjects ever screened.

Edwin Miles Fadman, President of the Premier Productions, introduced the Einstein screen version Theory of Relativity to America, and it has been decided to market the production on a State Rights basis. The metropolitan district of New York has been taken over by Harold Rodner, who distributes the popular Inkwell and Felix the Cat cartoons, Music Films and similar short subjects.

"Sunny Gym" Stars Brownie, Dog Star

In "Sunny Gym" the Brownie picture now ready for release, Raymaker who directed it has given the clever animal every chance to show his almost human intelligence. He is supported by Joe Bonner and Billy Engle.

"Tiny" Sanford, the Century heavyweight, has the role of the trainer in a gymnasium. Brownie is his assistant and has the job of seeing that the patrons go through their necessary exercises. When they become lazy he speeds them up by nipping them in the ankle, not to speak of other stunts. The dog himself punches a bag with all the skill of an old timer and indulges in gymnastic tricks aside from his police duty in guarding Joe Bonner and Billy Engle as the two unwilling recruits to the course of gymnastic training.

The Century Beauties figure as a feminine annex to the training school in one piece athletic suits.

Bird-Men Rescued By Naval Aviators

Exclusive pictures of the daring rescue by naval fliers of a brother aviator adrift at sea in a wrecked sea-plane are among the striking features of International News No. 20, now being released through Universal exchanges. The rescue picture was made off Pensacola, Fla., where the navy's great aviation base is located.

An alert look-out in the great observation tower at the base spotted the wreck. It just happened that an International News cameraman was preparing to take the air in a flying boat. The rescue work, which was filmed in a series of dramatic shots, shows a speedy sea-sled, making 50 miles an hour along the crest of the waves, on its way to the wrecked aviators. The sea-sled is supplemented by sea-planes or flying boats, which hover overhead, as the half-drowned aviators are taken from the wreckage.

It is one of the most thrilling shots ever obtained by a news cameraman, and shows in heart stirring shots the bravery and perils of our naval aviators.

Foreign Rights on Joe Rock Comedies Sold

Jo-Rok Productions, distributors of the series of two-reel comedies starring Joe Rock and Billie Rhodes, announce the conclusion of a deal with the Apollo Trading Corp. of New York City whereby that organization has taken over all foreign rights to the comedian's output for the year. The product includes twelve comedies, guaranteed to be completed by the end of the current season. The finished comedies that have already been turned over for distribution are: "The Pill," "Little Red Robin Hood," "Aladdin," "Ali Baba," and "The Cold Homestead."

South Sold on New Hallroom Boys Comedies

THE entire South was sold this week on the new 1923 Hallroom Boys Comedies, when Progress Pictures, Inc., of Charlotte, N. C., completed negotiations with C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation for their territorial release.

The sale was made to Arthur C. Bromberg of that organization, who was in New York, and who had seen "High Flyers" at the Rialto theatre.

Following this he immediately completed arrangements to handle the series in his territory, which includes North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, and Missisippi.

He has made arrangements to release the series immediately.

Educational Pays Tribute to Branch Manager

In recognition of his snappy work in securing contracts on the Educational Pictures Special, "The Message of Emile Coue," E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., presented M. Harlan Starr, manager of the Detroit branch of the Educational Film Exchanges, with a magnificent watch.

Starr was the first under the wire with a Coue contract. Twenty-four minutes after he received the telegram from the home office announcing that M. Coue would appear in a picture for Educational Starr had signed the first runs in Detroit, and a wire announcing this fact was on the way back to the home office.

Starr also established an enviable record in closing other bookings in Detroit and vicinity. With "The Message of Emile Coue," as the basis, he combined a complete program of Educational Short Subjects into one unit, and is securing dates on this unit as a road show, playing percentage bookings.

As he seems to have such a distinct idea of the value of time in these matters, the watch is certainly an appropriate gift.

Fox News Shows Battle Fleet of Panama

Scenes of the United States battleship fleet passing through the Panama Canal, are contained in Fox News released in March. The photographing of these scenes was accomplished only after special permission had been granted the Fox organization by the Navy Department in Washington.

Among the scenes in the special supplement are: the flagship Maryland entering Gatun Locks, leading the majestic armada to the Pacific; electric donkeys of twin lock system hauling 40,000-ton ship through $4,000,000 ditch; fleet at Culebra—the Wyoming, the Delaware, the Utah, the North Dakota and the Nevada.

New Universal Series Under Way

"The Eagle's Talons," Co-starring Fred Thomson and Ann Little, Begun

A new high-powered serial has just been put into production at Universal City, in which three popular players have leading roles, and which is being directed by Duke Worne, maker of many screen thrillers.

It is to be called "The Eagle's Talons," and is a stirring drama of Wall Street manipulation of the world's wheat supply, which leads the characters into adventures and danger in various corners of the globe. One of the features of the chapter-picture will be a series of death-defying aerial raids and stunts.

Fred Thomson, known as the world's champion athlete, and Ann Little, are co-starred in the serial. The chief supporting player is Al Wilson, who holds all records for stunt aero flying. He will introduce into the picture some of the greatest thrills ever conceived for pictures, the serial department at Universal City promises.

The cast of "The Eagle's Talons" also includes Edward Cecil, Herbert Fortier, Edith Blossom, Joseph Girard, Roy Tompkins, Al J. Smith, George Magrill, and Joseph Bonomo, the strong man.

"The Eagle's Talons" was written by Theodore Wharton, "the father of the serial." He has prepared some of the greatest chapter play successes which the screen has known, among them the very first produced. It will be in fifteen episodes of two reels each. The production unit is now well into story, and will have the early chapters ready for shipment east within a few weeks. The serial is scheduled for release beginning April 30th.

Two Reelers Head Pathe Program

"Our Gang" and Leo Maloney Subjects Lead Releases for March 18

PATHE'S program of nine releases for March 18 includes another two-reel comedy in the "Our Gang" series from the Hal Roach studios. It is called "A Pleasant Journey," and is described as placing Sunshine Sammy, Jackie Condon, Jackie Davis, Mickey Daniels, "Little Farina" and the famous bulldog on a new plane of joyous juvenile deviltry. Practically the entire action takes place aboard a train between Los Angeles and San Francisco, with the full strength of the "Gang" substituting itself for a party of waifs and turning the trip into a nightmare for everybody else aboard the train.

"Partners Three" is the title of the Western two-reeler in "The Range Rider" series. The girl in the story becomes the third partner, and also a happy bride.

In "Plunder," Pearl White's high-water mark Pathe serial, the eighth episode, "Game Clear Through," the villain of the picture maneuvers a losing situation for himself in a way to get the heroine into a quicksand peril and an almost incredible escape.

The one-reel Hal Roach comedy release features Paul Parrott in a comic absurdity called "For Safe Keeping." The timid hero, being too late for the bank, has $50,000 on his hands for the night. He and the money escape through sheer accident, after startling safe-breaking adventures.

The Aesop's Film Fable released in this list is called "The Sheik," with the moral: "It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all."

Pathe News Nos. 24 and 25 and Topics of the Day No. 11 are released together with Pathe Review No. 11.

White Busy with Mermaid Series

Lige Conley and Louise Fazenda Are Alternated in Educational Comedies

JACK WHITE, the young producer director of Educational-Mermaid Comedies, is working on a new group of the 1922-23 series of Mermaid Comedies for Educational, and is in his third year in supervising Mermaids.

That White is fulfilling his promise to make every comedy a special is testified by the last of the group which has arrived in New York. White is alternating Louise Fazenda and Lige Conley in his productions. Fazenda being featured in a series of burlesques, the first of which, "Pest of the Storm Country," is now enjoying representative bookings in first run houses throughout the United States and Canada.

"Cold Chills" will be Fazenda's next. White has wisely given the entire leading part to Fazenda in this comedy. It is said to be a burlesque on the mystery plays of the present day.

Fazenda is now engaged in the production of her third comedy under the Mermaid banner.

Conley has just completed what is perhaps his magnum opus — "Kick Out," a comedy built around a motion picture studio. For this picture Jack White rented an entire lion farm. More than fifteen jungle kings were used in this picture, and some original and thrilling "lion stuff" was secured.

Pre-Historic Pyramids Shown in Fox News

Fox News, in its publication, Vol. 4, No. 43, presents many striking scenes of the recent excavations in the newly discovered pyramid regions near San Juan, Mexico.

Research which has been in course for many months has not until recently yielded discoveries which have been thrown open to the public. Fox News cameramen who have been assigned to accompany the exploration party, have been in a position to obtain the earliest films of all the ancient secrets which now are revealed.

The opulence and grandeur of the work of the prehistoric people whose secrets are being unraveled by the modern searchers is seen exclusively in the Fox reel.

"Sentinels of the Sea" for March Release

In "Sentinels of the Sea," a Fox Educational entertainment to be released in March, there is a series of scenes never before filmed, showing lighthouses and lightships that guard vessels from wave swept, rocky shores.

A valiant old lighthouse, the Boston Light, which has withstood the tossing of storms for two hundred and six years, standing upon the rugged coast, flashing a warning to sailormen, is one of the interesting pictures shown.

Al St. John's Next a Travesty

"St. John and the Flagon," is the title of a moving picture travesty on "St. George and the Dragon" that Al St. John, the William Fox comedian, has received from a would-be humorist with an inclination to play on words. Al says he doesn't hanker after the costume drama, although he isn't afraid of the proposed theme being too dry.

Carleton King Beginning on Sixth of Series

Carlton King has wired Producers Security who are releasing his series of twelve two-reel rural comedy dramas that he has just completed the fifth of the series. These two reelers are complete in themselves and will be issued one a month. They are on the order of "The Old Homestead."

Denny to Remain Pugilist Hero

Star of "The Leather Pushers" Will Continue as Lead in Third Series

DEFINITE word has been received from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Fictures Corporation, that Reginald Denny positively will be the star in the third set of six two-reelers of "The Leather Pushers" series, and that he will be supported by Hayden Stevenson and directed by Harry Pollard. This is the trio identified with the first set of "The Leather Pushers" and followed with the second series.

Following the announcement of the forthcoming production of the third set of "Leather Pushers" last week, many exhibitors, knowing that Denny now is engaged with Virginia Vallie in "Up the Ladder," a Universal-Jewel picture, questioned whether he would be able to continue in the role of Kid Roberts, which he has made famous in "The Leather Pushers."

Both Denny and Harry Pollard unite in promising that the third "Leather Pushers" series will far outdistance the previous twelve pictures.

Denny has just completed work in the title role of "The Abysmal Brute." In it Denny has much the same kind of a he-man, two-fisted role which he has made popular among all classes of photoplay fans by his work in "The Leather Pushers."

The third series of "Leather Pushers" was arranged for, asserts Universal, because of the widespread demand on the part of the public and exhibitors for more pictures like the first two series.

Christie's Satire Well Received

"Hazel from Hollywood" Earns Praise from Critics in Key Cities

ONE of the new series of Christie Comedies' special attractions released through Educational, "Hazel From Hollywood," has received unusually high praise from the daily papers reviewing the bills of many first-run theatres.

The Milwaukee Journal, reviewing the Strand theatre bill, commented that Dorothy Devore in this amusing travesty on the movies was worthy of a co-featured position.

Mae Tinee, in the Chicago Tribune, wrote a special comedy review after seeing "Hazel" at McVickers theatre, saying, "Miss Devore is as merry and irresponsible as a kitten. She is supported by a cast who know how and prove it. It should wring a laugh from you."

The Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette says: "So much has been said and done about Hollywood, so many pictures have been introduced of the lives and loves of the famous screen idols who live and work there, that without a travesty on the affairs, the score would not be complete. And leave it to the Christie Comedians to put the final touches to the hilarious side of the situation in 'Hazel From Hollywood,' the newest and greatest Christie comedy to date, which graces this sparkling Jefferson show."

"Hazel From Hollywood" is being given unusual notice in motion picture theatre advertising because of its timely appeal and general public interest in all things pertaining to Hollywood, and the famous motion picture folks.

Bookings Pile Up in F. B. O. Drive as Managers Swell Quotas.

WITH the closing date several weeks away, the First Anniversary Drive of the Film Booking Offices of America is declared to be assuming proportions in excess to even the hopes of the F. B. O. officials. This drive, which began late in February under the personal direction of P. A. Powers, managing director of F. B. O., is the "first birthday party" of F. B. Q., which in February, 1922, came under the control of the present management and which in July, 1922, abandoned the name of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation and became Film Booking Offices of America.

F. B. O. branch managers are reported to be swelling their quotas with the aid of "Fighting Blood," the series of two reel Witwer-Collier's stories, the first three of which have already been released. In every territory "Fighting Blood" is winning first run bookings and indications are that if the present rate of bookings is maintained, that they will be the most widely distributed short subjects in the recent history of the industry.

Among the other F. B. O. attractions offered during the current drive which are attracting the attention of exhibitors are "Can A Woman Love Twice," an Ethel Clayton production, and "Bishop of the Ozarks," a Finis Fox production with an all-star cast. Manager Fred Shafer of the Lafayette theatre, Buffalo, was one of the first to book the former, a powerful drama of post-war days.

The First Anniversary Drive will continue until the end of March, when the winning exchanges who will be awarded the cash prizes are to be announced. A silver loving cup will go to the exchange showing the best results during the drive.

Novel Stunts Presented in "The Artist"

CLYDE COOK'S latest two-reel comedy, "The Artist,' contains a novel "Shell" game, according to Fox Film Corporation. It is played with snail shells, the snails themselves taking the parts of the agile and elusive peas. The comedian and his director have worked out a lot of clever and amusing business from the incident.

Production-Distribution Activities

Raymond McKee Is Radio Orator

Prior to his departure for Florida Raymond McKee, who plays the important role of Thomas Elliot Dexter in Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships" released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, spoke last week to a few hundred thousand people via the radio, speaking from station WHN at Ridgewood, L. I.

In his talk Mr. McKee went at length to explain all of the perils and hardships and some of the many amusing incidents that occurred during his two months' cruise on the whaler "Charles W. Morgan" at which time Mr. McKee harpooned a 90 ton bull whale.

Radio fans for a radius of thousands of miles "turned in" on the radio and heard Mr. McKee's interesting narrative. Two days later, according to Mr. McKee, hundreds of replies were received from Radio fans complimenting him on his little talk.

Vapor Used as Novelty Auxiliary in Film

Vapor has been used for aeroplane sky writing and for political argument around election times, but in the Metro-SL motion picture version of the Willard Mack play, "Your Friend and Mine," a screen of vapor makes an effective auxiliary to a striking "Dance of the Winds" in a big entertainment scene in an arist's studio.

This number was arranged by Frederick Ko'vert dance innovater. A wall of vapor separated the dancers from the spectators. Then, slowly, as if it were drawn up by invisible cords, the curtain of steam rose evenly toward the ceiling and evaporated, revealing the dancers. As they went through their spirited movements, it seemed truly like a dance of the winds dispelling the clouds.

"Safety Last" Promotes Get-Together Spirit

As a result of exhibitor previews of Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" achievement, Pathe reports the blazing of a new trail uniting distributors and exhibitors in a mutually profitable and frank get-together spirit which has no precedent in the history of the picture industry.

In a word, it is declared that the new Lloyd feature comedy flashes upon all who see it, qualities which make the flat rental contract illogical, out of date and ill-adapted to foster the best interests of either party. This—according to the statement of E. A. Eschmann, Pathe General Sales Manager—is not only frankly admitted but urged by the biggest theatre and circuit owners on their first view of "Safety Last."

Lois Wilson in Popular Contest

Is Selected to Represent Industry in the New York Globe Competition

LOIS WILSON, who plays the leading role in James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," has been nominated as the candidate of the motion picture industry for New York's Good Will Delegation to France. This delegation will be sent to France by Miss Anne Morgan's American Committee for Devastated France.

The nominations closed Thursday and Miss Wilson's nomination, which was made by lot under the auspices of the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau, was announced, along with those of representatives of almost every other important industry and business in the city, in Thursday's New York Globe, which is officially sponsoring the enterprise of Miss Morgan's committee.

The plan of membership in the delegation follows in general that under which the Rotary and Kiwanis Clubs operate. One nomination is made from each leading industry and business and several of the professions. The final selection is contingent upon the nominee's securing 100,000 ten cent contributions to the fund of the American Committee for Devastated France, and the first seventy-five candidates who succeed in filling their quotas of contributions will comprise the Good Will delegation.

National Drive on "Backbone"

Distinctive Plans Extensive Poster Campaign in Leading Cities

TO inaugurate the first of its twelve big 1923 features the Distinctive Pictures Corporaton on March 1 began a national advertising campaign of "Backbone," the photoplay which marks the screen debut of Alfred Lunt.

The campaign will comprise twenty-eight sheet stands in more than a score of the leading cities of the United States and Canada—some regular showings, some special illuminated signs and some more elaborate painted spaces. Posting of these began in New York City on March 1 and March 15 will see the commencement of posting in other first key cities.

These twenty-eight sheet stands comprise a twenty-four sheet lithograph, featuring the standardized nameplate for "Backbone," which will be used in all advertising matter from a one column teaser up, and a four sheet date. The standardized name is a wide block letter with colored shading against a solid black paneled background, the lines of which are broken half way by full semi-circles extending outward. The entire panel rises from left to right at an angle of fifteen degrees.

After the posting of the boards in all of the cities newspaper advertising will be inaugurated, tying up with the outdoor stands. Further matter will be prepared as a follow-up on this first phase of the national campaign.

"Backbone" is hailed in all of this advertising as the perfect audience picture." In addition to Alfred Lunt it has Edith Roberts and a distinctive cast, including William B. Mack, Frank Evans, George McQuarrie, Marion Abbott, James Doyle, L. E. La Croix and J. W. Johnson.

"Penrod" Story for First Nat'l

Wm. Beaudine to Direct "Penrod and Sam"; Benny Alexander in Title Role

ENCOURAGED by the reception accorded "Penrod," which was made by Marshall Neilan, Associated First National has decided to produce another American-boy story, "Penrod and Sam" from the pen of Booth Tarkington.

This announcement follows an agreement with Warner Brothers for the "loan" of the services of William Beaudine to direct the picture. The production will be presented by J. K. McDonald who has gained considerable fame as the guiding hand of "kid" productions.

The production of "Penrod and Sam" is part of the policy that has brought Edwin Carewe, Arthur Levee and Maurice Tourneur, Sam Rork and James Young, Richard Walton Tully under the First National banner as independent producers.

McDonald and Beaudine have selected Benny Alexander, protege of D. W. Griffith, for the role of Penrod.

The continuity for "Penrod and Sam" is being prepared by Hope Loring and Louis Leighton in collaboration with Director Beaudine.

First National, it is said, plans to make this picture an outstanding feature of the productions that will come to the screen in the autumn. The picture will be made in Hollywood.

Mary Pickford to Aid on Poor Farm

Convalescent patients in hospitals and the aged women at the Los Angeles County Poor Farm will no longer want for reading matter when Mary Pickford's library plan gets under way. All magazines and newspapers subscribed to by the Pickford-Fairbanks studios are now being read with the utmost despatch and then collected by Miss Pickford and straight away distributed to hospitals and the poor farm. Nearly every publication of any consequence goes to Miss Pickford's studio, and since only a few days are required to read them each month, as they arrive, they can be sent to hospitals while their contents are still current.

More "Teasers" Sent Out on "Temptation"

Two more novelty "teasers" were sent out this week by the C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation on their third Box Office Winner "Temptation."

In accordance with their policy of keeping exchanges "pepped" up they are taking the fullest advantage of the possibilities offered by the title "Temptation"—and this week's chief novelty took the form of a miniature roulette wheel sent out in a box to each territorial holder of the feature. On the top of the box was the inscription "This started the trouble in 'Temptation.'"

Warners Install Library at Coast Studios

In order to keep abreast of the times in the world of literature, and to adequately and efficiently carry on the production schedule of eighteen classics of the screen for the coming season, the Warner Brothers have installed a complete working library at the coast studios with Melvin Hudgins as librarian, according to Harry M. Warner.

Books of every description, especially those of particular interest to the directors and technical staff, will be added to the thousands of books already purchased by the Warner organization.

"Luck Club" Organized in New York School

AS JOHNNY HINES is a graduate of the public schools of New York, a number of pupils at P. S. 132 in the Washington Heights district of New York City have formed a "Luck Club" the name being taken from Hines latest melocomedy. The star has been elected honorary president, and it is proposed to form branches of the "Luck Club" in other public schools in New York, as well as other cities.

Carewe Starts Work on David Belasco Story

Within the shadow of Mark Twain's picturesque cabin, at Sonora, Calif., Edwin Carewe, First National director, has started filming the exterior scenes of the great California classic, "The Girl of the Golden West."

At the very foot of one of the greatest paying gold mines in the section, and on the same spot where stood the original village of Sonora, Carewe has built a replica of the town, with everything from the polka saloon to the school-ma'am's hut. Six wind machines are on hand and Carewe will make a terrific blizzard. Enough lighting equipment was brought from Hollywood to illuminate six city blocks.

Interior scenes for the picture will be filmed at the United Studios.

"Alice Adams" Follows Novel

Fidelity to Locale of Story Found in Adaptation of Tarkington Book

FIDELITY to the locale in which the scenes are set, as well as the novel from which it is adapted, mark the Associated Exhibitors feature, Florence Vidor in "Alice Adams," after Booth Tarkington's great prize-winning novel. The "certain small city of the Middle West," where "the social position depeneded largely upon how large a bank balance the head of the family possessed," is a picture to the very life of thousands of communities scattered not only about the Middle West, but also the Far West, the South and the East.

Persons who have been privileged to have previews have described this offering indeed as "the great American photoplay," the adjectives which also have been applied to Mr. Tarkington's novel, as reflecting life in a typical American town. The country has many thousands of Alice Adamses—girls who are only tolerated in the so-called exclusive circles because their fathers have lost step in the race for financial success, but who try to deceive themselves with false hopes. With her beauty and her essentially feminine charm Florence Vidor seems the ideal screen portrayer of this role which so many play in real life.

Rowland V. Lee directed this seven-part feature, which Associated Exhibitors has set for release April 8th. Mr. Lee is well known both as a player and a director, probably his most notable work with the megaphone heretofore having been "Shirley of the Circus," with Shirley Mason. Claude Gillingwater, who is said to give an admirable portrayel of Virgil Adams, the old-fashioned father, had important roles in such recent successes as "Little Lord Fauntleroy," with Mary Pickford; Marshall Neilan's "The Stranger's Banquet," and the Tourneur production of "The Christian."

Harold Goodwin, as Walter Adams, Alice's "low-brow brother," is appearing in his second picturized version of a Booth Tarkington novel, having been in "The Flirt." Margaret McWade, as the mother; Vernon Steele as Arthur Russell; Thomas Ricketts as "the great J. A. Lamb"; Gertrude Astor as Mildred Palmer, and Margaret Landis as Henrietta Lamb, also are players of wide popularity, and were selected for these particular roles in "Alice Adams" because of their fitness for them.

$5,000 for Preventive of "Klieg Eyes"

A reward of $5,000 for the discovery of a preventive for "Klieg Eyes," terror of all players before the camera, was announced yesterday by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The announcement followed discovery at the studio in Culver City, Cal., that during the past two weeks 113 actors and actresses had been on the hospital list from the affliction that not only incapacitates, but causes intense agony. It marks the first definite campaign to interest the scientific world in an organized effort to stamp out this disease.

In announcing the reward, Vice-President Abraham Lehr stated that should a preventive be discovered, it would be placed at the disposal of the entire motion picture industry.

Claire Windsor Wins Popularity Contest

Claire Windsor, the popular Goldwyn actress, has just been declared winner in a popularity contest held by George J. Wehner, a New York exhibitor with a string of twelve theatres in Brooklyn, Manhattan, the Bronx and Newark, N. J.

Manager Wehner decided to obtain attractions that were really what his patrons wanted. He therefore held a popularity contest in all of his theatres.

Claire Windsor has just finished her next Goldwyn release, Marshall Neilan's original story, "The Eternal Three."

C.B.C.'s SEASON'S SMASH

Critics View "Darkness and Daylight"

ALBERT W. PLUMMER, president of Bancroft Pictures, Inc., arrived in New York with a print of the company's initial production, "Darkness and Daylight." A special showing was arranged, and a number of critics were present to view the picture and offer criticisms. Mr. Plummer, who also directed the production, was pleased when his audience expressed themselves favorably on the story and production. Several minor changes suggested will be made immediately. The cast includes Vera Alta, Harlan Knight, Audrey Berry, Wallace Ray, William Black and Jack O'Brien. Camera work by Frank Zucker.

Bennett Production on Postal Service

Whitman Bennett announces that he has completed plans for the immediate production of an important film with an all-star cast, based upon the lives and experiences of men in the United States Postal Service. This film, which will be issued with special exploitation features of every description, will be entitled "The U. S. Mail."

The production is to be made in Mr. Bennett's studio in Yonkers, and the intention of the producer is to make the film far more elaborate than any of the "exploitation productions" yet on the market.

Warner Float Near End of Long Trip

Warner Brothers transcontinental float has completed two-thirds of its scheduled trip to the Warner coast studios in Los Angeles, following its arrival last week at Fort Worth, Texas. The float thus far has encountered innumerable difficulties. It has weathered storms and the many hardships met by transcontinental tourists. Despite these drawbacks, the fact that it has proved an invaluable asset to not only the exchanges handling the Warner Brothers classics of the screen but also to thousands of theatre owners is said to be conclusive proof of its far-reaching advertising value.

"The Curse" Finally to Be Novelized

Frederick Butler Pierce has been commissioned to novelize the Weber & North state-right feature, "The Curse." The Martin Publications will release the fictionized version in a popular edition. The author and a representative of the publishing firm saw the melodrama in the projection-room of the distributors this week, and negotiated for the adaptation to novel form as a result.

The six-reel thriller has never yet had its appearance as a story. It has toured the country over for the past decade as one of Charls E. Blaney's most successful stage dramas.

Pathe Lists South Sea Picture

"Black Shadows" Depicts Life of Savages in the Solomon Islands

THE forthcoming release of something wholly new and distinctive in the way of feature pictures is Pathe's latest new product announcement. Authorized by General Manager Elmer Pearson, this is the fifth of a series of weekly announcements holding lively interest for all exhibitors—especially those, Pathe says, who shared in the profits and public estimation assured by bookings of "Nanook of the North."

Like that classic of the frozen regions, the new feature now first announced deals intimately with human life at once mysterious and the subject of universal curiosity, yet differs in the circumstance that its characters are wholly savage and live their precarious existence in conditions remaining the most primitive on earth.

The picture is in five reels and is called "Black Shadows." Its most important locations are in the Solomon Islands, that region in the South Pacific inhabited by the dread "Head Hunters" — several rival tribes of warlike, tattooed and grotesquely self-mutilated cannibals heretofore inadequately pictured and their savage ceremonies vaguely described in rare volumes and in sensational Sunday newspaper "features."

"Black Shadows" is produced by World Tours, Inc., whose schooner, "The Wisdom II," voyaged with its filming staff and outfit from Los Angeles to the southwestern antipodes touching at all the important island groups en route and thus making "a journey backward along the worn trail of time," with intimate camera revelations in the "Head Hunters" country its successful main object. On the return of the expedition a few months ago the many thousand feet of negative were edited and titled at the Hal Roach studios, and the finished picture promptly accepted by Pathe as measuring up to the standard of its policy to release only features of distinctive character and quality.

The human drama depicted in "Black Shadows" is said to be dramatic and thrilling in the extreme, the film itself demonstrating the actual presence of the director and camera staff in the thick of battles between tribes of these cannibal savages and guests at their strange, often gruesome ceremonies.

French Planes Exploit Fox Film

National Bombing Squadron Flies Over Paris Dropping Circulars

SO enthusiastic became Minister Ginesty of Beaux Arts of France during the private showing of "Over the Hill," which was tendered him and members of the French Government, that the services of the National Bombing Squadron were placed at the disposal of the Paris office of Fox Film Corporation for whatever publicity purposes it desired. This is the first time such an offer has been made to an individual corporation in that country.

As a result of this courtesy, an unusual exploitation campaign was devised by J. Viguier, the Fox representative in charge. It is in his report that an accurate description of the stunts is given. In part the report follows:

"The result of Minister Ginesty's enthusiasm made it possible for us to obtain the services of the army bombing flying machines from the military field of Villacoublay, and to secure, free of charge for the exploitation of our specials the services of such well-known aviators as Sadi Lecointe, lieutenant aviator, Knight of the Legion of Honor—war cross, 18 citations—wounded four times—record of speed; Haegelen—lieutenant aviator—Knight of the Legion of Honor—27 citations—wounded three times. With full squadrons, each in turn, flew over the city (Paris), dropping thousands of vari-colored circulars.

"Great masses of people were congregated at the Concords, on the Champs Elysses, and on the Boulevards, watching these circulars come down, and picking them up as they landed. We merely mentioned the names of the various theatres that were running the picture, and coupled up with a campaign of publicity in the daily papers, partly paid by the exhibitors, we succeeded in filling every one of these theatres that were running 'Over the Hill' the first, second, third and fourth weeks.

"It was, without a question, the greatest display of publicity that ever was witnessed by the Paris public.

"At least twelve fines were imposed on us from different police districts in the city of Paris; however, none of them, so far, have been collected, when they heard the true facts and were advised that it was done with the permission of the Ministry of the Beaux Arts, and with such people as Sadi Lecointe, bombarding Paris from the air, with this publicity."

Associated Photoplays Re-Enters the Field

The announcement of the reorganization of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., and especially the news of their reentry into the independent market with a series of Milton Sills productions, has created much interest in film circles.

"Milton Sills," states Mr. Canter, "is building a splendid reputation which will further be sustained by his work in the Associated Photo-Plays' production entitled 'Why Women Remarry.' This intensely moving and gripping production is bound to appeal and should prove to be a real attraction for the box office."

Louise Fazenda Cast in "The Fog" by Graf

LOUISE FAZENDA has been placed under contract by Max Graf to play an important role in his forthcoming production of "The Fog" for Metro.

In this role Miss Fazenda, instead of being surrounded with the usual merriment which accompanies the lighter things of the screen, will be called upon to appear in a number of tense dramatic situations amid an atmosphere of melodrama.

The picture will be directed by Paul Powell, under the personal supervision of Max Graf and will be released by Metro.

"The Fog" was written by William Dudley Pelley, and the adaptation was made by H. H. Van Loan. The notable cast includes Mildred Harris, Cullen Landis, Billie Dove, David Butler, Ralph Lewis and Frank Currier.

"Third Alarm" Wins Censorship Advocate

To win unstinted commendation from one who has been hostile to the motion picture interests is a difficult job for any producer, but such was the accomplishment of Emory Johnson, maker of "The Third Alarm," released through Film Booking Offices.

"The Third Alarm" played recently at the Grand theatre, Wilmington, North Carolina, a portion of the receipts going to the relief and pension fund of the local firemen. Immediately after the opening a donation was received by the fire chief from Dr. J. J. Hurt, of the First Baptist Church, and with it a letter of highest commendation of the picture. Dr. Hurt has often been active in the interests of censorship.

"It is a wonderful picture," wrote Dr. Hurt, "full of tender scenes, of thrilling heroics and of needed information concerning firemen who throw their lives in jeopardy at the ringing of every alarm. I would commend the picture unreservedly. It kept me either laughing or crying for delight every minute of the hour. More than that, every inch of the picture is manly and strong."

Joe Brandt Leaves on Extended Tour

JOE BRANDT, President of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, left this week on an extended trip to start the ball moving on a preliminary whirlwind campaign on "Temptation" and "Her Accidental Husband."

It is Mr. Brandt's opinion that these two features, "Temptation," the third of the C. B. C. series of Six Box Office Winners, and "Her Accidental Husband, the first of the Belasco Productions, which that company is distributing, are the biggest his organization has ever handled—and accordingly it is his intention to cover the major part of the territory himself.

It is his intention to swing the entire circuit, covering the key cities and seeing the big territorial holders in each.

Warner Declares for Fair Play

Tells of Clause in Contract with Exchanges Protecting Exhibitors

WITHOUT debating for or against the uniform exhibition contract which has been a subject much under discussion in the industry recently, Harry M. Warner, executive head of the firm of Warner Brothers, recently expressed himself in no uncertain manner on the matter of playing fair with the exhibitors.

"In all the talk about contracts that has been going on of late," said Mr. Warner, "there is one matter of the utmost importance, both to exhibitor and producer alike, that has not received the attention it deserves. I refer particularly to the practice of what is known as 'holding the club' over the exhibitor. The usual method of procedure is for the exchange man, who happens to have one or two pictures that the exhibitor really wants, to withhold these particular subjects or either place an exorbitant price on them. He then very kindly does the exhibitor a favor by saying, 'Well, Joe, tell you what I'll do. If you'll take these six pictures, which the exhibitor does not want, I'll let you have these two specials at such a price.' Thereby penalizing the producer of the good pictures, who secures a much lower rental than he would if his productions were sold alone on their own merits, and also loading up the exhibitor with more material than he can use and leaving room for future arguments, adjustments and a lot of other things that are absolutely unnecessary.

"I cannot speak for all the other producers, but as far as the productions of Warner Brothers are concerned I wish to state here and now that each and every one of our pictures are to be sold exclusively on their merits and exclusive of the productions of any other producer. To insure the performance of this fact we have a specific clause in all of our contracts with each territorial distributor which specifies:

"'That the booking and renting of all positive prints of each of said motion pictures shall be upon contracts separate and apart from the booking and renting of any other prints, films or pictures handled by the exchange, and the booking or renting of any said prints of the producers (Warner Brothers) feature motion pictures shall not be made conditional or contingent upon the booking or renting of any other pictures, films or prints handled or controlled by the exchange.'"

"Luck" Given Special Showing

Screening of Hines' New Picture at Wilkesbarre, Pa., Wins Applause

JOHNNY HINES and the mayor of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., gave a party last week, and it was "some" party, according to all reports. Daniel L. Hart, the mayor, who wrote "The Parish Priest," is a Johnny and when the star wanted great friend and admirer of to shoot some mine scenes for his latest melo-comedy, "Luck," his honor was right on the job and made arrangements for the photographing of these scenes at one of the biggest of the Pennsylvania coal mines. Every facility was placed at Johnny's disposal to make the scenes with the result that some of the most realistic sequences ever seene in a motion picture will be seen in "Luck," it is declared.

Naturally, all the people of Wilkes-Barre who assisted Hines in filming the scenes were anxious to see the picture. When it was completed Johnny took a print down to the Pennsylvania city and then he and Mayor Hart staged their party. A special screening of "Luck" was put on at the Capitol theatre, where an invited audience witnessed the melo-comedy. Mayor Hart, as well as all the others who were lucky enough to see "Luck," were most enthusiastic in their praise. "It's positively the most entertaining motion picture I've ever had the pleasure of seeing," said the mayor. "It is clean, wholesome and just packed full of laughs with plenty of excitement to keep one at a high pitch all the time it is on the screen. Johnny Hines certainly knows how to produce the sort of screen stories that will please everyone."

At the showing of "Luck" at the Capitol theatre the heads of all city departments of Wilkes-Barre and their co-workers, as well as representative men and women in all walks of life, composed the audience. After the showing Johnny Hines was showered with congratulations.

One of the many big dramatic scenes in "Luck" shows the crash in of a mine shaft and it was this that Hines and his company journeyed to Wilkes-Barre to photograph. The Buttonwood mine was the location and it is one of the largest in the eastern district. Many of the miners took part in the scenes in and about the mine.

Greater N. Y. Rights on C. B. C. Film Sold

Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights have been sold already on "Her Accidental Husband," first of the Belasco productions, and negotiations are already pending whereby a major percentage of the territories throughout the country will be disposed of almost immediately, declares C.B.C.

Bobby North of Apollo exchange, New York, requested a special screening of "Her Accidental Husband," and arrangements were completed at once for his immediate handling of it.

University to Utilize "Vanity Fair" Stills

AT the request of J. E. Goodwin, librarian of the University of Texas, in Austin, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has supplied that institution with a set of stills of Hugo Ballin's production of Thackeray's masterpiece of fiction, "Vanity Fair," in which Mabel Ballin is starred.

Mr. Goodwyn's letter asking for the stills stated that the University library wished to make arrangements to obtain the stills of pictures of permanent literary or artistic interest such as 'Vanity Fair' and similar releases, the stills to be filed permanently in this library and to be used in class room work here."

Including Mrs. Reid, the cast presents Bessie Love, George Hackathorne, Claire McDowell, Victory Bateman and Eric Mayne. The male lead has not yet been selected.

The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and the production itself is under the direction of John Griffith Wray.

The picture is being sponsored by the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League, the head of which is Dr. Rufus Vonkleinsmidt, president of the University of Southern California. The members of the League represent the civic, Federal and social life of Los Angeles.

The picture is being made behind a screened-off set at the Thomas H. Ince studios at Culver City. The only persons admitted to the set are the technical, Government and police narcotic experts who are aiding in furnishing authenticity to the dramatic background of the picture.

Arrow Special Given Premiere

"Lost in a Big City" Opens to Big Business in Paterson, N. J., House

WHEN the Arrow Film Corporation selected Paterson as the scene for the world's premiere presentation of the big new Arrow-Blazed Trail Special, "Lost in a Big City," they showed the confidence they had in the picture, for Paterson is recognized as a "tough" show town. It is largely a manufacturing centre, there being over seven hundred silk mills in the town and it also has a large number of theatres, furnishing stiff opposition.

The confidence W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, reposed in this picture was amply justified as was evidenced by the opening of the picture in Manager Adams' 1,700-seat U. S. thatre on Monday, February 26th, when this big house, in the face of the stiffest opposition Paterson has seen in years, was jammed to the doors from the opening to the close. On a cold, rainy day, with everything against it, "Lost in a Big City" did a tremendous business, and this in the face of such opposition as a first-run showing of Charlie Chaplin in "The Pilgrim," "The Strangers' Banquet" and "The Third Alarm," which, without exaggeration, may be classed as about as severe a test as could be asked of any picture. In spite of this opposition, in spite of tremendous adertising on the part of these three theatres, "Lost in a Big City" unquestionably did the business of the day. Not only that, but it gave one hundred per cent audience satisfaction, which is the test of any picture. It is often possible to crowd a house on the occasion of a premere showing on a picture which does not give audience satisfaction, but this was not the case with "Lost in a Big City," for they laughed and they cried and they shouted. Manager Adams told the writer that he had never had a picture in his house which gave such universal satisfaction. Inquiry among the ushers, cashier, ticket taker, and doormen elicited the fact that not one adverse comment was heard, but on the contrary the highest praise for the picture was expressed on all sides.

John Lowell, star and producer of the picture, with Baby Ivy Ward, who has a strong supporting role in this picture, appeared in person and were received with tremendous applause upon being introduced after the showing.

United Studios to Be Improved

Joseph Schenck and Associates to Spend About Half-Million Dollars

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK and his associates in the purchase of the United studios at Hollywood are planning to spend a half million dollars on the improvement of the big 33 acre lot. They intend to make of the United an ideal studio for the production of independent pictures. With these improvements will come a vast saving in revenue for the companies working there and a consequent increased income for the owners of the United.

The improvements planned will not only give producers a wider range for big outdoor sets, but will tend to speed up production.

The United, it is claimed, will be the finest studio in the world.

All of the streets are to be paved, more stages built, a modern heating plant installed so that even cold winter nights will not interfere with the progress of producers' work.

A corps of expert technical men will be kept on the pay roll so that all work will progress without the least possible loss of time. In fact every move is being made with the idea in mind of helping to keep down negative cost and making the plant so attractive that it will be running at capacity during the entire year.

Of course, Mr. Schenck will produce all future First National releases with Norma and Constance Talmadge at the United. At the present time all the independent companies working on First National attractions are installed there. made.

Edwin Carewe is making "The Girl of the Golden West." Frank Borzage has begun "shooting" on his initial First National. "Terwilliger"; Allen Holubar has just finished and is cutting "Slander the Woman" with Dorothy Phillips as the star, Maurice Tourneur is getting ready for Anstey's story, "The Brass Bottle," having finished what is said to be his most artistic and thrilling production, "The Isle of Lost Ships"; James Young is making "Wandering Daughters."

Soon Richard Walton Tully will begin "Trilby," for First National release. Norma Talmadge's next is said to be "Ashes of Vengeance," while Constance will make "Dulcy."

Schenck's faith in the future of pictures is being backed by the fortune he has and intends to invest in making the United the finest of all motion picture studios.

Denver Shrine to Show Wm. Fox Special

El Jebel Shrine of Denver, Colorado, has leased the Isis theatre of that city and will run the William Fox feature picture, "The Town That Forgot God," for one week. According to a statement made by the illustrious Potentate of the Shrine: "Before this picture was selected by the committee, it was screened at a special showing, after which each and every member of the committee pronounced it to be a most remarkable motion picture.

"Mad Love" Opens at Capitol

New York Critics Give Pola Negri-Goldwyn Film Favorable Reception

GOLDWYN'S release starring Pola Negri, titled "Mad Love," opened this week at the New York Capitol, and, according to word from the Goldwyn headquarters, did a record business. The evident favorable reception accorded by the public was shared in by the press reviewers.

James O. Spearing in the Times wrote: "'Mad Love' is one of those Sappho stories. And the chances are you don't like that kind any more. But the odds are that you will like this one. Because whenever an actor or actress makes any character really come to life on the screen, you are bound to like his or her story. You see somebody alive, you see human emotions revealed, you get inside someone's heart and mind, and you can't help liking that."

Quinn L. Martin in the World: "The throngs which stood six deep swinging away a block and a half with their eyes upon the lobby of the Capitol theatre . . . resembled a kind of Pola expedition. Not since Rodolph Valentino's 'Blood and Sand' has a picture star effected so frenzied a first night as Miss Negri in 'Mad Love.'"

The Telegram: "In 'Mad Love' there may be found warm-blooded action, vibrant beauty and throbbing reality of character, the like of which the silver sheet has rarely seen. Pola Negri is unmatched in her field."

Beauvais Fox in the Tribune: "The perfect vehicle for Pola Negri. . . . The greatest non-stop vamping record ever filmed. And she did it all with that wonderful, bitter, crooked smile that seems to say she is wise in the ways of men, but not quite thoroughly disillusioned. Pola is just about the whole show. There are some splendidly directed carnival scenes."

Editor Lauds "Down to the Sea"

Dr. Frank Crane Terms Hodkinson's Film "Triumph of Photographic Art"

AMONG the many notables, authors, scientists, etc., who have witnessed the showing of Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships," distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and now having an exceptional run at the Cameo theatre, New York, N. Y., there is none who has been more loud in his praise and more sincere in his compliments than Dr. Frank Crane, noted editor, author and lecturer.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation sent a special invitation to Dr. Crane to visit the Cameo and see this special production for himself. The next day Mr. Hodkinson received a letter from the eminent writer which read:

"I thank you for your invitation to witness 'Down to the Sea in Ships' at the Cameo theatre the other evening. It was certainly a wonderful triumph of the photographic art. How they ever got those pictures without having some man sit on the whale I do not understand.

Film Guild to Reproduce Puritan Town

IN order to give "The Scarecrow," by Percy MacKaye, the next Glenn Hunter production produced by the Film Guild, Inc., for release through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, a perfect background and artistic dressing, the entire Film Guild Company will spend next week in Deerfield, Mass., reproducing a town square of Puritan times with a group of the oldest houses in America as a background for Glenn Hunter's next picture. In addition to these houses, which were built in 1680, it is planned to construct pillories, sawyer's pits, a watch tower, and similar authentic though little known features of this period.

A train load of costumes and properties will accompany the staff which includes Frank Tuttle, director; Fred Waller, production manager; Junius Craven, art director; Dwight Wiman, Townsend Martin, and James Ashmore Creelman.

"The Curse" Disposed of in Indiana

The six-reel Blaney melodrama, "The Curse," presented by Export and Import and distributed in the United States by L. Lawrence Weber & Bobby North, was bought for the state of Indiana by H. Lieber, head of the exchange in Indianapolis that bears his name. Sam Sax, Sales Manager for the distributors, negotiated the sale.

Liber looked at "The Curse," appreciated the stars — Harry Morey, Edmund Breese, Marguerite Clayton, George Fawcett and Miriam Batista, and admired the action well enough to make the investment on the financial possibilities of the melodrama.

Additional Praise for "The Hero"

"The Hero," B. P. Schulberg's recent release through the Al Lichtman Corporation, which was chosen by the National Board of Review as an Exceptional Picture, has received an additional honor by Photoplay Magazine, which has ranked it as first in its "Six Best Pictures of the Month." This recommendation is carried through Photoplay's circulation of 450,000 to some two million readers of the publication.

In addition, this Gasnier production takes two places in Photoplay's "Six Best Performances of the Month"—John Sainpolis in "The Hero" ranking first and Barbara La Marr in "The Hero" ranking third.

Elaborate Sets For Nigh's Next

Feature For Weber and North Distribution One of Artistic Splendor

THE first independent production to be staged and furnished on the same scale as the "million-dollar" brand of costume specials will be Will Nigh's forthcoming feature to be distributed by L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North. Heights of artistic splendor and spectacular staging never before known in the state-right field have been reached, it is claimed. Under the skillful hand of John D. Schulze, art director of many of the most beautifully mounted films of recent times, a new mark in screen embellishment has been attained.

Six different schools of architecture and decorative design are represented in Will Nigh's second feature. A gothic mansion built on the proportions of a cathedral and outfitted with stained glass windows, marble porticos and towering arches forms the largest set. It took four weeks to construct, and its equipment was more costly than the structure itself, the producers claim. Mediaeval furniture, hangings and utensils were used. The costumes of the characters appearing in the scene were also faithful to the period. French art and decoration is in evidence in the Parisian salon and modiste shop, where part of the action is staged. Its contents and construction rival the luxurious continental emporiums in finesse and richness.

A Spanish library of the Moor period forms a third section of the properties constructed. The trappings and furniture suites used here were built from art prints of the age. An Italian dining room suite of the Medici period is the fourth set. It is also a faithful reproduction of the brilliant school of sculpture and mural decoration then in vogue.

An Egyptian set, forming part of a cabaret scene, constitutes one of the most unique art achievements of screen staging. Weird, angular figures, representing ancient Egyptian architecture and reproducing a number of the historic statues of oriental civilization, appear here. Finally, there is a modern studio setting in the futuristic style, brilliantly colored and grotesquely shaped. Tht effect is bizarre in the extreme.

Ince Criticises "Desk Reviews"

Says Too Hasty Comment Is Injustice To Producers of Good Pictures

THE advance of the motion picture industry and the making of "bigger and better" pictures have a serious menace, in the opinion of Thomas H. Ince, in the so-called "swivel-chair" critics and the "desk-reviews" they write.

Ince has just issued a heated statement in reply to a recent trade-journal review of "What a Wife Learned." In the review is a reference to an incident which was incorporated in the working synopsis of the story before the picture entered into production. In the making of the picture, this particular part was discarded. The critic, however, worked this circumstance into his review and wrote at great length about a film which he conclusively proved he had never seen.

Ince says in part:

"One of the greatest injustices faced by producers of motion pictures is that of careless criticism. No amount of unjust criticism ever did permanent injury to a good picture any more than boasting can make a success of a poor one. Pictures are made for the people and it is public opinion that makes or breaks a production. Nevertheless, the success of many a big picture has been delayed by the hasty, careless verdict of critics who have not troubled to see a picture or who have viewed it in a cold projection room."

Ince comments on the importance of the pre-view:

"Nothing in the world is more deceptive than a picture in the process of production. The producer of a hundred knock-out successes cannot be sure of the effect of his hundred and first picture until he looks at it with an audience. For this reason, the pre-view has come to be one of the most important steps in production. Before half a dozen audiences, the producer studies his product, works over scenes, changes titles and often re-cuts whole sequences. Through the pre-view he gets the reaction of the audience which enables him to strengthen any weak places in the production."

Ince concludes with a final fling at the casual critic.

"If the man who devotes all his time to the making of pictures is unable to gauge the results he has obtained until he looks at the picture with an audience, certainly this is doubly true of the casual critic."

F.B.O. Heeds Call for Fred Stone Westerns

A REACTION to the publicity recently given Fred Stone in the newspapers throughout the country is reported from all exchanges of the Film Booking Offices of America, where inquiries are being made by exhibitors on the two Fred Stone Westerns, "Billy Jim" and "The Duke of Chimney Butte."

Stone recently startled the theatrical world and the public in general by announcing that he had "gotten religion" in Butte, Montana. The press made much of the story, and many of the metropolitan dailies carried it on the front page. The famous actor was converted to the Methodist church in Butte while on tour, stating that he intended to live up to his religion and donate a tenth of his income to church charities.

The two F. B. O. pictures are Western dramas in which Stone is given cowboy roles, allowing for a plentiful display of his comedy ability. They were released eighteen months ago and won immediate popularity.

Deal Closed on "Has World Gone Mad"

Activities during the past week at the office of Equity Pictures disclose the fact that two more big deals are about to be announced to the trade on "Has the World Gone Mad?" the latest Daniel Carson Goodman "Special" and the actual closing of another foreign sale on this same production.

The latest buyer to be attracted by this Equity "Special" is Millard Johnson, representative of Australasian Film, Ltd. Mr. Johnson has secured the picture for the territories of Australia and New Zealand, the Dutch East Indies and Strait Settlements.

Equity Pictures and Daniel Carson Goodman are elated over this reception of their latest "Special."

Songs Use Title of "If Winter Comes"

An excellent indication of the popularity of A. S. M. Hutchinson's story "If Winter Comes" is the number of songs using that title now being put out by the different music publishers in New York, declares a statement from the Fox home office. The screen version of the English novelist's work that Fox Film Corporation has completed with Percy Marmont and Ann Forest as Mark Sabre and Lady Tybar will soon be released.

"Jazzmania" Opens in Boston

Well Received by Press Critics Showing atL oew's State Theatre

BOSTON has given a royal welcome to the "Queen of Motion Picture Jazz," Mae Murray, in her new photoplay, "Jazzmania."

After the showing of "Jazzmania" at Loew's State theatre, George C. MacKinnon wrote in The Boston Advertiser:

" 'Jazzmania,' now rejoicing State theatre patrons, is the most shining example of the peculiar Mae Murray type of cinema exhibit loosed upon a fortunate world within our recollection. Mae's irresistible dance-tapestry weaving seems just a bit more gratifying than ever. The usual optic-satisfying Murray backgrounds seem just a trifle more glittering and artfully designed than ever. . . . The film is, generally speaking, on the well-loved Murray plan. But it departs from the beaten, or rather, danced-on path to a considerable extent."

The Boston Globe calls the screen play "amusing as well as thrilling."

The Boston Post praises Miss Murray's ability as a dancer, and draws attention to tht good supporting cast.

The Boston Transcript points out the lavish manner in which the production is done. "She stints not in wardrobe," it says of Miss Murray.

"Jazzmania," presented and directed by Robert Z. Leonard, is released by Metro. It was produced by Tiffany Productions, of which Robert Z. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman, general manager. Cedric Gibbon executed the settings. The photography was done by Oliver T. Marsh. "Jazzmania" was written by Edmund Goulding, and titled by Al Cohn.

Edward Belasco to Enter Field

Brother of Stage Impressario Will Start Series of Film Productions

AN EVENT unique in the annals of the motion picture industry has become public, following upon the heels of the recent announcement which told of the part which David Belasco was to play in the film field. Directly as the result of that story, it has been discovered that in entering the motion picture business, a friendly rivalry had been established between brother and brother.

According to the story which has leaked out, Edward Belasco, younger brother of David Belasco, formed a producing organization some months ago to which he gave his name.

The younger brother has for years been a powerful factor as regards the spoken drama on the West Coast, where his chief activity was with the Alcazar theatre, which is located in San Francisco. This theatre enjoys a unique reputation inasmuch as it has given the original impetus to the careers of the majority of stars which have graced and are now gracing the stage.

Located so near to the center of motion picture producing activities, Edward Belasco had long desired to enter the newer branch of the theatrical field. The opportunity to gratify this ambition came in September of last year and the result was the organization known as Belasco Productions, Inc.

An inkling of this event was obtained when copies of an illustrated periodical published in San Francisco reached the East. This periodical, "The Photoplay News," carried a story in its December issue in which was outlined the formation of the company and the progress which it had made on its first production. This was tentatively titled "Her Price." Other productions planned and for which continuities were then being prepared were "Dancing Feet" and "Baldy of Nome." The names of the original Mayflower. One, made by Admiral Paris and Captain Colthe writers responsible for these continuities were given as Anna Blake Mezquida and Esther Birdsall Darling.

It was not until some time later that the industry was informed through the medium of the daily press of David Belasco's entry as a factor in motion picture affairs. It is said that the elder brother's reversal of his decision to confine himself solely to the older form of dramatic expression came as much of a surprise to Edward Belasco as to the rest of the world. However, this announcement in no way affected the plans of Belasco Productions, Inc., save to cause that organization to speed up its producing activities.

An arrangement had already been made with the C. B. C. Film Corporation of 1600 Broadway, New York City, one of the livest of the independents, whereby that company was awarded the distribution rights of the six Belasco pictures.

E. K. Lincoln in "Right of the Strongest"

Announcement was made early this week that E. K. Lincoln, who recently left for the Pacific Coast, will be starred in an elaborate screen version of "The Right of the Strongest," the novel by Francis Nimmo Greene, author of "One Clear Call."

According to the statement issued Mr. Lincoln will be supported by an all-star cast, every member of which has a name of established box office value. Work on the production is already under way, and it is stated that the screen edition of "The Right of the Strongest" will rival in colorful qualities and highly dramatic effects the vivid word pictures from Mr. Greene's pen which originally made the novel one of "the best sellers" of recent years.

Unique Set in New Ray Picture

Precise Replica of Historic Mayflower Is Made for "Courtship"

A PRECISE replica, save in a single respect, of the doughty Mayflower, which bore the Pilgrim argonauts of 1620 to America, has been constructed at the Charles Ray studios in Hollywood, and is now being used in that star's production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish." The one respect in which the 1923 craft differs from its forebear is in the fact that its framework is of metal, marking the advent of the first all-steel motion picture set ever constructed.

This steel framework, a trussed hull 102 feet long, with a width of 24 feet and depth of 14 feet from deck to keel, has been so equipped with mechanical contrivances as to make possible a re-enactment of the terrific storms which buffeted the original frail craft in its epoch-making voyage across the Atlantic. Not all the details of the ingenious mechanism devised by Robert Ellis, Mr. Ray's art director, have been revealed. It is declared, though, that the resourcefulness of the studio technicians in producing the illusion of the angry sea lashing the Mayflower's sides and sweeping tons of foaming water over her decks will afford an interesting demonstration of up-to-date motion picture cleverness.

In existence at the present time are only four accepted designs of lins froom the meager information which they were able to assemble, is in the National Museum in Washington; another in the Philadelphia Commercial Museum, and a third in the possession of the Plymouth Society of Boston. The fourth, a representation in silver, is owned by the heirs of Walter Hines Page, late ambassador to the Court of St. James's, having been presented to him, with the freedom of the city of Plymouth, England, a few years ago. Fortunately, these few designs agree even to the less important details of construction, so that the Mayflower to be shown in the picture may be accepted as absolutely faithful to the original.

Strauss' "Salome" Press Book Approved

The appearance of the campaign service book on Malcolm Strauss' "Salome," the spectacular photoplay distributed through independent exchanges by George H. Wiley, Inc., has resulted in much favorable comment.

The press book has met with enthusiastic praise from exhibitors because of the fact that every cut, story and idea in it can be used by showmen. From the front cover, which is a four-column newspaper ad, to the last, there is no waste motion.

The pages devoted to publicity stories have been made up in newspaper style, with a newspaper "mast head," weather "ears," and all the other features of an eight-column newspaper. The news stories used are of varying length, and are designed to hit every department of a paper—film, sports, features, women's pages, etc. Cuts and advertisements are inserted and grouped as they would be in a regular daily newspaper.

Striking Campaign Book for "Tents of Allah"

Copies of a strikingly handsome campaign book on "The Tents of Allah," the melodrama of desert romance and adventure which is the current Associated Exhibitors release, are now being sent to the branch sales offices of that organization throughout the country. This publication, one of the most complete and comprehensive of the kind ever made in connection with a picture, is of twenty-four pages, and is the work of Miss Gertrude K. Smith, of Associated's publicity and exploitation department.

A collection of posters, one, three, six and twenty-four sheets ,is illustrated. Though each of the posters shows scenes from the feature, the six-sheet, picturing the sword fight on horseback for possession of a girl, is possibly the most effective. Illustrations are given also of specimens of photographs in black and white, material for colored lobby displays, and scene and star cuts, and there is a full assortment of prepared ads ready to clip and paste.

Gasnier Starts New Production

"Daughters of the Rich" Put Under Way at Mayer-Schulberg Studios

B. P. SCHULBERG has announced that work has been started by Gasnier on "Daughters of the Rich," Edgar Saltus, famous novel in which Gaston Glass and Ethel Shannon will be featured. The production is now under way at the Mayer-Schulberg Studios in Los Angeles.

It is somewhat of a coincidence that just as Schulberg was negotiating for the screen rights to this successful book, his neighbor, Louis B. Mayer, was considering a title change for his forthcoming screen production of the stage play "Climbing." Almost simultaneous with Schulberg's announcement of the aquisition of the Saltus story came word from Mayer that he had decided on "Daughters of the Rich" as the new name of "Climbing." It is likely, however, that in view of Schulberg's purchase of novel known by this title, Mayer will rechristen his contemplated production once more.

This is the second time within a comparatively short while that these two neighbor producers were almost engaged in making pictures of the same title. Last fall, Louis B. Mayer bought the rights to a magazine story by Albert Payson Terhune, "A Hero," while concurrently Schulberg was in the act of purchasing Gilbert Emery's play, "The Hero." The last picture has already been produced and circulated while the Mayer "A Hero" has not yet reached the screen.

"Daughters of the Rich," it was learned from the Al Lichtman Corporation, will be released as one of their first eight Preferred Pictures.

Equity Chief on Key-City Tour

Vice-President Louis Baum Leaves on Extensive Trip Around Country

ON last Sunday, Louis Baum, vice-president for Equity Pictures Corporation, left for his contemplated trip around the various key centers of the film industry, taking with him a great number of inquiries received from the Independent exchange-men on the purchase of Equity's latest "Special," "Has The World Gone Mad?" His first mail to the Home office included a signed contract for the sale of this picture to one of these interested state-right buyers, Lee Goldberg, president of Big Features Rights Corporation, 221 So. Third Street, Louisville, Ky.

Mr. Goldberg has purchased "Has The World Gone Mad?" for his territory which comprises the states of Kentucky and Tennessee. Mr. Baum writes, "It didn't take Mr. Goldberg and me very long to get down to business on the sale of this picture. As soon as he saw it, he realized the intrinsic value of the production, the box-office drawing power of the title and the all-around class and excellence of the picture, and to be absolutely truthful about the whole thing, the picture sold itself. Mr. Goldberg told me that I have a fine box-office attraction in 'Has The World Gone Mad?' and backed up his statement by buying it for his exhibitors, and also stated that I might use his name as a booster for the picture in every way. You'll hear from me very shortly again, because I think that 'Has The World Gone Mad?' will receive the same greeting from all my prospective buyers."

Equity considers this sale to be the first one of a very successful trip for Mr. Baum and hopes to sell the entire country within the next six weeks. Mr. Baum will touch Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Minneapolis, Denver, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, Dallas and Atlanta on this trip and Equity believes that the various inquiries from each territory will make his extensive trip a flying one and a successful one.

Gottschalk Does Music Score for Ray Film

Everything is being done by Charles Ray on a big scale. Under his contract with United Artists Corporation he was to make but two pictures a year. His second United Artists release, "The Girl I Loved," in eight reels, is going out to exhibitors this month with an elaborate musical score, made to intensify its highly dramatic nature. For this work Mr. Ray chose Louis Gottschalk, who has assembled for "The Girl I Loved," a fine symphonic accompaniment, which includes a song of original composition which is made the theme of the picture. This theme is also the melody of lyrics written by Harvey Thew, one of the best known verse writers in the west. Mr. Gottschalk is responsible for the musical scores for many photoplays of note.

"Is Divorce a Failure?" Set for March 18th

"Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of the Leah Baird 1923 Specials, which Associated Exhibitors is releasing March 18th, Miss Baird, who is featured, is supported by a strong cast. It is a photoplay in which heavy emotions—maturing love interest and vital passions, play an essential part, and Arthur F. Beck, producer of his wife's big features, believes that he assembled an ideal aggregation of players for the various parts.

Circus Life Features "Souls For Sale"

A feature of Rupert Hughes' "Souls for Sale," which he now is directing at the Goldwyn studio, will be scenes showing life in a circus followed by the burning up of the "big top" at night. A wire received from the coast is to the effect that rain, which was not in the original script, had added unexpected excitement by weighing down the canvas so heavily with water that the entire company, numbering about 200, and the technical workers, had to give up motion picture making in favor of tent holding up.

Equipment Employed to Secure Proper Stage Presentation of Picture

Articles by Lee S. Ferguson

IN our article last week we covered a prologue in which lighting played a most important, if not THE most important part, and in the belief that exhibitors are more interested in lighting effects now than formerly, we will go into detail concerning Managing Director Edward L. Hyman's equipment.

The exhibitor who builds a theatre today is making a great mistake, in our opinion, if he does not include in his investment appropriation money for proper lighting equipment. Naturally, the houses which have been operating on short equipment or none at all have been "getting by," but even they could no doubt do better at the box office by modernizing a little bit. The presentation specialty that has to be given with all the stage end house lights up is slipping into the discard faster than last year's straw hat, especially if there is no color mingled with the lights. In this type of presentation scenery must have such an enormous amount of detail that nothing is left to the imagination, and no scenic artist has yet been able to paint a set that can stand up under the white lights as well as a set with less detail stands up under a combination of colored lights. The development of color presentations belongs to the motion picture theatre, as the stage, with but few exceptions, clings to the old methods. Thus the motion picture house which is content with the stage tricks of brown and white painted scenes is neglecting its opportunity to be individual that is the progressive right of the picture theatre.

Soft Focus Light

We all know that soft focus lighting in filming pictures created a sensation and marked a milestone in the advancement of the motion picture industry and art. The soft focus eliminated detail, just as combination color lighting eliminates detail in presentation of specialties. The soft focus soothed the spectators and gave their tired eyes a feast and rest at the same time. It was more artistic, appealed to the greater number, and made the background secondary to the chief point of interest. Therefore soft focus stayed with us and now every director uses it in as many scenes as possible. It means the same to filming as lighting does to specialty presentation, and that's the reason no exhibitor should be content to follow the parade while there's a chance for him to lead it or at least ride in one of the band wagons.

I know of no one who fully appreciates the value of good lighting more than Edward L. Hyman. As well as he understands it there is always something new to fascinate him, and this understanding and fascination he has passed on to patrons of the Brooklyn Mark Strand. Hyman rehearses his lighting effects each week just the same as he rehearses his dance numbers or vocal turns. He goes over the combinations time after time, changing here and improving there, and then finally the lights are rehearsed with the completed program and probably more changes are made.

Equipment Used by Ed. Hyman

Now to enumerate the equipment which Hyman uses:

In the projection booth there are two Mestrum lights of 150 amperes each, which can be used either as flood lights or spots. The colored gelatins used on these work automatically, dissolving from one to another without noticeably changing. The colors may be kept stationary at will. There is also a Kliegel flood light of 100 amperes, and there is a spot lamp of 70 amperes for soloists.

There are two stages, the smaller one being built upon the larger one and further back stage, thus giving room in front for the thirty-five piece orchestra. The smaller stage is the one upon which most of the specialties are presented, but ofttimes the larger one is used in part.

On the stages there are twenty-two 1,000-watt lens lamps and eleven 1,000-watt box lamps for flooding. Above the smaller stage and just back of the center arch is a strip of thirty-two X-ray reflectors in which are two colors—magenta (reddish purple) and light blue. There are two strips of border lights and two strips of footlights for both the small and large stage, and in these are green, blue, amber, white and red globes.

There are four 2,000-watt spot lights over the orchestra which are concentrated on the musicians, and these are likewise changeable when desired. The colors are worked out to harmonize with the other colors being used the same week.

Lights Worked on Themes

There is a ceiling set of cove lights, with red, blue and canary yellow globes. In the auditorium and lobby are pink, blue and canary yellow lights also used in combinations.

All this lighting named is for presentation specialties and does not include the regular lighting equipment in auditorium, lobby and marquee. The lights are worked on themes the same as a music score is arranged to synchronize with the picture. During a presentation each light must do its duty. Regular equipment and specials are worked on dimmers, and any light or a full combination may be dimmed up or down, dissolved or switched on or off. While some are being dimmed down, others may be dimming up.

As this series of articles advances we shall attempt to show how the exhibitor who is not equipped for elaborate presentation may take the pretentious idea and moderate it to suit his theatre.

Last week we wrote of a prologue with mechanical and novelty effects very easily obtained, thus we shall be content this week to tell of a specially staged overture which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman used with merely a drop as background, with no effects other than lights.

Composition of Overture

The overture comprises four vocal and one instrumental numbers from "Cavalleria Rusticana," selected for the striking contrast between the opera and the feature picture "The Hottentot." The back drop, 30 x 40 feet in size, was painted after the set used at the Metropolitan Opera for "Cavalleria." It is a street scene with a cathedral at the side, the church itself casting a shadow over a great part of the scene. Thus, the only thing standing out except the church was a villa at the left, pure white. A deep blue Mestrum light was thrown over the whole, and the magenta X-rays were on full. Blue foots on small and large stages; entrance sopts deep blue, and Kliegel flood on orchestra deep blue. Transparent windows light green. The X-rays dimmed off as the curtains parted, revealing the scene. The opening number of "Cavalleria" was "Siciliana," by tenor singer, followed by a duet, "O Il Signore vi Manda," by soprano and baritone. Then the orchestra alone, with lights changed from blue to white, played the "Intermezzo," following which came a soprano solo, "Voi lo Sapete," and then "Regina Coeli," by soprano and mixed quartette. The latter with organ accompaniment.

This overture suggests many things for the exhibitor who wishes to use it in full or merely one number. The drop is simple, and may be used with merely border lights and foots. As the number progresses the lights may be dimmed out or switched off and the singer appear only in spot. If smaller space is used a transparent church window would be the thing, with which the organ would fit nicely.

Immense Theatre and Hotel to Be Built in Boston

NEXT month will see the start of work on an immense theatre and hotel project in the heart of Boston, the structure alone to cost $8,500,000. The financing of the enterprise is in the hands of the Tremont Street Realty Company, and the theatre will be run by the Olympia Theatres, Inc., which operates and owns the Gordon chain.

The site to be covered by the building will contain more than 55,000 square feet, and is bounded by Tremont, Hollis, Dillaway and Dore streets, just a block from the busiest corner in Boston. The Wilbur Theatre occupies part of the site, and the new structure will be built around it. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 4,200 and the hotel will have 500 rooms, each with private bath.

Nathan H. Gordon, president of the Olympia Theatres, Inc., has stated that the entertainment to be provided will be the equal if not the superior of that shown in the foremost houses in New York and Chicago. A feature will be a symphony orchestra of 50 pieces, which at times will give concerts in the lobby, supplemented by a large organ and an echo organ in the lobby. This lobby alone, it has been estimated, will accomodate more than 2,000 people. Another feature is that separate lobbies are to be provided, one for entering and the other for leaving the theatre, so that the crowds will not get in each other's way.

Motion pictures and musical entertainment will be the principal entertainment, although the stage, 125 by 42 feet, will be adequately equipped for any stage production, no matter how pretentious the spectacle.

There will be a tower over the entrance rising for 275 feet, and containing a full set of chimes on which it is planned to give popular concerts thrice daily. The hotel will be 12 stories in height.

San Francisco Gets Another House

Alex E. Levin, former manager of the Coliseum and attorney J. L. Levin, have announced the purchase from Jacob Weissbein of property at Geary and Eighteenth Streets and that plans have been drawn for the immediate erection of a magnificent theatre to seat 2400 persons. The house will cost approximately $230,000. This new theatre, the builders say, will be one of the finest residential theatres in America, involving the latest construction features, lighting and ornamentation and every known comfort. The general scheme of architecture is dignified Egyptian. No name has yet been chosen for this theatre, which is to be a ground floor house with a raised section.—Gross.

"Clinton Square" To Install Organ

A Robert Morton organ will be installed at the Clinton Square theatre in this city within the next twenty-eight days. The new lessees of the house are spending much money these days in improvements. The seating arrangement has been changed, while the interior of the house has also been redecorated. The exterior will be painted as soon as the weather permits. A split-week program will prevail at the house from now on.—Grant.

Carr & Schad Remodel Lyric

Carr & Schad, Inc., purchased outright the Reading Amusement Co.'s interests in the Lyric theatre, Reading, Pa. The Lyric was the first large combination theatre constructed in this city and is today one of the few Penn Street motion picture theatres fully equipped for vaudeville. The Lyric will be renovated, one of the big features being the installation of a new ventilating system. The booths will be fully equipped with the latest projection machines. A new electric sign with changeable letters will add materially to the exterior and a pipe organ will also be installed. The Lyric is the seventh link in the Carr & Schad chain.

Green Island Suitable For Theatres

With the Henry Ford plant at Green Island about to open, several persons have secured options during the last few days on buildings and sites there which would be suitable for motion picture theatres. Green Island is without any motion picture theatre at the present time. The island itself is located about six miles from Albany.—Grant.

The Laws of Magnetism

The Horseshoe Magnet

MAGNETS do not necessarily have to be straight, as in the bar type. Indeed, if the full strength is to be obtained both ends should be used in repelling or attracting objects. Such a type is the "Horseshoe" magnet shown in Fig. 6. It will be seen from a study of this figure that the lines of force flow through or thread the magnet from south to north pole. Leaving the north pole, they cross the air gap between magnet and soft iron bar, inducing or creating a south pole in that end of the bar. Hence these two unlike poles will attract each other. The lines of force then pass through the iron bar and in order to re-enter the south pole of magnet they must jump the second air gap shown. Now the point where the lines of force leave the iron bar to enter the south pole of the magnet becomes a north pole. A north pole is said to be induced in that end of the bar. Thus on the left side are two unlike poles and on right also. The result is that the drawing power of the magnet is practically doubled by bending it in shape of a "U" or "Horseshoe."

This type of magnet is much used in magnetos (which supply current for the ignition of gasoline engines), motors, generators and other types of electrical machinery.

The Power of Magnets

It is known that if a piece of iron is placed near the pole of a magnet it will be drawn into contact with the pole. There is a definite limit, however, to the distances at which a given magnetic pole will do this. In other words, if the iron bar is placed too far from the pole it will not be drawn to it. Careful experiments have shown that there is a definite relation between the force and distance separating the two objects. It is expressed as follows:

$$F = \frac{M}{d^2}$$

which means that the Force (F) exerted by a magnet (M) varies inversely as the square of the distance (d). This is illustrated in Fig. 7. Thus if the distance between the iron marble and magnetic pole is changed from 4 inches to 8 inches, doubled in other words, the force of magnet on the iron marble is only one-fourth what it was. If the distance is trebled, it is only one-ninth.

Suppose, however, we double the strength of the magnet itself or replace it with one which is twice as powerful, the force on the ball is also doubled. Hence we can also write which means that the force exerted between two poles (the other pole, M′, in this case is the induced pole in the iron ball) varies directly as the strength of the poles and inversely as the square of their distance apart.

Magnetic Elements

Not many metals or elements, however, are attracted by magnets. Indeed, those which are attracted are described as Paramagnetic (Par-a-mag-net-ic) and those which are repelled, Diamagnetic (Di-a-mag-net-ic).

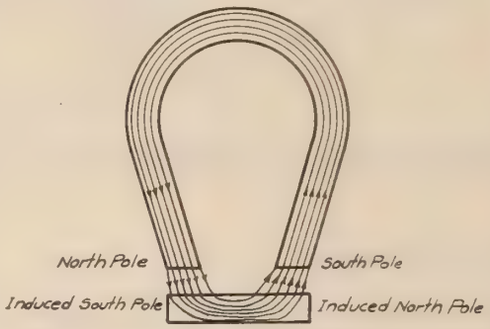

Figure 6

A list of each in the order of their attraction or repulsion is given below.

Lesson II—Part II

Professor Oersted, of the University of Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1819, happened to bring a magnetic compass near a wire through which a current of electricity was flowing, and was surprised to see the compass needle swing around quite sharply. Upon reversing the direction of the current through the wire the needle swung around in the opposite direction. It was also noted that it took a position at right angles to the wire in each case.

Thus, by accident, was discovered the relation between electricity and magnetism. The relation is simply this: A conductor, when carrying current, sets up a magnetic field and the plane of this magnetic field is at right angles to the current carrying conductor. This is illustrated in Fig. 8-A, which shows a conductor, through which a current of electricity is flowing, surrounded by a magnetic field. Fig. 8-B is an end view of the same wire, looking at it from the right side of the page, showing the circular lines of force around the wire. The black dot in the center of the wire indicates that the current is coming out of the wire toward the reader. A cross is used to show that the current is going in the opposite direction, or, into the wire and hence away from the reader.

When referring to a large number of lines of force the term Flux is used. Thus, in the case of Fig. 8, we would say that the wire was surrounded by magnetic flux. Now the circles representing this flux are drawn for the purpose of showing that such a flux exists about the wire and also to show its direction of rotation. Just as in the case of the bar type magnet similar lines were used to show the path of the flux.

As a matter of fact, this flux surrounds every part of the wire; indeed, every current-carrying conductor creates such a magnetic field, which extends over the entire circuit. The use of the word flux implies volume, and that is the sense in which it is used here. It is a volume composed of many, many lines of magnetic force reaching from the wire itself, where it is strongest, and extending far out into space, growing weaker and weaker as it leaves the wire. Indeed the law of the strength of a magnetic field, described in another article, applies, i.e., the strength at any point varies inversely as the square of the distance of that point from the wire.

It may be noted, from reference to Fig. 8, that arrows are marked on the lines of force which show the direction in which these lines are moving. The direction in which the magnetic flux moves is determined by the direction of the current through the wire. The method of finding it when that of the current is known is as follows: Grasp the wire with the right hand in such a manner that the thumb points in the direction in which the current is flowing. The four fingers will then point in the direction the flux is moving around the wire. This should be done in your mind, of course, and not by actually picking up the wire.

How Other Wires Affect the Flux

Suppose we place two wires parallel to each other (side by side) but a certain distance apart and pass current in the same direction through both of them. Each wire will be surrounded by a magnetic field, the direction of which can be determined by the rule of thumb method described above. Fig. 9-A shows these two wires encircled by their magnetic fields. Remember that the black dot in the center of the wire means that the current is leaving the wire and hence coming toward the reader, and a cross means that the current is going in the opposite direction.

Now suppose these two wires are moved closer and closer until they nearly touch each other. What happens to the flux? Simply this: referring again to Fig. 9-A we see that the flux on the right side of wire No. 1 is going up, and on the left side of wire No. 2 it is going down. Hence, when these two wires are brought very close together the flux of one wire is bucking that of the other. As a matter of fact, these two fluxes destroy or neutralize each other, and the result is as shown in Fig. 9-B. The flux now goes around both as if only one wire were there. If more wires are placed very close to these two, the flux will encircle all of them, as shown in Fig. 9-C. This only applies, however, where the current is going in the same direction through all of the wires.

Flux Surrounding a Coil

Suppose we wind a layer of covered, or insulated, wire on a tube in the same manner that an induction coil is wound. If, now, we remove the tube, a coil of wire will be left. The insulation will serve to keep the wires separated from each other by a small distance. Let us further assume that current is passing through the coil and that we cut the coil in half, showing a cross section. It will then appear as in Fig. 10. The black circles at the top show that the current is coming out of the wires at those points and the crosses at the bottom show that it is going into the wires.

Since the top row of circles is exactly the same as is Fig. 9-C, the flux will move in the same direction also. At the bottom, however, since the current is going in the opposite direction, the flux will also go in the opposite direction as shown. A study of this figure will show that on the top of the coil and outside of it, the flux is moving to the left, while on the bottom and outside of it, it is also moving to the left. The lines of force then curve in toward the center and pass through the coil to the right in the direction of the long arrow. The direction of the flux, of course, will depend upon that of the current, but in any case these two flux directions will be opposite.

By comparing this figure with the diagram of a bar magnet, shown in another article, it will be seen that they are the same. Hence this coil is a magnet. That it acts as one can be proved by placing a piece of iron near it. The iron will be sucked up into the center of the coil and held there. If the north pole of a bar magnet is placed near the right end of the coil it will be repelled. This coil, while carrying current, is an electro-magnet. Another name for it is solenoid (sol-e-noid).

Permeability

In a preceding article the statement was made that iron offers an easier path for the passage of magnetic flux than does air. Certain other metals, such as nickel and cobalt, also possess this property in varying degrees. This is called permeability (per-me-a-bil-i-ty) and it is the ratio of the magnetic conductivity of the metal to the magnetic conductivity of the air path. It is quite similar to electrical resistance. Thus the permeability of iron is roughly two (2), that is, twice as much flux will pass through iron as through air. This, of course, assumes that the cross-

GOLD SEAL — WHERE-EVER USED — THE MARK OF PERFECTION

Little Stories of Successful Exhibitors No. 7

John H. Kunsky

Detroit will always be favored for two great distinctions: the home of the flivver and the site of John H. Kunsky's beautiful theatres.

Born in Detroit of Bohemian parents, Mr. Kunsky is another example of the fact that the big Moguls among the exhibitors are those who plugged up the ladder from the humblest of surroundings.

The John H. Kunsky who was once a poor boy is now the John H. Kunsky who controls the Detroit Capitol, one of the five biggest theatres in the United States, the rest of the Kunsky chain including the Madison, Adams, Columbia, Liberty, De Luxe, Alhambra, Strand, Garden, Empress, Royal, and La Salle Theatres.

The managing director of this chain, Mr. George W. Trendle, has had a GOLD SEAL Automatic Ticket Register installed in every theatre in the circuit and he says: "When a new Kunsky theatre is opened, a GOLD SEAL machine will always be out in front. It saves time, it saves money, and our patrons appreciate its snappy service."

When GOLD SEAL equipment has the endorsement of every successful exhibitor, and by successful exhibitor we mean the man who makes money with a 400-seat theatre as well as the man who controls a 400-theatre circuit, you can bank on a GOLD SEAL machine to make money for you.

A postcard brings full particulars.

section, or diameter, of the paths is the same for both.

It is for this reason that iron cores are used in electro-magnets, transformers, motors, etc. If an iron rod be placed in the center of the coil, as shown in Fig. 11, more lines of force will pass through it, the flux will be more concentrated, and so the magnet will have a greater lifting power, it can do more work.

The lifting power could also be increased in other ways. As the current through the coil is increased, the flux through it is also increased, and hence the lifting power, too. If more turns of wire were added, as for instance, by winding another layer on top of the first one, the flux would again be increased, as would also the lifting power. The flux, by the way, would increase as the current was raised until a certain point was reached and then it would increase more slowly. That is, a greater and greater current would be required in order to obtain the same increase in flux until, at last, apparently no additional flux could be passed through the coil by raising the current. The iron is then said to be saturated; that is, it can hold no more, just as a sponge dipped into a pail of water becomes saturated.

From what has been said above it can be seen that, for any given set of conditions, the strength of an electro-magnet depends upon the number of turns a wire used in its construction and upon the current flowing through the wire, or the lifting power depends upon the number of ampere turns (amperes X turns).

Officers Elected for 306

On Thursday evening, December 28th, 1922, at the meeting rooms of the Bronx Electrical Contractors' Association, the annual election of officers took place. The following is the result: Morris J. Rotker, former secretary of Local 306, was again re-elected as President for another year. The installation of officers was held on the 11th of January, and some of the most prominent lights of the electrical industry attended to see the man who is looked up to to do things for the electrical men in the Bronx, New York City, and wish him success.

At the annual election of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local 306, Morris J. Rotker was also elected to serve as Executive Board member for the year 1923.

A Finished Product

EACH STANDARD PRINT is a finished product. Each one is perfectly waxed and needs no further attention by distributor or exhibitor. The assembled pieces are so welded together that each reel is one continuous film, not a collection of varying lengths imperfectly patched together. This service means much both to distributors and showmen. It means that STANDARD PRINTS are ready for the projection room when they leave our plant.

STANDARD SERVICE is as dependable as STANDARD PRINTS. The excellence of our work is as definitely assured as the promptness with which each daily consignment of film arrives at the studio for inspection, by producer, director and cinematographer. The foremost producers of the West relying upon STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES are getting a new conception of laboratory co-operation, just as distributors are getting tangible proof of the superiority of STANDARD PRINTS.

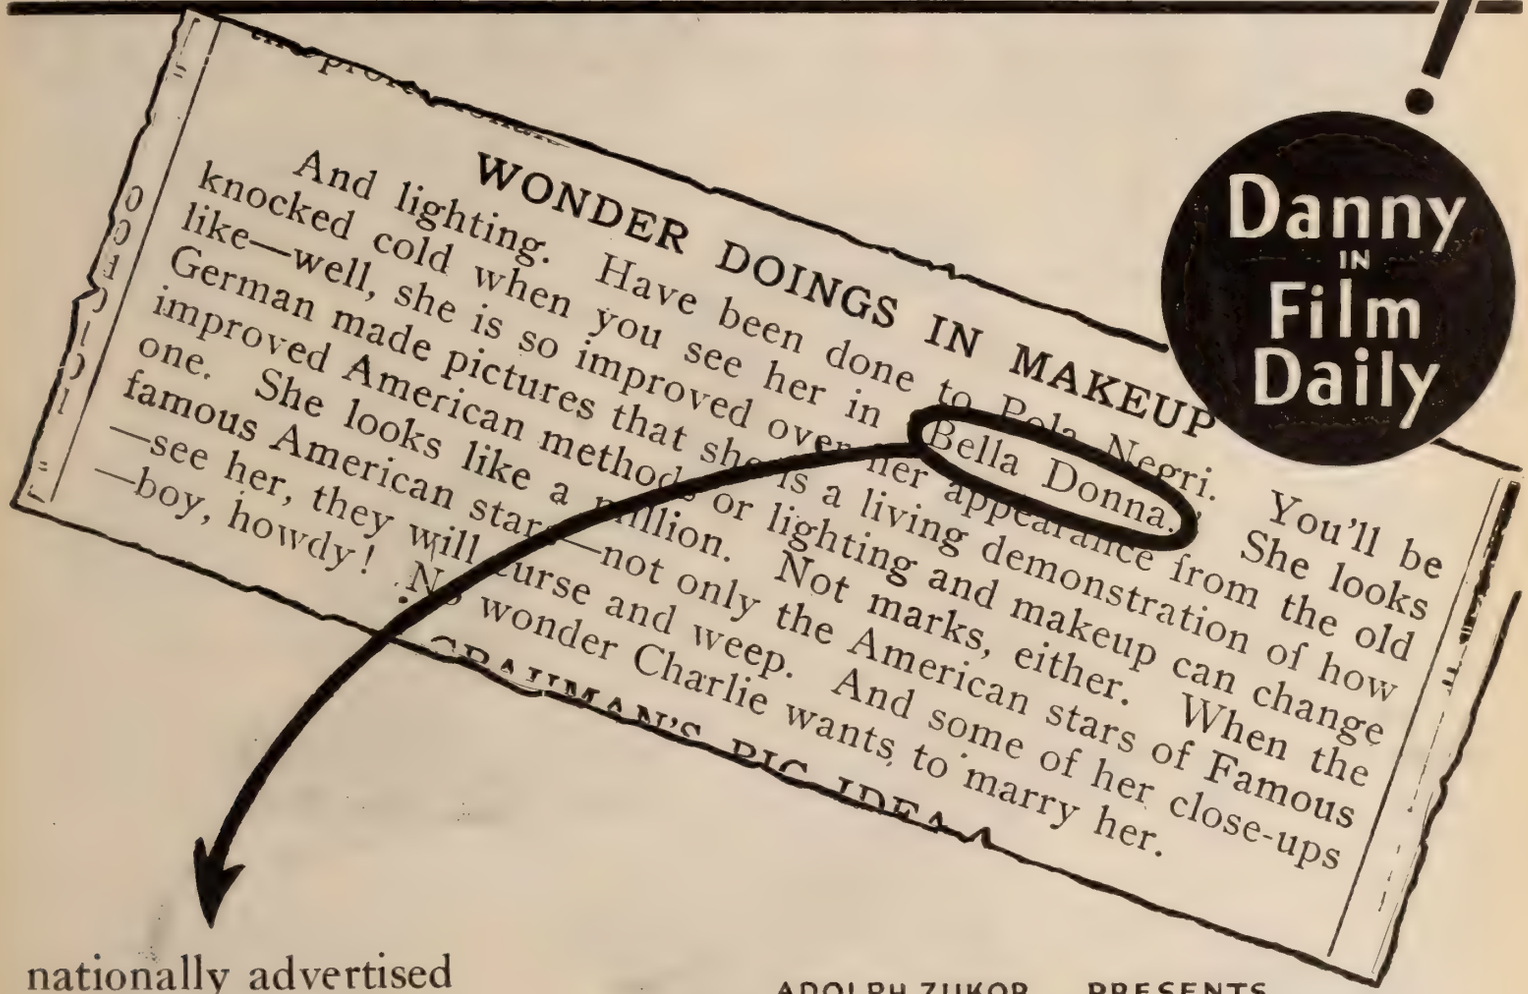
-and then Danny saw "Bella Donna"—!



WONDER DOINGS IN MAKEUP
And lighting. Have been done to Pola Negri. You'll be knocked cold when you see her in "Bella Donna." She looks like—well, she is so improved over her appearance from the old German made pictures that she is a living demonstration of how improved American methods or lighting and makeup can change one. She looks like a million. Not marks, either. When the famous American stars—not only the American stars of Famous —see her, they will curse and weep. And some of her close-ups —boy, howdy! No wonder Charlie wants to marry her.

Pola Negri in "Bella Donna" opened today to the biggest crowds in the history of the Rialto. I doubt if any picture ever attracted the tremendous attendance that this production did. Fully 15,000 people blocked the streets, it being totally impossible to control crowds. "Bella Donna" is a picture Famous Players can be proud of. "Bella Donna" has all Los Angeles talking.

Charles Chaplin in the New Edition of "Dough and Dynamite"

One of the most absurdly funny of all the masterpieces of fun, this picture has been made funnier than ever by the reconstruction just completed by

Syd Chaplin

New Publicity—posters—lobby display

The revival of Keystone Comedies, of which this is the first, is being carried through on a business basis that means money to the Exhibitor.

They are not cheap. Everything from film to three sheets new, fresh, unique, attractive. But, there is no half million dollar overhead to eat up the profit!

This is one of the pictures that made Chaplin famous!

Especially big profits for the largest houses.

Your Box Office is Paging You, Mr. Exhibitor

IT may be that you have signed for a series of 103 Super-Specials.

When is a Super-Special a bum picture? Answer: 102 times out of 103.

Three elements make up greatness in a picture so far as you are concerned.

FIRST is quality, that arouses tributes from even the hardest-boiled critics.

SECOND is human appeal, that sends your audience out satisfied.

THIRD is profit. No matter how much of the other two elements the picture has, if you cannot make a profit, the picture is poor so far as you are concerned.

PREFERRED PICTURES have captured the critics and pleased the public.

AND they are sold at a fair price.

WARNING!

TO PIRATE PRODUCERS WHO WOULD TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THE TRIUMPH OF "THE FOOL"

I BELIEVE "The Fool" to be the greatest play ever written by an American.

It is certainly the most successful.

Besides being a great play, "The Fool" is a unique play, an utter novelty, a play wholly unlike any other ever produced. This fortunate fact makes it easy to brand the present mania for presenting more plays of the same type, and, I think, will make it easy to protect our rights.

Piracy cannot be disguised by slight alterations, or by claiming that some one scene has been used before. It is idea, theme, purpose, and combination of ideas that establish theft.

William Fox paid an unheard-of price for the motion picture rights of "The Fool." With seven productions built or building, and seven companies engaged, our investment, combined with Mr. Fox's, runs close to half a million. Our joint rights are worth many times that. It seems unnecessary to say that we will protect those rights by every means known to law, and that we will throw our utmost resources into any fight to punish persons who attempt to rob us of them.

SELWYN & COMPANY.

NEWSPAPER reports and rumors emanating from Los Angeles, California, indicate that plans are being made for the production of several motion pictures based upon the theme of Channing Pollock's stage triumph,

"THE FOOL"

IT is gratifying to learn that both the author and the stage producer of this exceptional play will take every possible precaution to protect the photoplay rights of this production controlled by Fox Film Corporation.

Fox Film Corporation

FOR ten years I worked on "The Fool." For ten months I tried to find a producer. Nobody believed in the play. At last I found a managemen —the Selwyns—with courag enough to venture and t fight. William Fox has ha the vision and enterpris to pay for the motion pic ture rights the largest sun ever paid for those right in any play.

And now, when success i assured, when other manager and picture producers hav done the work and taken th risk, men of the type tha was offered the play, are pre pared to steal what they re fused to buy.

Everywhere I read an nouncements and adver tisements of colorable imi tations of "The Fool." This seems to me more thar ordinary dishonesty. It seems to me, too, a sort of tes whether literary property car be protected in America. Ir simply keeping faith with the Selwyns and William Fox, and for the future protection of the American Author and Dramatist, I have instructed my attorneys to cooperate to their utmost in prosecuting any and all persons who produce or present any imitation of my play, or any combination of its scenes and characters. There is no limit and there will be no let-up in this fight.

"Nazimova's 'Salome' marks a distinct departure from the conventional pictures which pour from American studios," said the Philadelphia Public Ledger, as this feature played a second big week at the Aldine Theatre more than doubling the expected box-office gross.

"The Nazimova 'Salome' is entrancing in its curious beauty and fascinating in its action throughout."

" 'Salome' refutes those who claim that the screen cannot do original and creative things," said the Evening Public Ledger. "It is sensational, remarkable, brilliant, artistic, and was cheered to the echo by thousands."

Dear Mr. Goldberg:

In reply to your letter of March 2nd in reference to the picture "MESSAGE OF EMILE COUE", this picture pleased the majority of our patrons. In fact, so much so that a number of them came back the second time to see it. Also had a number of people to see this picture who had not been in this Theatre since I came here one year ago.

I also appreciate the fact that the Savoy Theatre, Princeton, Ky. had the privilege of showing this extraordinary picture first in Kentucky and Tennessee.

VARIETY.

One of the surprises of the street is that the little Cameo, on 42d street, which heretofore has been looked on as a house that could possibly hold $7,500 on the week by stretching the walls a little, should have grossed over $11,000 two weeks ago with "Down to the Sea in Ships" and to have come back on its second week with a gross of $8,100.

Cameo—"Down to the Sea in Ships" (Hodkinson. Seats 539; scale 55-75; third week). Erroneously reported last week this Hodkinson production only got $8,100 its first week at this house. The picture drew $11,490.75, breaking every existing record for the little house from the first day it started. Giving a schedule of eight shows daily now as against six and seven a day, the regular policy. Last week, the second of the same picture, the gross was $8,197. No doubt the picture is a draw, but the surprise to all concerned, particularly the house management of the Cameo itself, is that the little theatre could play to so great a gross as it did for the initial week of this production.

The CAMEO engagement of "DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS" has been one of the outstanding picture sensations of the New York season.

Not only did it smash all records at the outset, but it has consistently forged ahead in public approval since the hour it opened.

On the Wednesday of its fourth week, as these pages go to press it registered one of the largest mid-week records of receipts ever known since the CAMEO opened.

"Now in it's fourth

And well might "the street" be amazed at this record!

During the first week of the CAMEO engagement, more than 16,000 spectators witnessed Elmer Clifton's super-special.

While it was breaking all records for the house in New York, down in Baltimore during the same week, 33,367 admissions were paid into the CENTURY THEATRE in six days.

At the GARRICK, St. Paul, and the GARRICK, Minneapolis, "Down To The Sea In Ships" opened to greater business than "Tess Of The Storm Country" and held the pace throughout the week.

At the ACADEMY of MUSIC, Haverhill, Mass., and at GORDAN'S, Brockton, Mass, it smashed house records against the stiffest sort of competition, including "Robin Hood."

Within two weeks, TOM MOORE'S RIALTO, Washington; the GRAND THEATRE, Cincinnati; the PERSHING THEATRE, St. Louis, and other representative houses throughout the country will know the tremendous box-office pull exerted by "DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS."

"MASTERS OF MEN"

by

MORGAN ROBERTSON

The greatest story of the sea ever written!

A thrilling story of he-men, men who wear hair on their chests, whose veins run hot with red fighting blood!

A blunt, vigorous yarn of a boy's fight upward against overwhelming odds, where fight means a hard fist and prime muscle, high courage and a ready wallop!

Shanghaied! Drugged by crimps and flung insensible into the hell hole forward, where sweating, brow-beaten men live like beasts scourged to their tasks with curses and belaying pin.

The sea! The flavor of salt in the nostrils; the odor of pitch in the air, the snapping of wind-swept canvas crackling like a machine gun; the creaking, singing wood straining as she rides the high waves! All the magic and lure of adventure, the Spanish Main and sailormen!

Love! A timid boy's unspoken dream of his heart's desire; a girl too old fashioned to offer love unbidden; a lad's sacrifice of youth's dearest possession---honor---to protect her from the shame of another's crime; the confusion of bitter misunderstandings that threaten life-long broken hearts!

Uncle Sam's bluejackets! The fighting men of the greatest nation in the world, and what they think and how they live; their loyalty and cheer and youth, eternal, living, fighting youth! The careless devil-may-care "gob," incorrigible, loyal; impudent and loveable!

Romance! The sea spells romance. Red sunsets turn green waves to crashing mountains of blood; noon suns spread gold upon the bosom of the sea, gold that beckons and calls to youth to gather its riches; never-ending mirages of golden bowls at rainbows' ends. And, the sea gives no riches; only character and manhood, bitterly squeezed out of its cold, hard business.

Wholesome, clean, healthy! A boy's life of adventure, free from tawdry conflicts and sex illusions, based on fact gathered by one who served among men, who loved men, who admired men and who wished young America to so live that he might become a man! The trash of silly, social temptations has no place in this story of a boy who became the master of the man.

The Yankee ever has been master of the sea! Decatur, John Paul Jones---history has written the feats of great American seamen into all time. Here is a story of the making of such men; men who acted and argued later; men out of whom Dewey and Schley and Sampson and "Fighting Bob" Evans were chosen, each for his day's work for the Stars and Stripes. Shifty-footed men, with a right and left punch and a keen eye and a high sense of honor and guts to go the limit!

Dick Halpin is the lad you wanted to be; and I wanted to be! He's the fellow we dreamed of, whose fighting courage we envied. He's the boy that assumed another's petty crime and ran away to sea to live it down, that the girl he loved might not be shamed and humiliated by the revelation of her brother's weakness. He's the fellow you and I used to talk about; that lad of strength and honor we built with boyish imaginations up in the haymow, or while idling with a home-made fishin' rod down by the creek. He's your kind and my kind and because we had fathers and mothers to make our way easier we never managed to be him; but we wanted to and we'll live our dreams again with Dick Halpin in this vivid, living story, "Masters of Men."

A master of men wrote this great sea tale. A man whose life was as hard as the diamonds he cut and who never wrote a line until he had lived beyond an average man's age; a man who took a beating at the hands of a brutal second mate with a smile, and who administered a beating with equal cheerfulness; a man who knew the sea and a sailorman's life; who criticized rightfully Kipling and who wrote his first sea tale to prove that a man who knew the sea could write a better story of the sea; a man who earned little by his pen and who starved while he wrote; the greatest writer of sea stories in all literature.

Morgan Robertson, a master of men, wrote the last word in thrilling sea stories when he wrote

8012—In 1920 when the first audit of circulation of motion picture trade papers was made MOTION PICTURE NEWS was certified for 8012 exhibitor circulation and the only other paper submitting to an audit was given less than half this exhibitor circulation.

8374—In 1921 MOTION PICTURE NEWS' audit was 8374 exhibitor circulation and the only other paper submitting to an audit this year, had less than half this exhibitor circulation.

8132—The 1922 audit of MOTION PICTURE NEWS just completed shows 8132 exhibitor circulation. Watch for the audits of other papers which have been building for three years to this end!

The noteworthy thing is that MOTION PICTURE NEWS' super-circulation has been a sustained one—due to renewals—plain, indisputable proof that the reader wants, continues to pay for, reads and relies upon this one paper.

Note: These 8132 theatre owner subscribers own, manage and book (by our records) little less than 12,000 theatres.

A. G. Clapp, manager of The Sonora Theatre, Sonora, Calif., after showing "Mighty Lak a Rose" wired First National as follows:

"Through the kindness of Edwin Carewe I had the pleasure of showing his latest picture to the people of Sonora Tuesday evening. I have had more good comments on this picture than any other I have ever shown. Most people say it is the best I have ever had while some say it is the best they have ever seen. All agree that it is a wonderful picture and wonderful entertainment. My personal opinion is that here is a picture that will make every exhibitor more friends than any picture he has shown in a long time for it is real entertainment in every sense of the word. I want you to give me a date on it as soon as possible as every one here is talking about it and wants to see it again."

classic, they may be a bit surprised at the simplicity of the production but they'll soon forget that part of it once Jackie gets his stride.

For approximately the first seven hundred feet Jackie is conspicuous by his absence, the story dealing with the life of his father and mother when he is an infant. Incidentally, the baby used is adorable and lends much to this portion of the film. This prologue, however, could have been shortened considerably.

With the end of the first reel, however, Jackie makes his appearance as the now motherless boy, living at the Holden farm where his mother fled for refuge when she unjustly believed her husband faithless. From the beginning Jackie holds his audience with a firm hand and when the farm is being auctioned and he pleads for his violin—it's pathos with a wallop. Immediately after comes the humorous scene in which Jackie pleads with a neighbor's boy to let his pet pig "Mildred" stay with the latter's pig "Napoleon" while he is away.

Jackie's big scene comes, however, when Gallo, the once famous violinist, now a street musician who has taken Jackie in, goes to "sleep" forever to the tune of Jackie's lullaby. Heedless of Ganelli, the great artist and really his unknown father, whom he has brought to his old teacher's bedside, Jackie cries aloud for his "daddy" to wake up. Tears stream down his cheeks and his heart-break will bring a lump to the throat of the most hardened.

Another Coogan Success That Promises Big Business

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You should not have the slightest trouble in getting them in for this one, and they'll be satisfied with it after they've seen it. It's decidedly different from "Oliver Twist" and you can promise plenty of humor and a good deal of pathos, in a story that while it may be convenient, is warranted to bring out all of Jackie's talents.

A trailer of Jackie in the bathtub or cutting spaghetti with a scissor should bring them back for the whole thing, and the box office receipts will in all probability be big. It's sure fire audience stuff and you can count on Jackie to help you hang out the S. R. O. sign.

Freedom

DR. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS with two square blows knocked all arguments for censorship into smithereens at Albany last week.

We have filed many anti-censorship statements in this publication during the past ten years; and facts to dispute the principle and practice of censorship are plentiful enough.

But it has remained for a leader in thought, impartial and speaking as an American citizen, to put his feet solidly upon the two master planks of this whole question.

And these are: American liberty and the American home.

We give gratefully Dr. Hillis' arguments to the exhibitor and newspaper.

No more than these two should ever be needed by loyal Americans; and no counter argument should ever confuse the mind of a loyal American.

Number one: Dr. Hillis says that censorship violates the principle of individual liberty upon which this country was founded, namely, the right of every individual to make as decent a job of his or her life as can be made by freedom of effort.

Now, there can't be much argument over this principle.

It was announced very clearly, very simply by the great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, and the greatest of all civil wars was fought on this as one of two principles. The other was the union of the states.

If Lincoln was wrong, if this is not the principle of American liberty then the Civil War was godless and useless and criminal carnage.

John Drinkwater says of this same principle in his book on Lincoln: "The only natural right of the individual worth bothering about is his right freely and completely to realize himself. The only real progress in the world comes when a man, for good or ill, is allowed wholly to be himself. You cannot make him really better than he is by legislation; all you can do by legislation is, when he has been stunted in his growth and not allowed to become fully himself, to prevent the truncated vision of himself from being a nuisance to his fellows."

And again: "When an educational system engages itself, as it too often does, in training a child to a preconceived end instead of letting him frame a purpose of his own or when a universal and equal franchise is used by a majority to deprive a minority of self-determination in some purely personal affair, you have the seeds of tyranny bearing their rank fruit in systems established in the name of liberty."

These are eternal truths!

The Chases and the Bowlbys are too ignorant or hysterical to know them or knowing them not honest enough to admit them.

Dr. Hillis' second plank concerns the home —our homes, all homes.

The protection of children rests with their parents not with official bureaus to censor pictures, newspapers, books, etc. The obligation rests with the home not with the theatre. Laziness alone can prompt a parent to leave the home to the state.

And Dr. Hillis is right, by every honest and sensible reason.

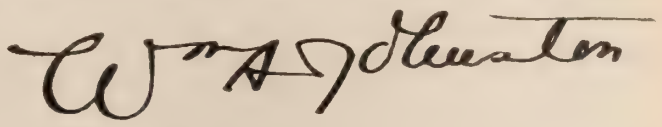
We write this editorial not to relieve our own feelings, but to give in a nutshell to the exhibitor for his use the simple truth about censorship.



PICTURES AND PEOPLE

AND so it came to pass that the Paramount Pep Club gave its third annual ball at the Commodore Hotel last Friday night. Everybody connected with Famous Players in the East was present and the list of guests included divers and sundry persons associated with other film companies. The dancing began at nine o'clock and was interrupted at midnight by large groups of entertainers who occupied the stage for two hours.

The choruses of several Broadway shows, "The Gingham Girl," "Wildflower," "Lady Butterfly," "Sun Showers," and the Tiller girls from the "Follies," went through their evolutions in putting over the song hits. Various interpolated numbers were introduced by comedians and comediennes from current attractions. And then on with the dance until four in the morning, at which hour the girls from several cabaret shows put over their stuff. If we had any vote in the matter we would hand the ensemble from the Boardwalk the grand prize for executing their steps with oodles of pep and ginger. The cold gray dawn found hundreds still parked in the big ballroom.

Among the screen and stage celebrities who attended were Dorothy Dalton, Tom Meighan, Glenn Hunter, Ann Forrest, James Rennie, Dorothy Gish, Texas Guinan, Mahlon Hamilton, Hope Hampton, Lew Cody, Johnny Hines, Sheldon Lewis, Virginia Pearson, Edward Earle, Olin Howland, Duncan sisters, Arthur Housman, Allan Dwan, Victor Herbert, George MacQuarrie, Mabel Withee, Reine Riano, Andrew Tombes, Carl Randall, Penrhyn Stanlaws, Mary Carr, May Collins, Shannon Day, Joe King, Zena Keefe, Ben Hendricks, Mary Thurman, Nita Naldi, Johnny Dooley, Ed. Gallagher, Benny Leonard, Evelyn Law and several others—not forgetting film executives, publicity experts and ladies and gentlemen of the press.

WORD reaches us that the Hollywood Studio Club is making a Drive this week for a one hundred and fifty thousand dollar building fund, thirty thousand to be secured from citizens of Hollywood and Los Angeles and the balance from people and firms of the film industry.

The club is under the supervision of the Y. W. C. A. and serves as a home for girls working in pictures. The present buildings accommodate thirty and the proposed enlargement will increase accommodations to one hundred. Mrs. Cecil De Mille is chairman of the Drive Committee.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, accompanied by a rare coat of tan and golf paraphernalia, etc.,—the tan having been picked up at Palm Beach and the golf stuff at various sporting goods stores on his own Mich. Boul.—has left Chicago for Los Angeles. He plans to spend two weeks on the Coast and will confer with Joe Aller, resident head of the Hollywood laboratory, besides visiting several western studios. Mr. Rothacker has disposed of his stock in United Studios, following its sale to Joe Schenck, and has resigned from the United board of directors.

THE many friends of Robert Brunton are shocked to learn of his death in London on the fourth of this month after two weeks' illness of cerebral hemorrhage. Mr. Brunton came to the United States from Scotland several years ago, having served as a scenic artist for Sir Henry Irving—with whom he continued after the English tragedian visited America on one of his tours. He then became associated with the Shuberts as a scenic artist and later acted in a similar capacity for Oliver Morosco.

During the days of Ince-Triangle he began his screen career, serving as art director and production manager. Of late Mr. Brunton has been executive head of Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles. The film industry mourns the loss of such an energetic leader of the screen.

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF REVIEW gave its asterisks last week to "Daddy," the Jackie Coogan picture, released by First National, "Where the Pavement Ends," produced by Rex Ingram for Metro, and "The Covered Wagon," Paramount's big special.

JAMES CRUZE, who will henceforth be pointed out as the man who directed "The Covered Wagon," has arrived in New York to be present at the theatre premiere of the big feature when it is launched at the Criterion this Friday night. While in the metropolitan sector Mr. Cruze will film a large number of scenes at the Long Island studio for his production, "Hollywood," which he started several weeks ago in the West.

SPEAKING of "The Covered Wagon," we are keeping our ears to the ground and the rumblings which we have caught indicate that Paramount has its biggest and best production in this vital record of the pioneer days of '49. Certainly the company has been justified in putting over an expensive advertising campaign, exploiting 24 sheets, fillers on the programs of their theatres, and a telegram campaign in which the United States Senators have co-operated with enthusiastic messages.

Just now John C. Flinn is speeding cross-country from Los Angeles, traveling the very route of the pioneers—with safety and comfort. His telegrams to Jesse Lasky which are featured in a two-column box among the theatrical advertisements of the New York dailies, point a strong contrast between the sure and swift journey of today and the hazardous journey of the pioneers—when ten miles a day was considered good speed. Mr. Flinn is bringing back a print of the rich and vital epic.

ARTHUR H. SAWYER, who has returned to Los Angeles from New York, announces the formation of Associated Pictures, capitalized at two million dollars—with Marcus Jacobowsky as president. The company will make eight features during the year—the first production to start work upon the completion of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" for Metro.

OTHER transcontinental travelers include F. M. Sanford of Sanford Productions, who is journeying to New York with a print of his special, "Follow Me," and James R. Grainger, who has returned to New York from Los Angeles where he has been for a few weeks in connection with Goldwyn and Neilan productions.

THE FILM RENTER and Moving Picture News, over its editor's signature pleads for a Will Hays to preside over the destinies of the British film industry. Ernest W. Fredman, the editor, after showing what Mr. Hays has accomplished in America, states that the time is ripe to appoint a Will Hays as the head of affairs in the trade—a man who would command the confidence of the Government, the Press and Lombard Street. Mr. Fredman argues that such a man could be the arbitrator between exhibitor and renter, and there would never be the slightest recourse to law suits. The censorship board would come under his control, and both sides of the industry would know where they stood.

To quote the editor: "If we had a similar personality over here, could not the same idea (the uniform contract) be employed without the ceaseless bickering and fruitless disputes that have arisen during the past two years? Where could we obtain such a man? Is it not possible to induce Lloyd George or Sir Eric Geddes? Either one of these men would prove a bulwark against the attacks that are increasingly evident each day, and would proclaim to the world that if it was good enough for him to take on such a post, then there must be serious business in such an industry.

"The time is ripe for a Will Hays. Let us look to the future, and if we can secure the services of a great personality such as I have outlined to take command of this industry, it will be the greatest thing that has ever been done in its history."

THE Kinematograph Weekly, on the other hand, contributes a full-page article on the uniform contract which is not so enthusiastic. This British trade paper says: "There is a good deal in America's new 'uniform' Contract to rejoice the heart of an exhibitor—that he lives in England. The document has been acclaimed as a wonderful monument to the statesmanship of Will Hays. No doubt it is an achievement to get all the American distributors to agree to a single form, the more so as the 'Uniform Contract,' though described by an American trade magazine as 'the strongest distributor's contract ever presented to an exhibitor,' cuts out some clauses in older forms very obviously in favour of the distributor.

"One of the most obvious features of the Contract is that it is designed for a market in which block booking and blind booking flourish with all the old and evil luxuriance. Just how viciously the American Trade is organized is clear from the fact that the exhibitor is expected to rejoice in the fact that the films for which he contracts will actually be delivered to him. These films must now be identified by letter or by the names of stars, and if postponed in issue must be delivered on a later date."

The Kinematograph Weekly attacks from several angles and concludes by stating that "there is something in being a British exhibitor!"

MABEL NORMAND has returned to Los Angeles after an absence of several months in Europe vacationing. She expects to start work shortly in Mack Sennett's story, "Mary Ann."

IT occasionally happens that a spectator will fall asleep on a picture if there isn't anything inspiring in the action to keep him awake. The wise observer who has a penchant for using a comfortable theatre seat may start his nap at the introductory reel, waking up at the end knowing that everything has been O. K. Some houses have alert ushers who can tell a snorer from the bass violinist. Our advice to the nodding patron is to find a secluded seat and if the picture proves disappointing, enjoy a pleasant nap by keeping his mouth closed tightly and not recline too far on his back.

Apropos of the sleeping question allow us to introduce Abraham Owen, a respected resident of Albany, New York, who furnished a near tragedy to himself and a good laugh to the citizens of his fair city when they read of his experience while visiting the Regent Theatre one night last week. Mr. Owen works hard at his trade all day. The picture was uninteresting so he concluded to take a brief nap. The owner of the theatre failed to notice Mr. Owen an hour later when he closed up for the night. At 1:45 o'clock, the napper awakened. The house was in utter darkness. After a few moments, realizing his predicament, the man made his way the best he could to one of the exits. He found the door barred and bolted. At first he pounded. Then he shouted. Sergeant McGinn, of the Second Precinct happened by and released Mr. Owen.

The moral of this story is that anyone who finds a poor picture on his hands and wants to enjoy a nap should advise the usher to wake him up on time or else bring an alarm clock.

HERE'S a little breath of humor from the Kinematograph Weekly, a British trade paper. As an example of the gentle art of making the best of a bad job, the following handbill, distributed by the management of the Gaiety, Aliwal North, Transvaal, South Africa, certainly takes some beating: "APOLOGY.—We apologize most humbly for the absolutely rotten picture shown at the Gaiety on Monday night. It was bad, DAMNED BAD! It was ghastly, it was a tragedy, but it wasn't our fault! We paid good money (our money) for that picture, so please curse the people who sent it to us."

Here comes an adroit bit of humor. Continuing, the handbill says: "Those that left the theatre before the show was over we do not blame, but to those that had the courage to stick it out to the bitter end we offer our congratulations. It is such bulldog courage, such brave tenacity of purpose that made our Empire what it is today and helped to win the war! And that's that!"

HEDDA HOPPER, who has appeared in several screen productions in character parts, has returned from the pleasure resorts of Europe. St. Moritz, Venice, Nice, Monte Carlo, Paris and London were included in her itinerary.

BERTRAM MILLHAUSER, who for the past several years has been identified with George B. Seitz serial productions for Pathe, has accepted an engagement on the scenario staff of Universal and is en route to the west coast.

In addition to his work on stories and continuities in connection with Seitz productions, Mr. Millhauser also directed two of his own serials. His work in Universal City will be along similar lines.

THE Film Renter and Moving Picture News, a British trade paper of the industry, in its issue of March the third, pays a eulogy to our own William A. Johnston for his tribute to the genius of Will Hays in evolving the new contract in America. After quoting several salient paragraphs of Mr. Johnston's editorial, it advises the leaders of the British industry to catch the importance of the unity brought about by the uniform contract. "America has settled its differences on the question, and it is up to this country to do likewise. It has taken many months to do it on the other side, but it has been accomplished. There is a great lesson in this for the British industry, and it is conveyed in the few words, 'Go thou and do likewise!'"

Saenger Answers Federal Complaint

E. V. Richards and Also Stanley Company Deny Attempt to Create Monopoly

ANSWERS to the amended complaint of the Federal Trade Commisson against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, Ernest V. Richards, and other respondents, have been filed by the Saenger organization and Mr. Richards. The principal denial of both complaints is identically expressed as follows:

"Respondent denies that it entered into any program with the other respondents or with any other firm or corporation of acquiring or controlling by purchase or otherwise, motion picture theatres throughout the United States, or of compelling and coercing exhibitors throughout the United States to book and exhibit all the motion picture films produced or distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation or of inducing or compelling such exhibitors to book a substantial number or block of films unless the exhibitors also book a substantial number or block of their films, the exhibition of all of which would take up either the whole or a large portion of their exhibiting time and close their theatre to the films of producers or distributors who are competitors of said Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; and this respondent denies that it did any of the other matters or things charged in said complaint."

In the answer of Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Corporation and Jules E. Mastbaum to the amended complaint of the Federal Trade Commission, Morris Wolf, attorney for the preceding respondents, after denying the Commission's allegations of confederation with other interests "to hinder competition in the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures," continues as follows:

"Indeed, from the standpoint of these respondents it would be a misfortune for any particular producing company to be able to control the industry, as fair competition is necessary in order to maintain high standards of production and fair dealing between producers and exhibitors.

"We have not acquired or controlled, or attempted to acquire or control any motion picture theatres by coercion or intimidation, and have not used the means and methods specified in paragraph 10, or any of them, or any other unlawful means or methods to that end."

Sunday Opening Cases Up to Ohio Supreme Court

Is a motion picture show a "theatrical or dramatic performance"? That's the question that is up to the Ohio State Supreme Court to decide. The decision will affect the motion picture theatre owners of Findlay, who have been fighting the blue Sunday laws for the past two years. When theatre owners were arrested for keeping open on Sunday, Judge William F. Duncan, judge of the Common Pleas Court, ruled that Sunday movies are in opposition to the state amusement law prohibiting Sunday theatricals. The case was appealed, and on March 1st the grand jury sustained the decision of the common pleas court. The motion picture theatre managers of Findlay were indicted through charges preferred by the Civic Welfare League.

On March 6th, another appeal was filed by the movie men, W. K. Rickards and Edgar B. Gilmore, representing four motion picture theatres, asking a review of the injunction suit they brought against the mayor and the chief of police of Findlay to prevent them from closing the movies on Sunday. The Ohio law stating that "theatrical and dramatic" performances are prohibited on Sunday was passed before there were any movies.

Allen Theatres Assets for Sale; Houses Likely to Change Hands; New Chain Possible

THE assets of Allen Theatres, Limited, Toronto, are being offered for sale by G. T. Clarkson, Toronto, the authorized trustee of the company, and it is expected that the thirty-six moving picture theatres comprising the Allen chain in Canada will change hands within the next six weks, according to official announcement by Mr. Clarkson. The decision to sell the Allen houses has come as a surprise in view of the fact that the majority creditors of the company came to an agreement early last fall to grant an extension of time to the Allens for the settlement of claims. The liabilities to be covered in the sales amount to approximately $1,250,000, it is announced.

The assignee has issued a statement in which he points out that the operation of the Allen theatres across Canada will not be disturbed by the transaction. The Allens own a number of the theatres outright and have leases on a few others. The majority of the theatres are owned by subsidiary companies and the controlling interest in these houses will also be affected.

No intimation is made of the identity of prospective purchasers of the Allen theatres but last year several offers for the assets of Allen Theatres, Limited, were made by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation through N. L. Nathanson, managing director, Toronto. These were finally withdrawn. It is also reported that the Fox Film Corporation is angling for the control of the numerous theatres.

The theatre plans of the Allens are problematical, it is said. During recent months several relatives of Jule and J. J. Allen bought up a number of moving picture theatres on their own account, the largest purchase being the chain of theatres in Eastern Ontario operated by the O'Brien interests of Renfrew, Ontario. Theatres in Toronto and Western Ontario have also been acquired by members of the Allen family, and it is believed that there is a possibility of the organization of another chain of Allen-controlled houses in the Dominion.

St. Louis and Eastern Missouri Exhibs. to Meet

THE organization convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of St. Louis and Eastern Missouri will be held in St. Louis on March 27. The national organization recently decided to divide Missouri, St. Louis to have jurisdiction over the Eastern half and Kansas City over the Western half of the state. The St. Louis body has also applied for jurisdiction over Southern Illinois exhibitors who are served by St. Louis exchanges.

The Elks Club, Lindell Boulevard, west of Grand Boulevard, has been selected as headquarters for the convention. An invitation has been forwarded to Sidney Cohen and other national officers to attend.

The principal business will be election of permanent officers and selection of delegates and alternates to the national convention.

Warns Bill Will Prohibit First-Run Bookings

A statement from the Merchants Association calls attention to the so-called State Trade Commission, which has been advanced to third reading in the New York Senate, and warns that exhibitors and producers will be "hard-hit" if the bill becomes a law. The statement reads in part as follows:

"This bill requires that every understanding or agreement to which two or more corporations engaged in the same or similar classes of business are parties, shall be submitted to the proposed State Trade Commission for approval before anything is done under such understanding or agreement, and further provides that the Commission shall withhold its approval if the Commission has reason to believe that such understanding or agreement will divide or apportion territory between actual or potential competitors or encourage such competitors to keep out of or fail to enter any given territory in competition with one another in any part of the State or will be discriminatory between persons or localities or will be in any other manner calculated to interfere with unrestricted competition.

"Releases of feature films or first run films necessarily have to be limited to certain specific exhibitors in each locality, with strict limitations as to the theatres in which they shall be exhibited. Unless the exhibitor taking such feature films or first run production can be assured that these releases will not be contemporaneously exhibited in other theatres in his immediate territory, he cannot and will not contract for these releases. The very existence of the exhibiting and producing interests of the moving picture industry depends upon their right to make such contracts.

"These contracts, however, come squarely within the terms of the State Trade Commission bill, which specifically authorizes the Commission to prevent the making of these contracts."

Hostile Bills for Texas Killed in Committee

In the Texas legislature a bill proposing a tax of ten per cent on box office intake has been killed in committee. Also a bill proposing a tax of 1 cent on each ticket has been killed. The tax bill that has been successful so far in the House and yet to come up in the Senate is an increase in occupation tax, which increase will apply more heavily against the large towns than the smaller ones.

Rules Are Adopted for Arbitration Boards

Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor Representatives Approve Broad Principles of Operation

THE rules of procedure to be followed by the various boards of arbitration that will be organized under the provisions of the recently adopted Uniform Contract have been drafted, approved by the attorneys of exhibitor organizations and the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and will shortly be put into operation by the arbitration committees that are now in process of formation in various parts of the country. As was announced in last week's issue of the NEWS, Page 1260, a board of arbitration constituted in conformity with the provisions of the Uniform Contract is now in active operation in New York City, the first meeting being held last week in the presence of the trade-press representatives.

The final draft of the "Rules of Operation" was approved on March 8th at a meeting held in the headquarters of the M. P. P. D. of A., at which representatives of the producers and distributors as well as the following exhibitors were present: William A. Steffes, of Minneapolis; Claude Cady, of Michigan; H. M. Crandall, of Washington, D. C.; Charles L. O'Reilly, William A. Brandt, Bernard Edelhertz, and Leo Brecher, of New York.

Following are the "Rules of Operation" adopted at the meeting last week:

THE BOARD OF ARBITRATION

I.

"The Board of Arbitration shall consist of six persons, three of whom shall be managers of local offices of the distributors, called distributors' representatives, and three of whom shall be proprietors or managers of theatres in the zone where the Film Board is located, called exhibitors' representatives; provided, however, that in no event shall such exhibitors' representatives be managers of theatres owned or controlled by producers or distributors.

"Each of the three distributors' representatives shall be selected by the members of the Film Board of Trade to serve for one year or until his successor is appointed. The three exhibitors' representatives shall be selected and appointed by the local exhibitors' association. In the event there is no local exhibitors' association or if such association fails to appoint, then the President of the Film Board of Trade shall request the President of the Chamber of Commerce, or if there is none or if he fails to appoint, then the mayor of the city in which the Film Board of Trade is located, to select and appoint the three exhibitors' representatives. Failing such selection and appointment the designation of exhibitors' representatives shall be by the President of the Film Board of Trade. Each of the exhibitors' representatives shall serve for one year or until his successor is appointed; provided, however, that any exhibitors' representatives designated otherwise than by the local exhibitors' association shall be replaced by exhibitors' representatives designated by such exhibitors' association as soon as such designation is made.

"No member of the Board of Arbitration shall sit in any case or controversy in which he has an interest direct or indirect.

"In case of a refusal or disqualification by reason of interest or sickness or other reason on the part of a Distributors' representative to serve on the Board of Arbitration, the remaining Distributors' representatives or representative may appoint a substitute for such member; similarly if a vacancy exists in respect of an Exhibitors' representatives or representative, the remaining representatives or representative may appoint a substitute.

"In case of a tie vote the Board of Arbitration shall appoint a seventh arbitrator, and if they are unable to agree then the Chairman of the Board of Arbitration shall request the President of the Chamber of Commerce, or if there is none or if he fails to appoint, then the mayor of the city in which the Film Board of Trade is located to appoint a seventh arbitrator who shall be neither a distributor nor exhibitor nor interested in the motion picture business.

II

"The Board of Arbitration shall have general power after a thorough and impartial hearing of any dispute or controversy, to determine such dispute or controversy, to make findings thereon, to direct what shall be done by either or both parties with respect to the matter in dispute, and in the event of the failure of the Exhibitor to comply with the award, to fix the maximum amount that each Distributor may demand pursuant to Article Nineteenth of the Uniform Exhibition Contract. It shall adopt its own rules of procedure and evidence. These rules shall provide for reasonable notice to the parties of the time and place of the hearing and of the nature of the dispute and afford the parties an opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and to submit evidence. The findings, determination and direction of the Board of Arbitration upon such controversy shall be conclusive and binding upon the parties thereto."

These rules are the broad principles on which the Boards of Arbitration will operate. The rules for the operation of the local boards will be prepared locally by those who operate under them and will be in line with the principles set out herein.

Censorship for Michigan Killed in Committee

CENSORSHIP so far as Michigan is concerned, is now a dead issue, at least for another year. Senate Bill No. 102 introduced by Senator George M. Condon of Detroit, was killed in the committee. The action taken by the Michigan M. P. T. O. on the Arbuckle case, showing that the exhibitors of this state, as a body, are standing for clean pictures and clean people in the pictures, is considered by many as principally responsible for the defeat of the measure.

A public hearing on this bill was held last Wednesday by the Senate Affairs Committee, Senator Foss O. Eldrid of Ionia, chairman, presiding.

Speakers for the bill were Mrs. A. B. Cramer of Detroit, James H. Engle, of Lansing, executive secretary of the Michigan Sunday School Council for Religious Education, and the Rev. Frank M. Miner of Midland. Opposed were Judge Alfred J. Murphy of Detroit, counsel for the M. P. T. O., and Charles C. Pettijohn of New York.

Film as Civic and Moral Force

Author, City Councilman and Clergyman Boost Screen as Community Factor

MASSACHUSETTS has heard some rather sincere praise of the value of the motion picture within the last few days. An internationally known author stated that censorship was a far worse evil than any to be found in the films. A city councilman of Springfield advocated motion pictures as the only way to show official Washington the seriousness of New England's coal situation. A Methodist Episcopal clergyman strongly advocates movies as a means of stimulating interest, building up a church and keeping the young people occupied in a clean way.

Basil King, the author, speaking before a recent meeting of the Fabian Society, stated that as far as censoring motion pictures was concerned, he would rather see a thing go wrong than to have it set right by censorship. He pointed out that the motion picture most appeals to those whose amusements are few, people excluded from many recreations because they could not afford them; and pointed out that their moral standards and sophistication are far different from those of the class attempting to "reform" the screen.

His talk was much on the theme that "evil sees he who evil thinks." He charged that the well-defined slump in the motion picture industry can be traced to the time when agitation for the betterment of the pictures was begun, and that that agitation is fostered by persons whose interest is not primarily in the pictures, but rather in other things and endeavors of more importance to themselves. Touching on the alleged relation of juvenile crime to the motion picture, he declared statistics show that such crime has been on the decrease rather than the increase since the advent of the silver sheet as a factor to be reckoned with in the life of a child. His speech, in fact, was a series of weighty "selling" arguments in fighting censorship.

Councilman Denis A. Hogan of Springfield has said that motion pictures should be taken in coal yards and municipal distributing centers throughout New England, the result combined in one film and sent to Washington that officials there might see the critical seriousness of the situation. He said in part:

"If this were done the officials could see for themselves what conditions are. The motion pictures are an educational institution, and this is one of the times when they could do a great service if the theatre owners who have cameras would get busy and carry the idea to other cities and towns."

The Rev. Frank A. Brown, of Leicester, has increased his church membership from two to more than fifty in the last two years, largely through motion pictures, of which he is a strong advocate. He says that the $600 spent for a modern projection outfit has been one of the best investments he has had anything to do with. He gives the motion picture shows at the Sunday and Thursday night services.

Censorship Bill Proposed in Colorado

TWO bills calculated to make the path of the "movie man" harder are pending in the Colorado General Assembly, but present indications are that neither will get beyond first reading, if that far.

One is a censorship bill; the other a measure to enforce the installation of sanitary conveniences in the operating-rooms of motion picture theatres.

The censorship bill provides for a board of three "inspectors," each of whom would receive a salary of $3,000 a year; calls for an inspection fee of $2 per reel and otherwise is a close copy of censorship bills proposed in other states.

Appointees would be chosen from a list of candidates proposed to the governor by the Colorado Child Welfare bureau.

The sanitary measure provides that theatre owners maintain in the operating rooms of their respective houses a toilet with flush tank, and wash basin with running water; except that theatres not adjacent to a sewer system are required to provide a dry closet in lieu of the flush type.

"Mad Love" Banned in Canada as German Film

The Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors has caused somewhat of a sensation by condemning "Mad Love," starring Pola Negri, on the ground that it is a German-made production. The Famous Players Canadian Corporation who, it is reported, imported "Mad Love" into Canada, claimed that the Ontario Board first passed the feature for presentation in Ontario theatres and then rescinded the decision. Major A. S. Hamilton, chairman of the Board at Toronto, declared in explanation that the Board had ordered changes in the picture and then discovered that the feature had been produced in Germany, when it was banned altogether.

Since the first of the present year the Ontario Board has rejected no less than six features on the ground that they were made in Germany. It happened that the pictures were banned at the rate of two each month for the first three months of the year.

It has been pointed out to the Ontario censors that "The Loves of Pharoah" was passed and that this release has been screened throughout Ontario, although this picture was produced in Germany. In defense, the censor board pointed out that information was supplied to the effect that the subject had been filmed in the United States.

Booking Combine Considered in St. Louis

Negotiations looking to the formation of a booking arrangement whereby about forty St. Louis motion picture houses would combine in contracting for films have been under way for the past few weeks. Those behind the movement are not yet ready to announce their plans.

The principal purpose of the new organization, if the plans are consummated, is to combat the growing influence of chain theatre competition. The independent exhibitors fear that eventually they will be put out of business by the chain theatre competition unless they pool their strength. It is understood the new body would be controlled by a board of directors and that the individual theatres would continue under their present management, merely paying a 5 per cent booking fee to the pool fund.

Hard Going for Repeal Proposal in N. Y. Assembly

THE proposal to repeal the censorship law in New York State is having some rough sledding. Political lines are being kept uniformly intact on the measure. The Senate Committee on Finance voted to report the bill out by a vote of eleven to two; Senators Lusk and Hewitt, the only two Republicans on the committee, voted against reporting the measure out. On the other hand, the Ways and Means Committee of the Assembly, which has had the measure in hand in the lower house, flatly ignored the proposal, giving evidence that it will die in committee as far as the Assembly is concerned. The Senate is dominated by Democrats while the Assembly committee is in control of the Republicans.

Should the repeal proposal fail to pass the legislature now, as seems quite probable, little doubt is expressed by observers that the political complexion of the present censorship commission is due for a change.

Kansas 6% Theatre Tax Is Killed in Committee

The proposed tax bill in the Kansas legislature, which would place a 6 per cent tax upon the shoulders of Kansas exhibitors, died in committee Tuesday, following the hearing of a delegation of nine exhibitors before the assessment and taxation committee of the house and a joint committee in Topeka, Kans., the state capital.

The delegation of exhibitors that appeared before the committee was appointed by R. G. Liggett, president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas. Mr. Liggett acted as chairman of the exhibitors' committee in the hearing before the house committee, while Thomas Brown, of Leavenworth, Kans., was chairman of the committee that appeared before the joint committee.

The fact that Kansas exhibitors now are taxed about 15 per cent of their box office receipts and the damaging effect that such a tax measure would have upon theatre owners were outlined to the legislative committee by the exhibitors, and the "axe" immediately was brought down upon the neck of the bill.

Spokane Exhibitors and Exchange Men Organize

Theatre managers of Spokane, Wash., and film exchange representatives have effected a temporary organization to be known as the Allied Amusement Association. It will become affiliated with the state association, and through it, with the national organization. Dr. H. S. Clemmer of the Clemmer theatre was elected temporary chairman, and C. M. Van Horn, manager of the Pathe exchange, secretary. The following will draft constitution and by-laws and call another meeting, when a permanent organization will be effected: J. W. Allender of the Majestic and Lyric theatres; Charles E. Stilwell of the Casino, Class A and Unique theatres; Maurice Oppenheimer, Hippodrome; Dr. H. C. Lambach, Clemmer; Charles W. York, Auditorium; and Mr. Van Horn.

Senate Bill No. 134, which would put a 10 per cent. tax on theatre admissions on top of the federal amusement tax will be fought by the new organization. Ultimately the organization will broaden out to include all engaged in any branch of the amusement business, according to Secretary Van Horn.

Missouri Senate Rejects "Chain Store" Measure

THE Missouri Senate on March 9th voted against engrossing the so-called "chain store" bill. This measure primarily intended to hit chain grocery stores, drug stores, restaurants, etc., would have affected strings of theatres under one management. As drawn, it limited the number of houses one organization could own to ten. The license fees would also be scaled, increasing $500 for each new house. For instance, one theatre would pay $500 license, two $1,500, three, $3,000, etc.

Late advices from the capital are that censorship is "dead" but there is serious danger that the bills prohibiting the sale of tickets to theatres after all seats are occupied will be passed.

79% of Pictures Shown in Brazil Are American

The overwhelming superiority of American films in the Brazil market is strikingly demonstrated in a report of the Brazilian board of censorship for the year 1922, received by John L. Day, South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Of a total of 1,341 pictures imported in Brazil during the last year, 1,058 were from the United States and the remaining 283 were divided among twelve countries.

Statistics collected by Dr. Roberto Etchebarne, head of the Brazilian police censorship, show that seventy-nine per cent of the films imported were from the United States. This was an increase of eight per cent. over 1921.

Dr. Etchebarne reports that eliminations were made in but 68 pictures, of which 37 were from the United States, and that titles were changed on 137 pictures for various reasons. The total footage eliminated by the censors was 564.60 metres, and only one film was banned for exhibition purposes.

"From the viewpoint of morality," says Dr. Etchebarne in discussing the commission's work, "the American pictures hold first place in Brazil. This fact, together with their wonderful sets, directing, artists and photography justifies their universal preference throughout the country."

68 Degrees Temperature in Theatres Compulsory

Of much interest to motion picture interests throughout Southern New England, especially where buildings are occupied under lease, has been the action at Willimantie, Conn., of Louis J. Coriarty, lessee of the Strand theatre, against Isaac Rosen, owner of the building. The plaintiff claimed that low temperature in the theatre at a Sunday night performance caused several to leave the house. Complaint was lodged with the prosecuting attorney that Rosen failed to provide necessary heat for the building, and he was summoned into court on a charge of violating the state heating law.

Principals in the action agreed to a continuance of the case until March 12. Rosen was warned by the court that he must keep the theatre properly heated, at least 68 degrees, while programs are being presented. Rosen stated he would conform to the law and that there would be no more complaint about heat, as far as he was concerned.

It was pointed out by the court that the owner of buildings in Connecticut who rent stores, flats, offices or living quarters, must have their buildings heated to a temperature of at least 68 degrees, Fahrenheit.

Various Bills Await Action by Penn. State Lawmakers

Various bills affecting the film industry and especially the exhibitor division, await action by the Pennsylvania legislature at Harrisburg. Peter Magaro, vice-president of the Pennsylvania M. P. T. O., and C. Floyd Hopkins, prominent exhibitor of Harrisburg, members of the legislative committee of the exhibitors' organization, have given assurance that the proposed measures are being watched and will be dealt with at the proper time.

One bill would impose a tax of one per cent on the gross receipts of the theatres. Another would tax the receipts of slot-device weighing and vending machines, which are sometimes found in theatres. An "equal rights" bill, wiping out race distinctions in public amusement places, is again up for action. Another measure would prohibit the changing of prices of admissions to shows on different days.

Daylight Saving is also up for action. A public hearing on this subject before the Ways and Means Committee was scheduled for March 13th. The proposed bill would make it illegal for any city to adopt Daylight Saving time. It is also proposed to tax billboards, and the exhibitor representatives have assured the billposters' organizations of the state of their co-operation in defeating the measure. Hearing on the billboard tax before the Ways and Means Committee has been set for March 20th.

C. R. Halligan Has Managed Albany Office 5 Years

C. R. Halligan has the distinction of having managed a film exchange in Albany, N. Y., for a longer period than any other manager in that city. On April 3 Mr. Halligan will have been the manager of the Universal exchange in that city for five straight years. Other film managers are planning to give him a dinner, it is reported. Mr. Halligan was at one time owner of the Daisy theatre in Green Island, N. Y., and was so closely identified with the house that he is known today throughout the Capital District as "Daisy" Halligan.

Oklahoma Theatre-Owners Hold Convention

THE Oklahoma Theatre-Owners and Managers Association held its semi-annual convention in the City Auditorium in Oklahoma City, Okla., on March 1st and 2d, with about two-hundred theatre owners and managers in attendance. Percy Talbott of Tulsa, Okla., president of the organization, presided.

A report made on adverse legislation pending in the state legislature expressed the opinion that the hostile proposals would not meet with sufficient support to pass. Among the resolutions passed were: condemnation of the renting of films to non-theatrical institutions; a petition to Congress that war tax on admissions be revoked. The following members of an Arbitration Board were appointed: J. M. Cooper, Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City; Tony Ryan, First National; and Wallace Walthall, Associated Exhibitors. A fifth member is to be named by the committee.

A ball and banquet were among the meeting's social features. The next convention is planned for September or October in Oklahoma City.

Film Bills Unlikely to Be Reported Out in N. Y.

The two bills introduced about a month ago in the State Senate by Senator Love relating to miniature picture apparatus and the requirements for miniature machines, are still in committee, with little chance apparently of their being reported out. The bill introduced by Assemblyman Miller on February 26 imposing an annual tax on the gross receipts of motion picture theatres, as well as other forms of amusement, is also in committee. The same holds true of Senator Levy's bill relative to theatrical performances in first class cities of New York state on Sunday. A bill was introduced March 7 by Senator Levy relating to a lien on motion picture film laboratories.

Kansas Bill Would Eliminate Race Distinctions

What is considered the most radical measure introduced thus far in the Kansas legislature was introduced this week by Mrs. Minnie Grinstead of Liberal, Kans., in the house. The proposed bill would eliminate entirely any distinction between negroes and white persons, making it compulsory for all theatres and hotels to admit negroes the same as white persons. This bill is causing Kansas exhibitors little worry, however, as public sentiment is strongly against the measure.

The welfare measure, which provides for the creation of a welfare board in each county of Kansas to grant licenses to theatres, still is on the "shelf."

Grainger Optimistic Over Outlook

Goldwyn Executive Sees Improvements In Exhibitor and Production Fields

JAMES R. GRAINGER, of Goldwyn Pictures, is home from a ten weeks' trip to that firm's branch exchanges and to the studios in Culver City, Calif., brimming over with enthusiasm at the film outlook in general and as it applies to his firm in particular.

"The coming year is going to be one of the biggest years motion pictures have ever seen," said Mr. Grainger. "The exhibitors are making money and are eager to buy the biggest and best pictures the market affords. They are realizing as never before that the public is shopping for its amusement fare and that it is picking out the films which are unusual and big to patronize rather than the old-style five-reel program film.

"I base my prediction of one of the biggest years in the history of the industry on the following facts: (1) The big feature pictures which the exhibitors are demanding and for which they are willing to pay adequate prices; (2) the big demand for popular novels and plays to picturize; (3) the big demand for leading men and women by the various companies; (4) the increased physical equipment of various producing concerns; (5) in six days Goldwyn has signed 2,084 contracts for showings—with nearly one-sixth of film theatres of the country.

"Goldwyn, for instance, is building two new stages on its lot at Culver City, bringing the total up to nine. Eight pictures were in production when I left the studio, with more in the preparatory stages. We will need these new stages for the program in view for the coming season. Eleven directors are now under contract, and they will practically all be making pictures at the same time. Other studios have been adding to their facilities.

"The activities at the Goldwyn studios are marvelous. When I left on the return trip to New York the number of persons on the studio payroll was 1,200, an increase of 400 from a few weeks previous to that time.

"I think the Rupert Hughes picture, 'Souls for Sale,' is going to be a knockout. It's big and it's clean and it's got a spectacular finish that will give patrons something to talk about. Goldwyn spent $25,000 on the circus scene which is burned to the ground at the very end of the film. The big tent was soaked with kerosene and then set on fire.

"Another spectacular stunt was used by King Vidor in making 'Three Wise Fools.' An armored car used by the convicts in escaping from prison, turned turtle, going at the rate of seventy miles an hour, with two persons inside it. Neither was hurt, but a big thrill for picture-goers resulted."

Premiere for "Bella Donna" at Grauman's Rialto

"Bella Donna," Pola Negri's first American-made picture produced for Paramount release, was given its premier showing at Grauman's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, on Tuesday of this week. Following the opening, Mr. Grauman wired the Paramount home office that premiere was the occasion of a record turn-out of crowds to view the picture.

The production will have its New York premiere on April 8th at the Rivoli theatre.

A screening of the picture on Wednesday morning at the home office brought forth enthusiastic expressions of commendation from the Paramount officials.

"Where the Pavement Ends," the Rex Ingram Production for Metro, co-stars Alice Terry and Ramon Navarro, who are seen in the above scenes

Thomas H. Ince, who has renewed his contract with First National for the distribution of his future productions.

Cosmopolitan Company to Film on Banff Location

A company of Cosmopolitan players and technical men have left the Metropolis for Banff, where they will spend about six weeks on location in the vicinity of Lake Louise. Scenes will also be shot in and near Quebec and Montreal. The title of the new production will be "Snowblind" and will, according to the producers, embrace some thrilling and realistic episodes woven around life in the North woods, including an aeroplane dash over the ice and a mid-winter carnival.

Liolen Barrymore and Seena Owen are to be featured. E. H. Griffith is the director. The supporting cast includes Gustave von Seyffertitz, Louis Wolheim, Paul Panzer and Walter Miller. Bayard Veiller adapted the story for the screen.

Jess Robbins Nearing Finish of Comedy-Drama

Jess Robbins is nearing completion of his new comedy-drama, "The Crash," in which Edward Horton will play the principal role, and which will be released by Vitagraph. Director Robbins wrote his own original story. The cast supporting Horton includes Barbara Bedford, Zasu Pitts, Tom Ricketts, Carl Stockdale, Tom Murray, James Kelly, Stanley Taylor, Dorothy Wook and Newton Hall.

Sol Lesser Signs Blanche Sweet to Play Lead

Blanche Sweet has signed up with Sol Lesser to play leading feminine roles in forthcoming productions of the Principal Pictures Corporation, of which Mr. Lesser is president.

The first role will be that of Isabel in George M. Cohan's "The Meanest Man in the World."

"The Grail" with Dustin Farnum Completed

"The Grail," George Scarborough's story for Dustin Farnum, has been completed at the Fox West Coast studios. It was directed by Colin Campbell. Charles Kenyon did the screen version.

Paul Mooney on Tour for Louis Mayer Product

Paul Mooney, in charge of the New York offices of Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., left New York Sunday evening, March 11th, on an extended tour of the country in behalf of the interests which he represents.

Mr. Mooney's chief duty is the supervision of the distribution of the Mayer photoplays through the national distributing agencies which handle them. At the present time some of the Mayer pictures are going through the First National and others through the Metro exchanges. On his trip, which will require from six to eight weeks, Mr. Mooney will visit all exchanges operated by both these big companies.

Jimmy Morrison as Lead in "Man Next Door"

Jimmy Morrison, one of the best known juvenile leading men in the country, has been engaged by Vitagraph for a leading role in "The Man Next Door," by Emerson Hough, author of "The Covered Wagon" and many other successful novels.

Scenes from "The Prisoner," starring Herbert Rawlinson, a Universal picture.

"The Fourth Musketeer," the F. B. O. release, stars Johnny Walker and the picture, directed by Wm. K. Howard, is from a story by H. C. Witwer.

Four F. B. O. Releases for April

"Westbound Limited," "Third Alarm," and "Wonders of Sea" Are Scheduled

FOUR feature-pictures will be released to exhibitors during the month of April by the Film Booking Offices of America, according to an announcement issued this week from the F. B. O. Home Office.

These pictures will be widely diversified and will include the latest offerings of both Harry Carey and Ethel Clayton. "Westbound Limited," the new special production by Emory Johnson, creator of "In the Name of the Law" and "The Third Alarm" will be on the April schedule, and "Wonders of the Sea," J. Ernest Williamson's submarine feature picture, will complete the quartet of features.

"Crashin' Thru," a forthcoming Harry Carey release, is adapted from Elizabeth DeJean's Blue Book Magazine story by Beatrice Van, the scenarist who transcribed "Fighting Blood" to the screen. The story was published under the title "If a Woman Wills." It affords Carey a role as a Western ranch owner who advertises for a wife to dispel the loneliness of his life, and who, after meeting her, falls in love with another woman. Cullen Landis is cast as the juvenile lead, and Viola Vale has the leading feminine role. The climax provides a stampede of horses and a rescue by the star.

Ethel Clayton in "The Remittance Woman" enacts a story by Achmed Abdullah. "The Remittance Woman" is also a Blue Book Magazine story, and a fictionized version of the picture has appeared in the pages of Movie Weekly. Miss Clayton appears as an American girl who is sent to China by her father as a cure for her extravagance. The melodramatic action moves against a background of elaborate sets and colorful Oriental costuming. Edward Hearn plays opposite Miss Clayton, and others in the cast are Edward Marshall Kimball, Tom Wilson, Etta Lee, Mario Carillo and James B. Leong. Wesley Ruggles, who produced "If I Were Queen," starring Miss Clayton, directed.

In "Westbound Limited" Emory Johnson has again starred Ralph Lewis, who played the leading role in previous Johnson productions. Ella Hall is cast in the leading feminine role, and Johnny Harron, a brother of the late Robert Harron, has the role as the youthful son. Wedgewood Nowell and Clairé McDowall complete the cast of principals. "Westbound Limited" is a railroad drama. Lewis plays the part of a veteran engineer. Emelie Johnson is the authoress.

"Wonders of the Sea" will complete the F. B. O. schedule for April. This production has already played three weeks on Broadway, two of which were spent in the Rialto and one in the Rivoli. It was filmed by means of Mr. Williamson's special apparatus whereby he is able to picture the ocean's depths with perfect clearness. Mr. Williamson himself directed and Miss Lulu McGrath plays the part of the sea nymph, diving to a depth of forty feet to the level of the submarine camera.

"Bluff" Story of New York Life for Bebe Daniels

"Bluff," a story of New York life by Rita Weiman and Josephine Quirk, will be Bebe Daniels' next picture for Paramount following "The Exciters," in which she is now engaged. The picture will be produced at the company's Eastern studio under the direction of Wesley Ruggles, who recently arrived from the Coast. Albert Shelby LeVino is busy making the screen adaptation of the story.

Pathe to Handle Sennett Comedies

Contract Closed for 13 Sennett Comedies and Series of Turpin 2-Reelers

A CONTRACT has been signed between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Mack Sennett for the release by Pathe of thirteen two-reel Mack Sennett comedies during the year and the release of six or eight Ben Turpin two-reel comedies. After weeks of conferences and negotiations, the Mack Sennett contract was finally closed through the offices of Ephraim Asher, Mack Sennett's personal New York representative.

As noted during the last few weeks in special announcements by Pathe, Hal Roach, the producer of the Harold Lloyd comedies, had also signed with Pathe to release thirteen two-reel "Our Gang" comedies, thirteen two-reel Will Rogers comedies and thirteen two-reel Snub Pollard comedies per year.

In totaling up both the Sennet and Roach product, Pathe will release no less than 60 two-reel comedies for the year, or more than one a week. This line-up is in addition to the Harold Lloyd special comedies and the 52 Hal Roach one-reel comedies alternately featuring Paul Parrott and Stan Laurel, which Pathe also releases.

The Hal Roach contracts were all delivered this week to the Pathe Home Office by Mr. C. H. Roach, father of Hal E. Roach, and were the culmination of negotiations and arrangements made during Mr. Hal Roach's recent visit to New York.

Commenting on this line-up, Mr. Pearson said: It has been our opinion and that of many exhibitors who have been consulted, that the comedy portion of the motion picture entertainment, as compared to development in dramatic fields, has been seriously neglected during the last two or three years by the entire industry. In practically every locality, the public is being surfeited by feature entertainment to the point of saturation, and that if real good comedies in sufficient quantity were available from a dependable source, exhibitors would establish a comedy and short subject program change at least once every week. This weekly change will not only attract record-breaking attendances, but but will increase the box office receipts on the dramatic change nights because the public of any locality will go to the theatres only so many times per week for a strictly dramatic bill of fare."

The first Ben Turpin to be released by Pathe in two reels will be "Pitfalls of a Great City"; and the first Mack Sennett comedy will be called "Domestic Economy."

James Kirkwood Will Play Lead in Anti-Drug Film

Warner to Produce "Tiger Rose"

Lenore Ulric to Star in Screen Version; Deal Closed with David Belasco

THROUGH a partnership arrangement between the Warner Brothers and David Belasco, Lenore Ulric will be starred in a screen version of her stage success, "Tiger Rose," according to an announcement made this week by Harry M. Warner.

The deal, which has been pending since last fall, was consummated recently between B. F. Roeder, general manager for Mr. Belasco, and Mr. Warner. News of the negotiations follows in the wake of an announcement made several weeks ago to the effect that Mr. Belasco will collaborate with the Warners in the filming of three of his theatrical attractions, namely, "The Gold Diggers," "Deburau" and "Daddies."

"We are proud indeed to have been able to secure Miss Ulric to appear in the photoplay of her great stage success," said Mr. Warner. "The play is particularly adaptable for the screen, and it offers unlimited opportunities for the making of a big box office attraction. In this connection, Miss Ulric is exactly the type suitable for the screen, and the combination of Mr. Belasco, the star, the director and the continuity writer cannot be improved upon. These factors will bring about one of the greatest money-making attractions in the history of the business."

According to Mr. Warner, Sidney Franklin has been selected by Mr. Belasco to direct the production, and Edmund Goulding has been assigned the task of writing the continuity.

Mr. Roeder, who has been connected with Mr. Belasco for more than thirty years, in discussing the deal said: "Practically every producing organization in the motion picture industry has made an attempt to secure both the play and the services of Miss Ulric. We turned every offer down, for the reason that we felt none were capable of infusing into the making of the picture the high standards and ideals of Mr. Belasco.

Miss Ulric will terminate her engagement at the Belasco theatre the latter part of May and leave immediately for the Warner Brothers' studios in Los Angeles to begin active work on "Tiger Rose."

ZaSu Pitts as Lead in Von Stroheim's Production

Brockell Finds Exhibs Optimistic

First National Manager on Tour Finds Trade Elated Over Better Productions

FLOYD BROCKELL, manager of distribution of Associated First National, who is on a long tour of inspection, declares he has found producers and exhibitors optimistic wherever he went. He spoke about his trip during his stay in Los Angeles.

"The thing that is making exhibitors feel good about the present and the future of the industry is the fact that they are getting consistently good pictures and the public being satisfied with the high-class entertainment now being offered is going to the picture houses more than ever. The coming of the independent producers into the field has been a big boom to the industry because the independent product has been exceptionally good.

"In Los Angeles the studios are humming with activities, and the independents form a big proportion of the big work. They are making pictures with stories as a general rule, and not pictures with stars. This, of course, excepts producers like Joseph M. Schenck, who has and is producing some of the finest pictures exhibitors have seen and will get with Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge.

"Generally, however, the independent producer is keeping busy the best actors and actresses on the coast. He is striving first to give the exhibitor a picture with a good story, and second to back that story up with a cast of names that have merited great popularity with the motion picture-going public. It seems to me that the star system is getting out of date and that we will have in the future only those stars who have real ability.

"This doesn't mean, as I see it, in this busy production center that there will never be new stars, but it does mean that the new stars that come to the front will have to have real box office merit.

"An indication of the big future business some exhibitors are expecting is seen in the fact that many magnificent picture houses are being erected in many centers. Certainly these men would not put hundreds of thousands of dollars into new enterprises if they were not assured that the new pictures to be made would give them a profit on their investment. Men who go into the business of building big picture houses learn the facts first and build afterwards.

"Naturally I have heard mostly about First National future releases, and I have found exhibitors inquiring interestedly about such pictures as 'Within the Law,' 'Ashes of Vengeance,' 'Dulcy,' 'Isle of Lost Ships,' 'Trilby,' 'Toby Tyler,' 'Penrod and Sam,' and I found particular interest in the new Carewe picture, 'The Girl from the Golden West.'

"I might say, too, while speaking of First National, that I was well pleased with the optimism and enthusiasm of the men in the field, who were naturally as much interested in the future product as were exhibitors with whom I talked."

Mr. Brockell is expected to return to New York shortly.

"In adapting this great play to the screen William Fox will spare neither expense nor time in making it a really notable achievement in photoplay art. At least a year will be given over to the production and filming of the play, for which the best brains of the Fox organization will be recruited. Who the director will be has not yet been announced, but Fox Film Corporation will have the advantage of the close cooperation of Mr. Pollock and of Frank Reicher, under whose direction the stage play was produced at the Times Square theatre."

The second Associated Authors feature will be produced by Elmer Harris, and the third by Thompson Buchanan, who will arrive in Los Angeles shortly from New York.

Fitzgerald will adapt the story for the screen and co-operate in the production. Glenn Hunter will play the star role, and opposite him will appear Miss Astor. It is the plan to present Hunter in pictures in which the spirit of youthfulness is predominant, declared Mr. Lasky in announcing the contracts. A similar meeting had been held at Milwaukee the previous week, Mr. Lewis Laemmle accompanied Manager Stern on the trips.

"Down to the Sea in Ships," Hodkinson's big feature, in which the pursuit and killing of a monster whale, is graphically depicted, will not be shown at the Auditorium, as previously announced, plans for its Chicago showing having been changed. It is probable that "Down to the Sea in Ships' will be put on at the Olympic or some other down town legitimate house nearer Chicago's Rialto than the Auditorium.

J. C. Waal, of American Releasing Corporation, is in Chicago for a ten days or two weeks sojourn, en route from the coast to his headquarters in New York.

The first print of "Are You A Failure?" Lichtman's new release, has arrived at the Chicago office of Celebrated, and according to the staff of this exchange, the feature is on a par with the other Lichtman releases, which have given such marked satisfaction to exhibitors and patrons of motion picture houses. One of the private offices of Celebrated is now being used as a zoo and houses a number of stuffed monkeys, tigers and other denizens of the wild, which are to be used in the exploitation of "The Jungle Goddess," an exhibitors' showing of which was recently held.

Max Levy, of Exclusive Film Service, has taken over the Indiana and Illinois rights to a number of new feature and comedy pictures, including twelve Pete Morrison five-reel features; twenty-six Tweedy Comedies in two reels; released by Sanford Productions; eighteen Ford Sterling single reelers; and twenty-six Juanita Comedies in two reels.

"Modern Marriage," an important American Releasing Corporation feature, starring Bushman and Bayne, will be released in Chicago and surrounding territory in April, according to Branch Manager Manske, and arrangements for the personal appearance of Bushman and Bayne, in connection with the showing of the picture, are being made. The act, which the stars will offer, is especially adapted for picture theatres as they take up the action started in the film and then fade back into the picture.

Henry Saxe, well known Chicago theatrical man, is a new recruit to the motion picture industry and has joined the sales staff of Exclusive Film Service and will cover Chicago territory for Manager Max Levy.

It is said that Harry is a real spell binder when he gets on the platform, and the applause he received "stopped the show."

The policy stated that in consideration of the premium on the policy, which had been paid by the Madison theatre, fifty dollars would be paid the estate of the holder of the policy should death occur within the Madison theatre "from apoplexy or heart disease resulting directly and solely from the stress of viewing 'The Hottentot.' This was a novelty in exploitation and created an unusual amount of comment.

Louis Jones, who for a long time has been connected with the management of the Randolph theatre, both during the time it was operated by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and since it was taken over by Universal, resigned his position, effective on March 12th. Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Adam and Eva—
Big picture. Beautiful settings and drew large, well satisfied audiences. (East.)

Did not go over at all well, in spite of recognition patrons gave Marion Davies in "Knighthood." (West.)

Back Home and Broke—
Good picture. Made money two days. (East.)

Singed Wings—
This picture drew well, but not up to average Bebe Daniels offering.

Adam's Rib—
Typical DeMille feature with wonderful settings and good action. A little too long, but audiences liked it and it pulled great business. (Middle West.)

Good crowds turned out for this one. (Middle West.)

The White Flower—
Good picture, but only fair business on it. (Middle West.)

Some wonderful photography and a good story make this one a good bet. Betty Compson does good work. Excellent business. (East.)

Fair picture; business only fair. (East.)

Good picture, about average box office attraction. (Middle West.)

When Knighthood Was in Flower—
Opening on Friday, this feature played to lock-outs and going good in spite of bad weather. It hasn't kept pace with "Robin Hood," in receipts, however, though doing good business, the admission price is lower.

Racing Hearts—
Business averaged pretty well. Nothing unusual, but satisfactory. (Middle West.)

Java Head—
Interesting, but not probable. Business was better than it has been in several weeks. (Middle West.)

Proved a very pleasing attraction. Patrons liked it and receipts held up very good. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Fury—
The attendance held up good for a week with this one. (Middle West.)

The Hottentot—
On second run, picture, as previously reported, good, business fair this time. (East.)

Very big picture. More real laughs than any comedy ever made. (East.)

The Pilgrim—
Splendid, artistic, entertaining and illuminating. Chaplin filled the house for us. (Middle West.)

One of Chaplin's best; went over big. (Middle West.)

East Is West—
Second day larger than first. Big feature. (East.)

Mighty Lak' a Rose—
Best box office attraction in some time. One hundred per cent audience picture. (East.)

What a Wife Learned—
Not elaborate but entertaining and pleased our patrons. Business good. (Middle West.)

Bell Boy 13—
This feature is a real laugh getting comedy and in connection with special presentation, did fine business. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Midnight Guest—
Good program picture and played to fair business. (Middle West.)

Lots of action. Lots of thrills. No strain on the mind, but quite a strain on the nerves. Our patrons liked it, so they said and business kept up to average so they must have meant it. (Middle West.)

The Flirt—
Broke all house records and held it over for a second week. Had strongest kind of opposition. (Middle West.)

The Flame of Life—
Good week's attendance. A good box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Played to good business on two weeks run. (Middle West.)
A fair picture. Business good. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

A Tailor-Made Man—
Ray is back to old time high standard in this feature and it proved a fine box office attraction. (Middle West.)

Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood—
Can it run? As many weeks as you want to hold it. (West.)

Excellent picture. Will stay eight weeks to capacity business, breaking all records for house showing it. (East.)

Fairbank's best picture; played to capacity business during first week at 60c top. (Middle West.)

At popular prices proved tremendous drawing power. Easily one of the greatest films ever produced. (Middle West.)

ALLIED P. & D.

A Woman's Woman—
Poor picture, patrons liked Mary Alden, but not as well as in previous attractions. (West.)

GOLDWYN

Mad Love—
Went across big, packing 'em in at every performance, even in the rain. Pola Negri's growing popularity contributed to results obtained. Heard much favorable comment. (South West.)

A good drawing card; lively business all week. (Middle West.)

The Christian—
Better than usual picture; good business despite big competition. (Middle West.)

Only a fair picture, business disappointing at leading house. (East.)

Broken Chains—
It is no wonder that it won the first prize in that Chicago contest. It is a fine audience picture. Very good business. (East.)

AMERICAN RELEASING

That Woman—
Did fair business for a mediocre picture. (West.)

METRO

The Famous Mrs. Fair—
No one is going to make a mistake on this one. Well liked and went over to big business. (East.)

Hearts Aflame—
Business was great; extraordinay, in fact. Box office entirely satisfied; audience well suited. (Middle West.)

Peg o' My Heart—
Business good on this one, but not one strong enough to last the week out.

Quincy Adams Sawyer—
Picture previously reported as good; on second run, business off. (East.)

WARNER BROTHERS (S.R.)

The Beautiful and Damned—
A picture of fair quality. Went over very well. (East.)

Business surprised us. Adult picture. (East.)

AL LICHTMAN

The Hero—
A very fine picture that failed to attract patrons, strong competition blamed.

FOX

Do and Dare—
Tom Mix always packs them in at this house and this vehicle was no exception to this rule. (East.)

The Bells of San Juan—
Just an ordinary program picture with receipts holding up to average which have been only fair. (East.)

My Friend the Devil—
Not good—not bad—neither was business. (West.)

The Custard Cup—
Mary Carr is well liked by patrons and it proved a good attraction. (Middle West.)

Truxton King—
A very well liked piece of work that has plenty and varied thrills. (East.)

HODKINSON

Down to the Sea in Ships—
Doing well on extended run. (East.)

The Kingdom Within—
A mediocre picture, business very poor. (East.)

Second Fiddle—
Very fine production all the way through. It did well, opening to a big Sunday and keeping it up all week.

VITAGRAPH

My Wild Irish Rose—
Serves well to tie up with song and promote business. (West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Secrets of Paris—
A real thriller that drew the people into the theatre like a magnet. We find that the great majority like heavy melodrama of this type. Capacity business. (East.)

Dignified Campaign Put Over for "The Christian"

New York, N. Y.—Exploitation in keeping with the character of the picture was used for the showing of "The Christian" at the Capitol theatre.

One of the most effective of the little attention getters which Eddie Bonns, manager of Exploitation for Goldwyn, and his assistant, W. R. Ferguson, put across was a "hanger"—a miniature picture of the book, "The Christian." These hangers were tied to telephone receivers, automobile doors, office doors, cigar lighters, etc., throughout the theatrical district. They were also used in business offices.

Another small exploitation accessory that proved a valuable attention getter was a small calling card with the name, Richard Dix, printed on one side. On the other side was a message in script purporting to be a message from Mr. Dix. This read as follows: "Dropped in to see you, but you were out. Will see you tonight at the Capitol theatre during the showing of 'The Christian.'"

A sticker which proved very valuable in "The Christian" exploitation campaign was a small imitation of the book, "The Christian." While this was much like the hanger, it was smaller, in brighter colors and contained less advertising matter. The sticker was distributed in many shops which used them in sealing packages and letters, and was used on all out-going mail from the Capitol theatre and Goldwyn offices.

A little more than usual advertising space was taken in the New York daily papers, which were also liberally supplied with press matter regarding this photoplay. The papers were most generous in the amount of space they gave the picture.

Peril Contest Wins Space for "The Sin Flood"

FARGO, N. D.—The peril contest, conducted in connection with a newspaper, was used to good effect by the Orpheum theatre in exploiting "The Sin Flood."

The tie-up was made with the Courier-News, which offered daily prizes of $5, $3, $2 and ten free tickets to "The Sin Flood" for the best accounts of perilous situations in which the writers found themselves. The Courier-News ran this contest for five days, giving the contest a two-column head in each issue and giving a short account of the story of the film. Several hundred replies were received, the best of which were published in the Courier-News.

Guessing Contest Wins Space for "Strangers Banquet"

Louisville, Ky.—The manager of the Alamo theatre used the guessing contest in connection with the 23 stars in "The Strangers' Banquet," through a tie-up with the Louisville Post, in a different manner than any of those previously reported.

Instead of using the pictures of all of the most prominent players in one issue of the paper, but one photograph of but one player a day was run.

Following a description of the contest was run a photo of one of the eight stars selected by the newspaper editor for use in this contest, with blank spaces for the writer's guess as to identity of the photographed player and his own name and address. Hundreds of replies were received.

Utilizes Money Angle in Lobby for "Rags to Riches"

Sumter, S. C.—Manager Oscar White, of the Rex theatre, is a great believer in the attractive value of the real and genuine "long green." When he gets a title that gives him a good excuse he always works into his lobby display a flash of new greenbacks.

When Mr. White started to build his display for "Rags to Riches" he went to the bank and got 85 new one dollar bills. Fifty of these he placed under glass in two one-sheet frames, bordering one-sheet art mats which he had prepared for the picture. The frames stood one each side of a large cut-out of Barry in the center of the lobby. Suspended just overhead was a compoboard banner made in the shape of a pair of scales or balance. On one side was suspended a pan of ragged clothes and on the other side a pan with several sacks of washers and a few one dollar bills. The remainder of the bills were pasted on the glass in the box office.

"Pride of Palomar" Given New Tie-Up with Book Store

Valley City, Minn.—John Piller, of the Grand theatre, and Jack Hellman, Paramount exploiteer, put over a book tie-up on "The Pride of Palomar" that worked three ways.

The two showmen sold the local bookstore on the idea of laying in a stock of the novels, with the agreement that the theatre would buy six copies. This got a co-operative window on the main street of the town.

The Grand now had books and didn't know what to do with them. The way out was tieing up with the local newspaper for an essay contest on "The Pride of Valley City," the five best essays receiving copies of the book autographed by Marjorie Daw.

The sixth copy of the book was turned into a most ingenious herald. The pages were torn out and one attached to a card announcing that this was one of 312 pages of the book—"Read the rest of the book by purchasing a copy of the book; see the picture at the Grand theatre." This brought the bookstore in to pay half the cost.

Essay Contest Is Used in "Third Alarm" Campaign

QUINCY, ILL.—The question, "Who faces death the oftener—the policeman or the fireman?" was made the subject of an essay contest to exploit "The Third Alarm" at the Star theatre, through the columns of the Quincy Whig Journal.

For the best essay of 200 words, a prize of five dollars was offered, and for each of the twenty next best a pair of tickets was awarded The co-operation of the fire department was secured and one feature of the contest was the awarding of the prizes by the local fire chief in the newspaper office.

A street stunt that attracted considerable attention was staged at noon hour in the business district over a period of several days. Arthur Johnson, an ex-Chicago fireman, jumped from the roofs of various buildings into a life net which was held by Quincy firemen, assigned to the work by the fire chief.

"Minnie" Finds Many Friends in Teaser Campaign

RICHMOND, Ind. — "Minnie," the lonesone, homely heroine of the picture of the same name, found plenty of sympathizers among the youths of Richmond, as was shown when the picture played at the Murray theatre.

A teaser campaign was initiated by handbills and the newspapers asking those who were in sympathy to communicate with "Minnie." Several hundred letters were received by the Richmond Item asking for the full name of the forlorn girl.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Because the newspapers had been worked to the limit on contests and refused to handle one for amateur photographers to tie up with "The Hottentot," the management of the Tivoli theatre prepared a feature article on action photography. Stills of the steeplechase in "The Hottentot" furnished the basis of the story.

The story was so good that the San Francisco Bulletin not only used it but also sent 4,000 marked copies to the members of the Camera club, the Alpine club, the Sierra club and other organizations interested in photography. The news editor boosted it as a good feature article while the circulation manager declared that it would secure new subscribers for the paper. In this manner the theatre "crashed" through when practically every angle of approach seemed closed.

Coloring Contest Gives Novel Angle to "Sin Flood"

Flint, Mich.—The manager of the Orpheum theatre in exploiting "The Sin Flood" tied up with the Flint Journal, which was conducting a school children's coloring contest in its pages

This contest consisted of a full page of advertising from various merchants in the city each advertisement containing the picture of a package of merchandise, a household implement, a commercial sign or something of the sort. For the best coloring of these pictures the Journal offered prizes of $170 cash and 160 theatre tickets each week.

The manager of the Orpheum placed a small advertisement on this page of the Journal The ad contained a half-tone portrait of Helene Chadwick. As part of the prizes were theatre tickets, the school children of Flint had "The Sin Flood" called immediately to their attention and they helped to advertise it among their elders.

Racing Dope Sheet Issued to Exploit "The Hottentot"

Schenectady, N. Y.—The racing angle was used to excellent advantage by Manager Paul Alberts of the Albany theatre in his campaign on "The Hottentot."

Teaser ads, racing dope sheets and race track signs formed the backbone of the campaign. The newspaper teaser ads read: "Found—Valuable Racing Horse. For further information apply Albany theatre." The horse, of course, was "The Hottentot," and would be on exhibition during play dates.

Under the caption of "Confidential Information, the One Best," 5,000 racing dope sheets were distributed advertising to the fans that "The Hottentot," owned by Associated First National stables, with Thomas H. Ince, trainer; Douglas MacLean, jockey; Madge Bellamy, groom, and Mr. and Mrs. Schenectady, judges, was the one best bet to play. The track was described as fast and furious and the closing advice was, "Lay your bankroll on 'The Hottentot.' You can't lose."

The "dope sheets" were distributed through the news stands, in pool rooms and other sporting places.

"All-of-a-Twist" Roll Tied Up with "Oliver Twist"

LOS ANGELES, Cal.—Something new about "Oliver Twist" and the origin of that character's name was brought out when the picture played here.

The secret was divulged by David R. Cohn, president of the Chatterton bakeries, at the time the picture played a three week run at the Kinema.

Jackie found that his character really originated in the "All-of-a-Twist" roll, for the Chatterton bakeries introduced this roll, called it the forefather of "Oliver Twist" and advertised the product extensively.

The sale of the roll and other exploitation on the run centered around the "Asking-for-more" episode of the story. The bakery tie-up resulted in 22 windows for the picture, each one of which told about Oliver's family tree.

Five hundred sign cards, pointing the way to the Albany theatre were posted around the city or stuck in snow piles. They read: "To the Races. Bet on 'The Hottentot.' Albany theatre."

For a street ballyhoo a sleigh decorated with a fancy blanket, was put out the Friday before the opening. The horse was gaudily attired and the sign on the sleigh read: "The Greatest Racing Picture of All Times, Albany Theatre. Don't Miss It."

Newspaper Gives Party to Kids to Exploit "Driven"

New York, N. Y.—Joe Weil, Universal exploiteer, following the success of the Baby Peggy party at the Rivoli, arranged a second party in conjunction with the New York Daily News, in which 125 winners of a letter contest conducted by Sally Joy Brown of the News, were each awarded a ticket to see "Driven" at the Criterion theatre.

The contest received daily notices in the News for an entire week, a picture of the party appearing prominently in the Sunday News.

"Adam's Rib Societies" Being Formed to Boost Picture

New York, N. Y.—Following the success of the Clarence Anti-Defamation League, two Paramount exploiteers have begun the organization of "Adam's Rib Societies" for the suppression of false propaganda and to uphold the modern Eve, vulgarly called "The Flapper."

John P. McConville, of the Boston Paramount exchange, applied the stunt for the Palace theatre, Lowell, Mass., when Nap De Mara played the picture for an early release. He got a local school teacher with a local reputation and anxious for more publicity to act as secretary of the society and sent out application cards to every household in town. The girls took it up and the newspapers gave front page stories and also commented editorially.

The idea originated with Russell B. Moon, Paramount exploiteer, New Haven, where the "Adam's Rib Society" of the Connecticut was organized. This was not backed by the exhibitor, but by the Paramount exchange and covers the whole State for the benefit of the exhibitors in that territory. Miss Ruth Nehmun, a school teacher, is secretary of the society. Stories have "broken" in nearly every paper in the State.

Spencer G. Sladdin, the Cleveland exploiteer, has announced a society.

Stirs Up Interest In "Flirt" Through Newspaper Stunt

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Residents of Colorado Springs were talking about "The Flirt" long in advance of the opening date as the result of a publicity stunt engineered by Manager J. E. Tompkins of the America theatre and T. Bidwell McCormick, Universal exploiteer.

Nearly two weeks before the first play date, the newspaper received a letter, presumably from a reader, upbraiding the flappers for flirting. It was played up big, and a couple of days later was answered through the press by someone signing as "The Flirt." This aroused quite some interest, and soon readers began to write their opinions, which gave the stunt added local color.

As the time drew near to announce play dates and begin billing the town, the newspaper announced that "The Flirt" had consented to an interview. In this she was quoted as saying that 99 men out of every 100 would flirt, which started things. In each story the amusing side was played up as much as possible, with warnings to wives and sweethearts to keep their eyes on their men for "the Flirt will get them if you don't watch out."

Finally announcements were made that the Flirt in an attempt to win a $500 wager would mingle with the Saturday crowds, accompanied by a reporter, and vamp the male population. This gave space to amusing stories of how wives were expected to keep hubby at home on the day the Flirt was to promenade.

"Money, Money, Money," Is Subject of Essays

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—As a part of the exploitation campaign on "Money, Money, Money," when that picture played at Keiths National theatre, Louisville, film fans were asked what they would do if they suddenly inherited a large sum of money.

The essay idea was supplemented by a Treasure Hunt which had not been used in Louisville for some time and which harmonized with the title and theme of the picture.

Horsemen Used to Ballyhoo "The Kentucky Derby"

DAVENPORT, Iowa—Manager C. G. Behrens of the Family theatre got up a street ballyhoo for "The Kentucky Derby" that was inexpensive and created a great deal of word-of-mouth advertising for the picture.

Some horsemen, riding around town with signs on the horse blankets with wording to the effect: "See Morvich in Action," etc., and a wagon with signs about the picture, "The Kentucky Derby coming to the Family theatre," and notes about the stirring scenes in the film, let everyone know what was at the Family.

"Kick In" Is Tied Up with "Kick" in Near Beer

LANSING, Mich.—A tie-up between the Gladmer theatre and a local near beer maker resulted in an attractive display card reading:

See the Kick In "Kick In" at the Gladmer theatre—Taste the Kick In Aaron's Scotch Brew.

Manager Claud Cady and John D. Howard, Paramount exploiteer, also tied up with the Kiwanis club to sponsor a charity donation for the poor in which the title "Kick In" was worked into a card and the theatre obtained locations otherwise unavailable. Several restaurants and soda water fountains played with the title in connection with coffee and other liquid refreshments.

Mrs. Coogan Asks for Advice as "Oliver Twist" Is Played

Pittsfield, Mass.—A contest in which Mrs. Coogan, mother of Jackie, asked for advice concerning his upbringing, was used in the local newspaper in connection with the run of "Oliver Twist" at the Capitol theatre.

To work up interest in the picture and the young star, Pittsfield mothers were asked by Mrs. Coogan how they would bring up a nine-year-old youngster, absolutely normal in every way except that he happens to be the best known boy in America and worth about a million or more, with the prospect of adding a few extra shekels during the next few years.

It was a subject that appealed to every mother's heart because every mother who has a boy has cherished the ambition that he might some day be as well loved and as successful as Jackie Coogan. Hence the letters came piling in.

It was business building exploitation—exploitation that was helped by a peep hole postcard in which was the message: "Don't Fail to See Me in My Latest Picture at the Capitol Theatre, 'Oliver Twist.' Jackie Coogan," was written backward for the fans to puzzle out.

"Flame of Life" Campaign Puts Weather Jinx to Rout

Seattle, Wash.—A novel method of advertising and exploitation was staged at the Columbia theatre here recently by Publicity Manager Robert Bender for the engagement of "The Flame of Life." The picture happened to run at a time when Seattle was experiencing rather cold weather, and each patron as they entered the theatre, was served a demitasse of hot coffee in the foyer before being shown to a seat.

All coffee, milk and sugar used at the theatre was donated by Seattle firms, whose names were announced on the screen. A special slide shown at each performance invited the members of the audience to take another cup of coffee as they left the theatre.

Children and other patrons who did not care for coffee were served with small candy hearts on individual paper doilies, upon which were printed a few words in regard to the picture.

An electric heater placed in the lobby of the theatre during the cold spell bore the words "'The Flame of Life' will warm your heart." and attracted the attention of pedestrians on the street as they noticed the warmth coming from the heater as they passed by.

For two days during the engagement all street car traffic was tied up by severe snowstorms, so during these days a concerted drive was made upon residents of hotels and apartments in the downtown district, who were not dependent upon street cars or automobiles to reach the theatre. Persons living in the downtown district were called on the phone by a special telephone advertising service company and were told a few words about the picture at the Columbia.

Postcards, purporting to be sent by Priscilla Dean and Baby Peggy, who were co-starring on the same bill, were mailed to residents of the downtown district also, and mentioned the good luck of these persons at being able to live downtown and reach the theatre during the snowstorm.

Contest Given New Angle to Aid "Sherlock Holmes"

BATTLE CREEK, Mich.—For the engagement of "Sherlock Holmes" at the Bijou theatre, A. W. Force, manager, put over with the News and Enquirer an old contest with a new detective angle adapted to the picture.

It called for page layouts, running several days, with the heading, "What Kind of a Detective are You?" splashed across the top of the newspaper.

Other than the theatre space, running two columns down the page, a number of merchants were approached and took large displays. Prizes were given to those who could pick out most of the forty misspelled words in the advertisements.

There were hundreds of replies, the prizs being seats to Sherlock Holmes. Then Mr. Force had a huge board erected outside the Bijou and pinned hundreds of letters containing answers on it, beside a cut-out, mounted on beaver board, of John Barrymore.

Large Book Bearing Float Used to Exploit "The Christian"

Atlanta, Ga.—When "The Christian" showed at the Howard theatre, Manager De Sales Harrison and Goldwynner H. T. Snowden put over a most effective campaign.

The novel street ballyhoo that attracted much attention was a float which carried an imitation volume of "The Christian," 11 x 6 feet. This was reproduced from the original book cover with the following lettering, "At last the world's most famous novel goes to motion pictures, 'The Christian,' by Sir Hall Caine, with Richard Dix, Mae Busch, Gareth Hughes, Phyllis Haver, Mahlon Hamilton and a score of others. Not a sermon but the greatest love story of all times." The truck on which the float was placed was drawn by four beautiful, evenly matched horses with blankets, on which was painted the title of the film. This float was sent through all the business streets of the city for several days preceding the showing and during the first few days of actual screening.

A private showing of "The Christian" was given at the Howard theatre on the Sunday preceding the opening, at which 700 guests assembled. Opinion cards were handed to each person present with the request that they write on the card their opinion of the picture and pass it in to the management. Many of these invited persons gave Mr. Harrison permission to use their opinions, and they were used in letters mailed out to 2,000 patrons.

Doctor's Reception Room Is Put in "Dr. Jack" Lobby

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Manager Claude H. Lee of the Imperial theatre prepared a special atmospheric lobby for "Dr. Jack." The front section of the Imperial's long, narrow lobby was dressed to represent a doctor's reception room. On the entrance was the doctor's shingle, giving the office hours. Inside was a sign reading, "Reception Room..... Make your appointment with Cashier." On one side stood a floor lamp and large wicker chair while on the other side was an instrument case filled with a various assortment of medical instruments.

On each side of the entrance was a life size cut-out of Lloyd and overnead was a row of "Lloyd head" cut-outs.

For a ballyhoo a roadster was bannered and driven thru the streets during the four days of the engagement. Cow bells were hung under the roadster to attract attention.

Double Holiday Program Billed as Thanksgiving Party

Newark, N. J.—An idea which is adaptable to any holiday was used by Manager M. A. Kaske of the Rialto theatre in exploiting "Flesh and Blood" and "Sure Fire Flint" during Thanksgiving week. He sent out to his mailing list regulation postcards, printed in imitation of typewriting, with a fac simile signature, bearing the following copy:

"Dear Friend: We are to have a huge Thanksgiving week party. Eleven stars of the stage and screen are to be guests of honor. Come and join us. These are the stars (then followed a list of the leading players in the two pictures, with selling talk for the photoplays). I am thankful that this unusual array of stars in these unusual pictures are to be here for a week starting Saturday, November 25. If you want to get all the joy there is out of Thanksgiving week, don't miss this remarkable program. You'll have much to be thankful for."

Menu Prizes Appropriate Aid to "Strangers' Banquet"

Minneapolis, Minn.—The management of the Blue Mouse theatre and Goldwynner William H. Branch used an advertising and publicity stunt on "The Strangers' Banquet" that probably attracted the attention of nearly every housewife in Minneapolis in the form of a page tie-up with the Minneapolis Evening Tribune.

Different merchants handling various kinds of food were solicited for ads for a page of co-operative advertising. To the housewives sending in the most tempting menus prepared from the foods advertised on the page the Tribune offered fifty pairs of free tickets to "The Strangers' Banquet." In addition, a first prize of $10 and a second prize of $5 were offered by Witt's catering department for the menus.

This stunt got the housewives of the city interested, as well as the merchants, and it landed a whole lot of free publicity for the film. Hundreds of menus were received.

Ten Foot Horseshoe Around "Hottentot" Cut-out

CHICAGO, Ill.—An attractive street corner display stand was made up on "The Hottentot" by Manager Max Small of the Franklin theatre.

He took a cut-out from the six sheet on the attraction of the two leaping horses, mounted it with a horseshoe that was about ten feet tall and five feet wide and let Chicagoans deduct that he had a racing picture of tense action.

The cut-out was captioned: "A Rollicking Romance of Racing."

A Front Page Story Given Classified Ad Contest

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—In addition to a tie-up with The Milwaukee Journal, which comprised a motion picture made in the Journal, showing how a metropolitan daily is assembled and issued, "A Front Page Story," which was shown at the Rialto theatre, had a further tie-up in the Want-Ad department.

Inasmuch as two cleverly written ads have a most important part in the plot, and realizing that everyone appreciates the importance of a good advertisement these days, The Journal offered prizes to the persons selecting the five best written ads from the Sunday Journal of Feb. 25. First prize was $25; second, $10; third, $5; 10 prizes of $1 each and 50 tickets to the Rialto theatre.

Vital Importance of the Independent Field

THE history of the motion picture business is largely the history of a series of attempted monopolies. Through control of patents, through control of product, through control of theatres, through control of releasing channels—in one way and another, some group has been attempting to gain a monopoly almost as long as there has been any motion picture business.

But it is also the history of a little group of pioneers who chose to be Independent—who chose to fight to the last ditch to defeat the menace threatening the industry and to preserve the integrity of motion picture screens throughout America.

Those men, who risked everything to keep the industry free and open, have constituted what is still known as the Independent Field.

This Independent Market has operated on the State Rights basis, each picture being sold to a local distributor in each territory, as distinguished from the national distributor, who operates his own chain of branch exchanges throughout the entire country.

The history of this field is a brilliant one. The Independent, or State Rights, Market has been the releasing outlet for some of the biggest money makers that the exhibitors of America have ever played, as a brief examination of screen history will show.

The greatest picture of all—the picture which definitely established the motion picture as a medium second to none and which has brought in at the box offices of America more than twenty millions of dollars—"The Birth of a Nation"—was a State Rights picture, released on the Independent Market. As long as there are motion pictures, this picture will be the standard by which others are judged, and it will stand as a great monument to the Independent Field and its possibilities.

Again, one of the comedy classics of the screen—a picture which theatres have played and re-played—a picture that made a star and a director famous—a picture that has brought in around five millions of dollars at theatre box offices "Mickey"—was released on the Independent Market.

Another very successful screen comedy, with one of the greatest comedy casts ever assembled—a cast that could not conceivably be assembled today, save at a prohibitive cost—was also a contribution of the Independent Market to the freedom of the industry—"Tillie's Punctured Romance."

When Thomas H. Ince made what still stands as his most ambitious production, "Civilization," a mighty presentation of the horrors and folly of war, he chose the Independent Market as the avenue of release, and the great spectacle went out on a State Rights basis—another proof of the fact that no exhibitor need fear that his supply of good product could be cut off by any threat of monopoly.

There has been another type of product available in the Independent Market, too; less lavish and spectacular, but with that vital quality—high Exploitation Value. Pictures with titles that meant money at the box office, with a large degree of heart interest and with angles that offered great possibilities for profitable exploitation.

Such pictures, for instance, have been, "Where Is My Wandering Boy?" and "Ten Nights in a Barroom"—pictures that have been money-makers for exhibitors because they were made at a reasonable cost and were available at a price that left an opportunity for profit after the rental was paid.

W. Ray Johnston, Vice-President, Arrow Film Corporation.

The serial field, too, has had worthy representatives among State Rights releases. Such outstanding serials, in recent years, as "The Son of Tarzan" and "The Lost City" were released on the Independent Market.

To this product, and to the Independent Market, must go much of the credit for the fact that the motion picture business today is not in the control of any one group.

Many exhibitors, too, have dealt with the State Rights distributor wherever possible for the reason that he is dealing with a local concern in his own territory—because there are no contracts to go to New York for a final O. K. and no disputes to be settled at the home office.

One of the very outstanding figures in this Independent Market, for many years, has been W. E. Shallenberger, better known to his associates as "Doc" Shallenberger, the president of the Arrow Film Corporation, a company which he has made stand for the best in the Independent Field.

Dr. Shallenberger has become known to exhibitors everywhere as one of the champions of the Independence of the Motion Picture Industry and one of the leading opponents of those who sought to monopolize it.

He has had the courage to keep up this fight through discouragements and setbacks and opposition, year after year, bringing out a volume of product that has helped to assure exhibitors of an adequate supply of pictures, despite threatened monopolies.

Arrow Film Corporation has always sought to produce a type of picture that would be a definite money-maker for the exhibitor. Box office value, plus entertainment value, has been Dr. Shallenberger's constant aim, and how well he has succeeded may be seen by a review of some of the outstanding pictures this company has brought out in past years.

Starting in 1914, Dr. Shallenberger launched the Arrow Film Corporation as a producing company. The first product was a series of two-reel photoplays featuring Tom Moore and Anna Q. Nilsson.

Dr. Shallenberger then turned his attention to special productions, and in 1915 filmed the Hall Caine novel, "The Deemster." His experiences in placing this for distribution convinced him that the state right field was the logical channel of release and the picture was handled on this basis.

His contact with the State Rights field in handling "The Deemster" brought his attention to the fact that there was a definite need for an organization which would act as an impartial middleman, bringing together the independent producer and the independent exchange, acting as an equitable agent for both.

With this ideal firmly fixed, he began to build the Arrow Film Corporation on its present basis, confident that the validity of his idea would ultimately be recognized. The company began in a small, one-room office in the Times building, New York, and its growth has been such that today it occupies nearly an entire floor in the Candler building, and has offices in such foreign capitals as London and Paris.

Not only has the company grown in size, however, but in prestige—in its recognition as one of the important factors in the motion picture industry. No longer can Arrow be said to be any less important than the so-called "national" distributors—it merely operates on a different basis, and one which Dr. Shallenberger firmly believes to be more fundamentally sound. Its program for the current year will total better than a hundred releases—a schedule that places it among those entitled to be called the "leading" firms in the business.

These pictures are all being built to the Arrow standard of definite box office value, with the idea of giving the independent exchange a readily salable type of picture which in turn, will make money for the exhibitor, through its exploitable value.

Throughout the United States more than 150 exchanges are handling Arrow product of one sort or another, and throughout the foreign field the company has some 300 customers.

Eleven producing companies, eight of them making feature product and three making short subjects, are under contract to provide material for the Arrow program.

Back of all of this stands the reputation and ideals of Dr. Shallenberger, who has consistently fought for the application of sound business methods in the handling of pictures—for square dealing with all, for careful merchandising, for analysis of the market and an effort to meet its needs and demands.

Just as, according to Emerson, "An institution is the lengthened shadow of a man," so is Arrow Film Corporation the "lengthened shadow" of Dr. Shallenberger, and reflects his purposes and aims. Surrounded by an able and carefully selected corps of executives, with faith in his ideals and motives, Dr. Shallenberger has seen his company—at first little more than an idea—grow into a recognized institution.

At the present time eight important feature productions are on the releasing schedule, "None So Blind," "Jacqueline" or "Blazing Barriers," "Rip-Tide," "The Little Red Schoolhouse," "The Broken Violin," "Man and Wife," "The Streets of New York" and "Lost in a Big City." These are described in the following pages.

"Lost In a Big City" Holds Appeal For All

IT IS seldom that a photodrama comes along which holds an appeal for everyone, but we are supremely confident that the new Arrow-Blazed Trail Special, "Lost in a Big City," is such a picture.

A production may have a universal theme and yet, taking it incident by incident and scene by scene, it may be totally lacking in audience appeal. In reviewing in our mind's eye pictures which have stood out from the rest, we find that in almost every case those that met with the greatest success were old-time melodramas, "Way Down East," "The Old Homestead," "Rags to Riches," "The Streets of New York" and "Ten Nights in a Bar Room." These photoplays triumphed because they combined all the elements necessary to good entertainment, thrills, humor, pathos, heart-interest and suspense. This is most certainly the recipe for a sure-fire hit. "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" conclusively proved this, not so long ago, when it swept the country in a blaze of glory. Greatly encouraged by the reception accorded this wonderful picturization of the famous old stage play, Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., decided to make another which would be even bigger and better in every way. And so they began work on that equally well-known and well-beloved melodrama, "Lost in a Big City." It was adapted to the screen by the same scenarist, L. Case Russell, and the cast is headed, as before, by John Lowell and Baby Ivy Ward, and includes Jane Thomas and Evangeline Russell.

John Lowell's rise to fame has been extraordinarily rapid. In fact, it may be said that "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" alone has served to make his name known from coast to coast. Strong, virile and rugged, he seems to radiate the very spirit of the great outdoors. It has often been said of him that he is not, in the strictest sense of the word, an actor but simply a man of extraordinary personality, who works before the camera as he would act if he were actually faced with the situation he is to portray.

John Lowell's hold upon the affections of the public will most certainly increase as he goes from triumph to triumph. His work in "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" is magnificent—but it is absolutely outshone by the splendid characterization which he contributes to "Lost in a Big City."

Baby Ivy Ward is probably the best known child motion picture actress today. She has played stellar parts for Metro, Famous Players and a host of other big producing companies. She has appeared with such prominent and well-known stars—both on the stage and on the screen—as Elsie Ferguson, Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Ethel Clayton, Robert Warwick and Dorothy Dalton.

Jane Thomas does splendidly in her role of the deserted wife. She is one of the most brilliant of the younger actresses before the camera today and bids fair to become one of the screen's leading luminaries in the near future. Her excellent work in the big Fox special, "The Town That Forgot God," is known to all. In addition she has appeared in many other successful and popular productions, among which may be mentioned Goldwyn's "The North Wind's Malice" and "Restless Wives."

Evangeline Russell comes rightfully into her heritage of histrionic ability, for her father is one of the screen's foremost actors, while her mother is one of the greatest scenarists in the profession. In spite of these advantages, Miss Russell chose to make her way entirely on her own rather than to bask in the doubtful splendor of reflected glory. And so, little by little and bit by bit, she worked her way up from the ranks of extras until her ability won for her a place in the cast of "Lost in a Big City"—a place which she is ideally fitted to fill. By her excellent handling of the part of Blanche Maberly she definitely establishes herself as a screen star of great promise.

The balance of the cast includes many players who appeared in "Ten Nights in a Bar Room." The names of Charles Beyer, Charles Mackay and James Phillips, who will be remembered for their sterling characterizations in that big triumph, have all become members of the Blazed Trail Stock Company.

The direction of the picture was placed in the hands of George Irving, one of the foremost wielders of the megaphone in the industry, who has a vast string of successes to his credit. Among his many other notable cinema achievements may be mentioned "The Misleading Lady," a Metro production starring Bert Lytell; "Hidden Fires," a Goldwyn picture; "Daughters of Destiny," in which Olga Petrova was starred, and "The Witching Hour." He has, however, never achieved a production of more sterling merit than "Lost in a Big City"—a picture of which any director might justly be proud.

The story deals with the adventures of Harry Farley, a prospector—played by John Lowell—who returns from Alaska after many years to his home town to learn that his sister Helen's husband has deserted her and that she has sold the old farm and gone with her little, blind child, Florence, to live in New York. He starts immediately for the city and after a long search finds them in a squalid tenement.

Richard Norman, the missing husband whom Helen believes to be dead, has, under the name of Sidney Heaton, married Blanche Maberly, the daughter of an old friend of his father's. Maberly is a rich banker and it is Blanche's wealth which has attracted Heaton. One day Dick Watkins, an old pal of Heaton's, who had been paid to report his death, turns up and threatens to blackmail him. In order to raise money Heaton joins a gang of bootleggers, whose smuggling headquarters is in the Adirondacks, and cleans up a large sum in his first deal. Watkins, hearing of this, demands more money for his silence, but Heaton cannot see it that way and, as a last resort, decides to kidnap his little, blind daughter, Florence, and hide her in the Adirondack retreat. In this way he will remove a strong link in the blackmailer's chain of evidence.

Meanwhile, Helen, his first wife, dies and Watkins, fearing that he will be cheated out of his money, turns the tables on Heaton by telling Farley what he knows.

It is here that the big thrills begin. There is a smashing fight in a saloon when Farley tries to rescue his little niece; a chase in an aeroplane to a lodge in the Adirondacks; an exciting ride by state troopers to save one of their men who has been trapped in a blazing fire; another big fight between the troopers and the bootleggers, and a final, tremendous climax when Heaton, in attempting to escape, meets death as his car veers from the road and crashes over a waterfall.

Here is a real story! A story that will cause everyone to rivet their attention to the screen until the final fade-out; whose heart-interest and pathos will bring a lump into their throats and whose thrilling scenes will keep them on the edge of their seats, tense with excitement. In brief, a wonder photoplay of the type that will make history.

John Lowell and His Blazed Trail Company

JOHN LOWELL, star and producer of the Blazed Trail Productions, one of the Arrow "Great Eight," and of the highly successful "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is one of the most picturesque figures on the screen today. A real man of the outdoors, there is none of the pose of the usual screen hero about him.

Although Mr. Lowell is quite emphatic in insisting that he is not an actor at all, his success on the screen has been immediate. A sincere and commanding figure (he is fortunate in having the type of personality that registers on the screen to the best possible advantage), and the very fact that he is unhampered by stage tradition and training lends a vigorous forcefulness and directness to his work that is most effective.

In his portrayal of rugged characters, Lowell has a large supply of material on which to draw, gained from his long experience in the West, where he was born.

As a result, it was logical and appropriate that he should locate the studio of Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., in the heart of the Adirondacks, in the midst of the great outdoors, where pictures could be made that would reflect that spirit. Believing in the future of the independent market, he has chosen that channel of release and is definitely building his productions for that market.

L. Case Russell Is Well Known

L. CASE RUSSELL, who has prepared the scripts for all of the Arrow-Blazed Trail Productions, including "Lost in a Big City" and "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," is one of the best known scenarists in the entire motion picture industry, having been associated with many of the leading companies.

She is the author of more than 500 photoplays, perhaps nine-tenths of which have been original screen stories, and the remainder adaptations. She was associated with the old Biograph company, with Vitagraph, with the World Film Corporation, with Triangle, with Kalem, with Metro, with Fox, and many other companies, the names of which would comprise a veritable roster of the industry.

She prepared scripts for 27 of the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, which are still remembered as among the cleanest and most amusing comedies that the screen has had. For Madame Olga Petrova, she wrote six stories for pictures which were released through First National.

As a result of this long and varied experience, she brings to her work a deep understanding and appreciation of the requirements of the screen, and is admirably qualified to construct for Blazed Trail productions the type of vehicle demanded by the state right market, with the essential elements of human interest, action and characterization.

Jane Thomas Hailed As Find

JANE THOMAS was chosen for her role in "Lost in a Big City" after a long search for a girl to play the part of Helen Farley, the much wronged wife who is lured from a quiet village to the city, and there deserted with her little blind daughter.

Irving Is Director of Wide Experience

GEORGE IRVING, who directed "Lost in a Big City" for Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., and who has been engaged to direct the next picture, now in preparation under the temporary working title, "Power," has been identified with the direction of screen successes for many years. His list of accomplishments includes many successes, both artistic and financial, of which any director might well be proud.

Among Mr. Irving's successes may be remembered such sterling photoplays as "The Misleading Lady," a Metro production in which Bert Lytell was starred; "Hidden Fires," a Goldwyn picture; "The Wakefield Case," "Daughter or Destiny," which was one of Madame Olga Petrova's greatest successes, "The Witching Hour," "To Hell with the Kaiser," which was a phenomenal money maker, and many others.

From this long experience, Irving has a thorough knowledge of the elements that go to make a successful screen drama, and is well qualified to create pictures for the independent market, where each picture must stand on its own merits and value.

Although comparatively a newcomer to the screen, Miss Thomas has already gone far. With the Fox Film Corporation, she appeared to advantage in "Silver Wings," in which Mary Carr was starred, and in "The Town that Forgot God," the elaborate special production directed by Harry Millarde, she acquitted herself with distinction in the role of a humble school teacher, one of the leading roles.

Her work in "Queen of the Moulin Rouge" also attracted attention, and in "Breaking Home Ties" she capably handled a highly emotional role. Her work came to the attention of the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, as a result of which she has been added to the cast of "The Exciters," under the direction of Richard Ordynski, and is now working in that production.

Miss Russell Promising Actress

EVANGELINE RUSSELL, who appears in "Lost in a Big City," comes naturally by her screen ability, as she is the daughter of L. Case Russell.

Although she is comparatively a newcomer to the screen, her excellent work as Blanche Maberly in "Lost in a Big City" has attracted the attention of critics everywhere, and she has received the heartiest of praise for her work in the part. She has been carefully and quietly preparing for the work by playing in short length dramas, and with the splendid start given her by the hit she has scored in "Lost in a Big City," she should go far.

Miss Russell will again have an important part in the next Blazed Trail production, which will go into work shortly at the Gloversville, N. Y., studio of the company.

Haley Is Talented Lad

WHITNEY W. HALEY, who appears in "Lost in a Big City" is a newcomer to the screen, but is regarded as an unusually promising boy. His work as Guboni, a young Italian boy, in this picture, has attracted much favorable comment, and a brilliant future is being predicted for him on the screen.

Although new to the screen, he has had highly valuable stage training. He understudied young Peter Grimm in "The Return of Peter Grimm" for two years, and played the part for a portion of that time, bringing him under the master hand of David Belasco, and giving him an excellent technical foundation.

Since appearing in "Lost in a Big City," he has appeared in "Java Head," the Famous Players-Lasky release.

Baby Ward is Child Prodigy

BABY IVY WARD, who is prominent in the cast of "Lost in a Big City," and who appeared in the same capacity in "Ten Nights in a Barroom," is truly a veteran "trouper," despite her years, as she started in pictures at the age of six months, in England.

She was brought to this country a short time later and has appeared in pictures almost continually since. At the age of 15 months she appeared with Nat Goodwin in "Nursery Rhymes." She came to the attention of Harley Knoles, and worked under his direction in a number of pictures for World Film, in support of such stars as Robert Warwick and Ethel Clayton.

Her next engagement was with Famous Players-Lasky, where she appeared in the Ann Pennington vehicle, "Sunshine Ann"; with Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House"; played the part of Daisy in "Little Women"; with Dorothy Dalton in "Guilty of Love," and other Paramount pictures.

Miss Brody Is Splendid Actress

ANNE G. BRODY, another member of the "Lost in a Big City" cast is a veteran performer, having played nearly every type of role that a character woman might conceivably be called upon to play. She has been seen as a negro mammy, an Indian squaw, as Italian, French, Jewish, French-Canadian and other characters. This wide range of characterizations has given her a reputation for extreme versatility. In addition to her role in "Lost in a Big City," she has recently appeared in such productions as Cosmopolitan's "The Go Getter" and Paramount's "Glimpses of the Moon," as well as in material put out by the Educational department of Fox.

Keller Is Screen Veteran

EDGAR KELLER, who appears in "Lost in a Big City" as Salvatori, the keeper of an Italian dive, has been identified with character roles on the screen for many years. For six years he was with the western studios of Vitagraph and for two years he appeared in Thomas H. Ince productions, where he built up a reputation as a versatile and capable character man. He appeared in countless productions during this time, and played an endless variety of roles. The pictures in which he has appeared are too numerous to list, but his ability as a character actor shows to excellent advantage, and much praise has been accorded his work.

Action scenes from "The Little Red Schoolhouse," a Martin Heyl production for Arrow release.

"Little Red Schoolhouse" Has Great Appeal

"THE Little Red Schoolhouse," like its predecessors, "Ten Nights in a Barroom" and "The Streets of New York," is possessed of a title which has a universal appeal. It is a Martin J. Heyl production, adapted from the famous old stage play by Hal Reid and boasts a splendid all-star cast. Martha Mansfield, E. K. Lincoln, Sheldon Lewis, Edmund Breese, Harlan Knight and Paul Everton, are the featured members of one of the greatest aggregations of screen players ever assembled.

John G. Adolfi directed the picture and is perhaps better qualified than nine out of ten directors working today. Logically, for a man to be a first rate wielder of the megaphone he, himself, must needs have gone through the show game, and have seen it from every angle.

The story deals with the thrilling adventures which come unexpectedly to a beautiful young school teacher (played by Martha Mansfield) in a prosaic little country town: A murder mystery; a thrilling chase in speed boats through a storm lashed sea; a terrific fight with a gang of bootleggers—these, and a hundred other thrills are contrasted with engaging vistas of peace and quiet in a little village: scenes of happy childhood in a little school and scenes of rustic simplicity around the old blacksmith shop and the general store.

"The Little Red Schoolhouse" presents an engaging blend of humor, pathos, heart-interest and thrills—and through it all there runs a beautiful love theme. We don't think we are putting it too strong when we say this famous old melodrama bids fair to repeat the remarkable success attained by "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

Every accessory for advertising and exploitation has been carefully thought out and prepared; and every exchangeman and exhibitor throughout the country may feel assured of the usual high order of co-operative service which Arrow always stands ready to give.

Some of the highlights in "The Rip Tide," an A. B. Maescher production, released by Arrow Film Corporation.

Unusual Photoplay Presented in "Rip-Tide"

ONE of the most unusual productions ever to be released in the Independent market is "The Rip Tide," which has just been created for Arrow Film Corporation by A. B. Maescher Productions. Here is a picture with a story so daring and unusual as to hold every observer engrossed; with lavish and magnificent sets which will impress themselves indelibly upon the memory of every beholder; with a cast of players which compares more than favorably with any other aggregation of cinema celebrities ever assembled for the enacting of a screen drama; and, above all, with such superlatively intelligent direction and clean-cut technical perfection as can not fail to lift it far above the run of even the so-called super-specials and install it securely in a foremost place among the year's great pictures.

J. Grubb Alexander, author of "The Rip Tide" and scores of other tremendously successful scenarios as well, claims that it represents his greatest achievement. Eugene Evans, general manager of Maescher Productions, and Jack Pratt, the company's director general, have both claimed that "The Rip Tide" represents their supreme achievement. And when one takes into consideration the long years that both of these men have devoted to the making of motion pictures, this statement carries a vast deal of weight.

To the making of "The Rip Tide," too, each individual member of the cast seems to have given of his or her best. Stuart Holmes, for instance, rises to supreme emotional heights in the playing of Count Boris Voronsky and it is safe to assert that no Mansfield or Barrymore of the speaking stage has ever builded a more vivid picture. Rosemary Theby as Voronsky's deserted wife is excellent, while the work of J. Frank Glendon and Diana Alden indicates clearly why these two young players have gained and held the affections of so vivid a throng of admirers. And last but not least there is that sterling artist, George Rigas, who, in a role rich in opportunity, creates a character which, whether present or not, dominates every situation in the photoplay. Mr. Rigas has enjoyed a tremendously successful stage career abroad and in the United States, having appeared in "Romeo and Juliet," in "Ghosts" and in Tolstoi's "Redemption," as well as many other big plays of similar calibre. His screen career includes such productions as "Woman," "The Scar," "The Dangerous Moment," and "Children of the Night.' To the role of "the Philosopher" all the charm and polish which have won for him so prominent a place in Screendom's Hall of Fame, he brings.

Taking it all in all, "The Rip Tide" is a great picture,—great in theme and great in execution. It must undoubtedly prove an artistic and sensational success and it is pretty safe to venture the prediction that it will be set up as a standard for motion picture construction through the years to come.

Powerful Story Related in "Man and Wife"

ONE of the best casts ever assembled for any picture is to be found in "Man and Wife," one of the biggest productions of Arrow's "Great Eight" series. It as directed by John L. McCutcheon, who ecently made "The Message of Emile Coue" or Educational. The cast includes such well-nown and popular players as Gladys Leslie, obert Elliott, Maurice Costello, Norma hearer, Edna May Spooner and Ernest filliard.

The story of "Man and Wife" is one of ie most unusual ever to reach the screen. It acks a tremendous punch, and is handled in ich a way that it cannot possibly give offense the most particular spectator. It deals ith the adventures of two country girls—sisters—who both married the same man. They were brought up on a little farm in the Berkshires. One was content to milk the cows, help with the house work and enjoy the simple comforts of country life. The other longed for excitement and romance; her soul was cramped and her impulses stifled in the little farm house in the Berkshire Hills; she wanted to live in the city with its bright life and hectic pleasures. Finally she ran away and was swept into life's seething maelstrom . . . . What happened to the strayed girl and the strange part which her sister, who stayed at home, played in her life years later, make a tremendously engrossing photoplay which will rivet the attention of spectators until the final fade-out.

This is a production, as may readily be seen, which boasts unusual possibilities for putting it over. It is a showman's picture; one which we feel confident will prove remarkably successful. An extensive and effective exploitation and advertising campaign has been worked out for it that includes many novelties. There is a striking sticker, a post card of teaser variety, an unusual mailing tag with wedding ring attached and several teaser ads that will make them sit up and take notice. All in all, "Man and Wife" is a production of the highest calibre—one that cannot be played up too strong—and we have spared no effort in preparing worth-while material toward that end.

Scenes from "None So Blind," directed by Burton King for State Pictures Corporation; released by Arrow Film Corporation.

"None So Blind" Burton King's Masterpiece

ONE of the strangest and at the same time one of the strongest stories ever to be picturized is "None So Blind," he second Arrow-Burton King production.

Throughout "None So Blind" there runs a dual love motif: A young aristocrat has become enamored of a beautiful girl who is not of his faith, while a charming debutante who walks in the rarefied atmosphere of the highest social strata has met and given her heart in the keeping of a boy of Russian parentage.

The theme is further complicated by the fact that the parents of each of the young couples involved in this four-sided tangle have made totally different plans. How it all works out in the end makes a picture play which is as engrossing as it is unusual.

Too much credit cannot be given Dore Davidson who, in the role of an old Jewish father, rises to sublime emotional heights. Mr. Davidson, featured by Cosmopolitan Productions in "Humoresque," and starred in "The Good Provider," is one of the greatest actors before the motion picture camera today. In his long and eminently successful career he has never given a performance which approaches his work in "None So Blind."

Edward Earle, last seen in "The Streets of New York," registers a distinct triumph in "None So Blind." A clean-cut, capable player of infinite popularity, he demonstrates once again his absolute mastery of the histrionic art. It is safe to assert that the tremendous personal following which in a recent contest elected him to the throne of the world's most popular motion picture star, will be vastly enhanced by this, his newest and greatest role.

Opposite Edward Earle is Zena Keefe, a beautiful and gifted artiste, whose successes are too numerous to bear repetition. Miss Keefe plays a dual role and brings to it the rare distinction and beauty which invariably characterize her work.

The balance of the cast is a strong one, and includes such well and favorably known players as Anders Randolf and many others of almost equal importance.

Evan aside from the fact that "None So Blind" is made extraordinary by a glittering galaxy of screen luminaries, it would merit attention by the sheer strength of the story alone. It is certainly one of the most entertaining pictures ever filmed, rich in drama and heart-interest and infinitely strong in its appeal. In fact, Burton King, who directed "The Streets of New York," one of the biggest of recent successes, considers it his greatest work; and when you take into consideration his standing in the directorial field, that recommendation carries considerable weight.

A few scenes from "Jacqueline," a Pine Tree production directed by Dell Henderson for Arrow release.

"Jacqueline" Production of Unusual Calibre

A VERY definite idea of the calibre of "Jacqueline or Blazing Barriers," may be gained from a careful analysis of the cast chosen for its enacting. Marguerite Courtot, Lew Cody, Sheldon Lewis, Effie Shannon, Edmund Breese, Charlie Fang, Joseph Depew, Helen Rowland, Paul Panzer, Gus Weinberg, Russell Griffin and Kate Bruce are but a few of the big names which will prove to be so many magnets for the theatre-going public and a veritable gold mine for the exhibitor.

Dell Henderson, who directed "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers," acknowledges this picture as his masterpiece.

One of the high-lights of the picture occurs when, through the exigencies of the plot, two daring lumberjacks run Devil's Gorge in a canoe. This sequence is unique in its entirety. According to Mr. Henderson, five separate and distinct attempts were made to run these ferocious rapids, and these five attempts cost five canoes and—nearly—two lives, for if it had not been for the quickness and courage of Mr. Henderson and his assistant, Bernard Lewis, the last two men who matched their stamina against the treacherous white waters of the gorge would not be here today. And then when it appeared that the idea would have to be abandoned there happened upon the scene Walter Hines, millionaire sportsman, a native of Maine and a close, personal friend of Mr. Henderson's. Learning what was required, he promptly volunteered his services and, making a long story shorter, he, accompanied by his Indian guide, succeeded in accomplishing what had never before been done in the history of Maine—ran the rapids in Devil's Gorge! A veritable battery of cameras, placed along the banks, caught every moment of the daring run and in fact every expression of the men's faces whereon are indicated the various emotions indicative of the strain under which they lay. It is questionable if ever before such a remarkable example of courage has been recorded by the camera.

The outstanding feature of "Jacqueline, or Blazing Barriers" is the forest fire, a description of which is a task to baffle the greatest literary mind. Suffice to say that for spectacular magnificence and nerve-tingling thrill the silver sheet has never known anything to equal or even approach it. Mr. Henderson and his staff, plus a group of technical experts, worked three weeks, laying the necessary preparations for the conflagration. An entire seventy-five acre island in Casco Bay, Maine, was burned off and the result achieved more than justified the time and expense involved in creating the effects. For the screen has been enriched by such a spectacle as will afford tremendous pleasure to vast throngs of theatregoers throughout the length and breadth of the land.

"Streets of New York" Given Strong Cast

WHEN Burton King, the well known producer and director, began work on "The Streets of New York," he determined to make it the biggest and finest production of his career. He arranged with Leota Morgan, one of the best writers for the screen today, to do the adaptation of the famous old stage play, and then set about assembling a cast of superlative merit. Edward Earle, Barbara Castleton, Dorothy Mackaill, Anders Randolf and Leslie King are the featured members of this splendid cast, and each and every one has a string of Dorothy Mackaill, although comparatively a newcomer to the screen, has already established a reputation as a screen actress of sterling ability. She graduated to the silver sheet from Ziegfeld's Follies. Since then she has appeared in a great many successful pictures which include several Torchy Comedies with Johnny Hines, and "The Lotus Eater," starring John Barrymore.

Anders Randolf and Leslie King are too well known to need any encomium here. They are both "heavies" of international repute whose vast screen experience is clearly evident in their excellent handling of the roles of "the Wizard of Wall Street," and "the Wizard of the Bowery" in "The Streets of New York." Among Mr. Randolf's best known and best liked pictures are "Black Beach," for D. W. Griffith and "Jim the Penman," which starred Lionel Barrymore.

Mr. King will be remembered as "Jacques" Forget-Not" in D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm."

"The Streets of New York" had its premiere at Frank G. Hall's million-dollar State theatre in Jersey City. The picture opened to enormous business, which increased with each succeeding performance, and the termination of the engagement saw a new house record established. Its remarkable success was repeated at the Arcadia theatre, Reading, Pa. W. J. Mahoney telegraphed that he had closed a week's engagement of "The Streets of New York" at his Rialto theatre, Providence, R. I., playing to the second biggest week the house ever had.

Strong Heart Appeal in "The Broken Violin"

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of Arrow Film Corporation, announces the completion of "The Broken Violin," which has just been completed by Atlantic Features, Inc., under the direction of Jack Dillon.

This production was made from an original story by George Rogan and scenarized by L. Case Russell, whose work in "Ten Nights in a Barroom and "Lost in a Big City" has proved her one of the most capable scenarists in the industry.

This is the second production of Atlantic Features and is an elaborate and spectacular picture with a splendid cast in the personnel of Reed Howes, a comparative newcomer to the screen but one who has been classed by critics as a distinct "comer;" Dorothy Mackaill, whose work in "The Streets of New York" and the Edwin Carewe production, "Mighty Lak a Rose," has been causing wide comment; Zena Keefe whose work is familiar to everyone; and little Rita Rogan, the phenomenal child actress who in this picture exceeds anything she has previously done. Miss Rogan, although only eight years of age, is well known to motion picture fans and exhibitors through her work with D. W. Griffith in "Orphans of the Storm" and the Cosmopolitan production, "The Wild Goose," —in which the reviewers said she practically walked away with the picture. Others in the cast are Jack Richardson, Gladden James, Henry Sedley and Tammany Young.

The scenes of "The Broken Violin" are laid on Long Island and in the northwoods of Canada, and the picture is particularly remarkable from a pictorial standpoint as the natural resources of these places and the homes of the Smart Set furnish a splendid background to which the camera work of George Peters has done full justice.

The story is that of a young man deprived of his inheritance through the unscrupulousness of the private secretary of his grandfather, his fight to regain his fortune, and final triumph of right over wrong. A beautiful love story runs through the picture which, by the way, culminates in what is said to be one of the most thrilling and spectacular scenes of its kind ever made. Herein Reed Howes rescoes his sister, Rita, from a speeding motor boat by the expedient of pursuing it in an aeroplane, from which he drops to the boat. After a thrilling fight with the villain he succeeds in rescuing her and returns to claim his fortune and his bride.

Atlantic Features Has Strong Organization

AMONG the companies producing for the Arrow Film Corporation is Atlantic Features, Inc., of which R. W. Wood, Jr., is president, Tom Keck, vice-president and Percival Carter, secretary and treasurer. President Wood in an interview this week said:

"Before definitely deciding to enter the motion picture industry we made a very careful investigation as to the availability of a market for independent products, and having satisfied ourselves that a big market really did exist, we formed a producing organization.

"Two pictures were then made, and after looking over the field of independent distributors, decided to get if possible a releasing contract with the Arrow Film Corporation, knowing that they had a very fine organization made up of excellent executives and a par excellent sales force."

The two pictures which have been finished are entitled, "The Broken Violin," from the well known story by George R. Regan, on the staff of the New York American, and "High Speed Lee," taken from the Saturday Evening Post story, "Only A Few of Us Left," by J. P. Marquand.

About "None So Blind" Players and Director

BURTON KING, who directed the eminently successful Arrowplay, "The Streets of New York," is also the director of "None So Blind," one of the "Great Eight." King has been associated with motion pictures for many years, and has been responsible for the direction of many successful photoplays. His long career has included such pictures as "The Discarded Woman," "The Lurking Peril," a Pathe serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, and "The Man from Beyond," starring Houdini, which was King's first independent production.

King has great faith in the independent market, and is devoting his best efforts to creating suitable pictures for it.

Vitagraph Favorite in Arrow Special

MAURICE COSTELLO, who appears in the cast of two of the "Great Eight" being distributed by Arrow, "Man and Wife" and "None So Blind," needs no introduction to those in the motion picture industry. For years, with Vitagraph, he was perhaps the most popular male star on the screen, and his portrayal of Sidney Carton in "A Tale of Two Cities" is still remembered as one of his finest, and he also starred in "Mr. Barnes of New York," "The Man Who Could Not Beat God," and other notable successes of those days. Now he has successfully made the transition to character roles and is achieving a new popularity along other lines.

Thematic Cue Sheet Seen as Exhibitor Aid

ALTHOUGH many new ideas and suggestions are offered almost daily for the improvement of motion picture presentation, the one really big and beneficial thing that has been accepted and adopted by progressive film distributing companies is the Thematic Music Cue Sheet, which is available to exhibitors showing many of the pictures released by the Arrow Film Corporation.

This cue sheet, which is furnished to the exhibitor without charge, is undoubtedly one of the greatest services being rendered to theatre men today.

Has Big Part in "None So Blind"

DORE DAVIDSON, who ranks as one of the screen's best character actors of his type, has a prominent role in "None So Blind," the Burton King production which is among Arrow's "Great Eight." Davidson appeared in support of Vera Gordon in "Humoresque," and registered a triumph as the old Jewish father that was second only to that of Miss Gordon herself. He again appeared with her in "The Good Provider," where he further enhanced his reputation for characterizations of this type, and even surpassed his work in "Humoresque." In "None So Blind" he is given an excellent opportunity for his portrayal of a Jewish father.

Arrow's "Man and Wife" Has Excellent Cast

JOHN McCUTCHEON, director of "Man and Wife" for Effanem Productions, one of the Arrow "Great Eight," is well known as a director of box office pictures.

McCutcheon served for a number of years for many of the leading directors of the industry as assistant director, and was known as the highest paid assistant in the business.

He then branched out as a full fledged director, and was called in to take over "Determination," which several directors had worked on. He spent between five and six months on this production, putting in every possible effort to whip it into shape.

After this he made a series of three pictures for the state right market, then connected with Motion Picture Arts, Inc., for whom he is now doing short subjects, to be followed by a series of features as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made.

In "Man and Wife," Director McCutcheon has screened an appealing story, dealing with an unusual problem, and containing a high degree of heart interest.

National Laboratories' Head Sees Great Progress

MARK M. DINTENFASS, head of the National Laboratories, who has been connected with the motion picture industry almost from its inception, now devotes his time exclusively to the manufacturing of positive prints, including work for Arrow.

Mr. Dintenfass has one of the finest equipped laboratories in America and said that nothing ever pleased him more than to have producers inspect his plant and the type of work it is turning out.

Hilliard Coming to Front Rapidly

ERNEST HILLIARD, who is rapidly coming to the front as a screen heavy, and who gives one of his typical characterizations in "Man and Wife," is a nephew of the noted stage star, Robert Hilliard, and was born in Alsace-Lorraine. Educated in England and the United States, he began his film career in 1915, appearing in small parts in Thanhauser and World Film pictures. He gave this up returned to the United States to re-enter pictures, since which time he has forged ahead rapidly, appearing in "The Ruling Passion" with George Arliss, in Fox's "Silver Wings" and "Who Are My Parents?" in Hodkinson's "Married People," and other pictures.

Mother Role Played by Veteran

EDNA MAY SPOONER, who appears as the mother in "Man and Wife," is a veteran "trouper," whose life has literally been spent behind the footlights and under the Kliegls. Starting as a child actress and starring with the Spooner Stock Company, she later came to Brooklyn, where she was starred in such plays as "Trilby," "When Knighthood was in Flower," "Magda," "Camille," "Madame X," and others, and appeared with great success as Juliet and Desdemona.

Strong Cast Secured for Arrow's "Jacqueline"

CHARLIE FANG, who is a member of the cast of "Jacqueline," one of the "Great Eight" which Arrow is distributing, is unique among motion picture actors. He is a Chinese, and possesses all of the subtle, clever artistry of that race.

One of the first roles in which he came into procinence was in "Dream Street," where he gave a memorable portrayal, so he possesses the screen Croix de Guerre of having serving under the master hand of D. W. Griffith. Among the other photoplays in which he has appeared in "Married People," a Hodkinson release. In "Jacqueline," however, he has one of his biggest opportunities, and it is expected that this picture will further add to his laurels. Mr. Fang throws himself heart and soul into his work, and makes of his character a living, breathing reality. He forgets for the time that he is Charlie Fang, and becomes the character that he is portraying. None can testify to this better than Sheldon Lewis, who is also in the cast of "Jacqueline." The two were called upon to stage a fight scene, and Fang became so intensely allied with his character, that he made the fight a real one, and Lewis emerged with a battered countenance, but the result is a fight scene that is said to be one of the most convincing the screen has had.

Clever Child Has Fine Role

BABY HELEN Rowland, the attractive child player who is a member of the brilliant cast of "Jacqueline," is rapidly acquiring a reputation as one of the cleverest child actresses on the screen. In "Timothy's Quest," where she appeared as Timothy's little sister, she received wide notice from the critics, and showed an unusual gift for screen portrayal.

Her screen career has been an extensive one, an she has appeared in a number of pictures, including "Silas Marner," for Milo Productions, "The Empty Cradle," "What's Wrong with the Women?" a Daniel Carson Goodman production, "My Friend the Devil," and in the C. C. Burr All-Star Comedies with Charles Murray. She appeared with Master Joseph Depew in "Timothy's Quest," "Disposing of Mother" and "The Night Before Christmas," as she again does in "Jacqueline."

Boy Actor Appears in Jacqueline

JOSEPH DEPEW, the promising youngster who appears in "Jacqueline" has a splendid record of portrayals to his credit.

He appeared in "Timothy's Quest," where his work attracted the attention of critics everywhere, and led to lavish praise for his work as Timothy. He also worked in D. W. Griffith's production, "Dream Street," in "Clay Dollars," in "The Broken Silence" and in "Java Head," the George Mellord production for Paramount. In "Timothy's Quest" he appeared in conjunction with Baby Helen Rowland, as was also the cast in "Disposing of Mother" and "The Night Before Christmas."

Maescher to Produce For Independent Market

A. B. Maescher, a prominent real estate operator of Los Angeles, formed the A. B. Maescher producing unit with the intention of making pictures exclusively for the Independent market, and they have put together one of the finest producing organizations now in the motion picture field, appointing Mr. Eugene Evans General Manager and Supervisor of Productions. Mr. Evans has been connected with the motion picture industry for a number of years

Mr. Evans, when asked what they intended to produce as their next picture, stated that they had read many scripts and had not yet decided. He further stated that if they could only keep their standard up to "The Rip Tide," the picture which they have just finished, they would be perfectly satisfied, and it was not their intention to make a large number of pictures but to make a few and make them well.

Friedgen Is Old Timer in Industry

J. RAY FRIEDGEN, president of the Effanem Company, which has produced "Man and Wife" for Arrow release, is a veteran film man who has been identified with every phase of motion picture production. Starting back in 1910, he entered pictures as an actor, and played leads with Pearl White, Louise Huff and others. He played the lead in "God, Man and Devil," and was with James O'Neill when that noted actor produced "The Count of Monte Cristo" for Famous Players.

When he found, however, that the production and technical phases of screen work had a greater appeal for him, he abandoned acting and spent two years with George Kleine, where he served in many capacities, but chiefly as cost expert and purchasing agent. From that time up to the formation of Effanem Photoplays, he was associated with many of the larger companies.

Rita Rogan Called Talented Child by D. W.

LITTLE RITA ROGAN, the clever seven-year-old player who appears in "The Last Will of John Ellsworth," an Atlantic Features production for Arrow, has been brilliantly successful on the screen, having appeared as Tam in the Cosmopolitan production, "The Wild Goose," in "Orphans of the Storm," and other big productions.

She made her first appearance in motion pictures in the Cosmopolitan production, "The Inside of the Cup" under the direction of Albert Capellani. Still later she played in a third Cosmopolitan success, "Straight Is the Way."

Rita was for a while with the Fox Film Corporation. She had an important role with George Walsh and Edna Murphy in "Dynamite Allen," which Dell Henderson directed. Subsequently Edward Sedgwick, another Fox director, used her in "Fantomas."

"Darkness and Daylight"

Bancroft—Seven Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

THIS photoplay is an adaptation of the stage play of the same name by Charles W. Henry, which played on the stage for several generations and has been a perennial favorite with stock companies. Albert W. Plummer, in adapting and directing it for Bancroft Productions, has adhered quite closely to the original version.

The picture was photographed in Worcester, Mass., and as a result the New England settings are present to provide the required atmosphere. It is somewhat unique in the fact that every one of the interiors is an actual New England residence interior. Instead of imitating these in the studio, the company was taken into actual homes in Worcester, arc lights installed, and the picture filmed in real settings, giving the pictpre a convincing air of realism in the investiture.

The cameraman, Frank Zucker, has obtained excellent lighting effects under these conditions, and the photography as a whole is capable, some of the snow scenes being especially well handled.

Except for an occasional touch, the material is not especially new, most of the situations having grown rather conventional. At times, motivation is rather lacking, the characters being moved about in an abitrary way, rather than for a logical reoson, but the same might be said of a great many program releases.

The cast is headed by Alta Vera, who appears as the older sister and is called upon for the heavy emotional portion of the acting. Audrey Berry, who will be remembered for her work as a child player with Vitagraph some years ago, returns to the screen as the blind sister. She screens pleasingly and makes good use of the opportunities offered. William Black is the heavy and Harlan Knight provides comedy relief. Wallace Ray is the brother, and Jack O'Brien is cast as leading man.

This is an average program release, and we should base our campaign principally upon the fact that it is based upon an old favorite play and that it was taken upon actual settings.

From the play by Charles W. Henry. Adapted and directed by Albert W. Plummer. Photographed by Frank Zucker. Produced by Bancroft Productions, Inc.

The Story—Two sisters and brother are persecuted by wealthy man who was spurned by their mother. On the eve of the older sister's wedding, this man brings about a compromising situation, and the two girls go away to a nearby city, where they exist in poverty. The persecution continues, however. The blind sister is turned into the streets and the older sister framed up on a theft charge, but the arrival of the girl's sweetheart straightens out the tangle, aided by a kindly scissors-grinder.

Classification—Comedy drama with heart interest and melodramatic touches.

Production Highlights—The scene at the wedding. The comedy of Harlan Knight. The sympathetic work of Audrey Berry. The excellent snow photography.

Exploitation Angles—The play on which it is based. The title, which suggests numerous possibilities for tie-ups. The novel conditions under which the picture was filmed.

Drawing Power—Suitable for second class houses.

"Good-By, Girls"

Fox—4746 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE sponsors have attached a comedy title to this picture which is mostly a story of adventure in which the action skips about without much head or tail to it. It provides William Russell with a fairly busy vehicle in which he plays the part of a writer ordered by his doctor to take a rest. Once he reaches his mountain lodge and discovers a strange girl in possession of the premises one may look for plenty of helter skelter incident.

"Good-By, Girls" is not dull even though its plot is slight. But in keeping it moving throughout the director has resorted to considerable repetition of scenes. Thus it appears to be padded.

The action releases the familiar pursuit with the youth and his assailants taking turns in out-distancing each other. To vary the monotony of this chase there is introduced a comedy vein which doesn't often register because the gags are repeated too often. Another variation offers an automobile chase which provides a thrill when the hero jumps from one machine to the other. The girl doesn't disclose her identity until the end of the story. But the youth goes to her rescue. She has sought refuge on his estate to escape certain parties determined to gain possession of valuable patents which belonged to her father. The writer doesn't get much rest so his doctor recommends romance.

There is a fair mystery element attached to the story—but it isn't dominant enough to carry the suspense. In all it may be called just an average picture—for average crowds. Russell works hard and should please his followers. Carmel Myers is the girl.

"Where the Pavement Ends"

Rex Ingram-Metro—7700 Feet

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

REX INGRAM has done it again. His newest expression, "Where the Pavement Ends," shows him at his best because the idea, a familiar one, has been treated in such an artistic way that it never becomes conventional. And speaking about the conventions one may say that they are usually obeyed where the South Sea Islands formula is concerned. The spectator will be treated to a gorgeous pattern in this tropical island story, originally called "The Passion Vine." But it is as inspiring as it is optically pleasing. Yet when all is said and done it is the background which makes the picture such a memorable achievement.

Indeed it is pictorially perfect and still it is a well constructed story, offering the utmost in dramatic conflict, furnishing no little suspense and carrying its romance along with all the incident and atmosphere in perfect harmony. For sheer beauty the feature will be catalogued as one of the best of the year. The theme is trite if you care to dissect it—yet its triteness never becomes obvious.

We have the familiar clergyman and his daughter, the native lover and the degenerate trader. And the conflict surges in their relations to one another. The girl would go back to civilization, but her father is intent on converting the natives in general and the trader in particular. The latter joins the church and receives the pastor's sanction to marry the girl. But to thwart his plans she plans an elopement with the native, excellently portrayed by Ramon Navarro, whose performance, however, is not any better than the one contributed by Harry Morey as the trader—a role in which this sincere actor is at his best.

There is a stirring climax which precipitates a tragedy. The trader is killed and the girl unwilling to marry the native causes him to plunge into the falls. Thus the racial barrier may be called the foundation on which the plot rests. The finale is reached through a sequence of scenes which enthrall one with their gorgeous backgrounds as well as with their spiritual and dramatic touches.

The picture is adorned with a captivating title which is bound to interest anyone in search of adventure and romance. For exquisite color and atmosphere, for a wealth of shots each more beautiful than its predecessor, "Where the Pavement Ends," stands in a class by itself. Alice Terry is appealing as the heroine, acting her role with considerable feeling and poise. Metro has a sure-fire box-office bet here.

"The Famous Mrs. Fair"

Niblo-Metro—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE splendid treatment which Fred Niblo has given this adaptation of a popular Broadway success a couple of seasons ago, coupled with some unusually good philosophy which is well emphasized, and atmosphere and acting of a first rate order make "The Famous Mrs. Fair," a picture which is certain to be appreciated everywhere. For one thing it contains a fine audience appeal due to its conflict in the home—the theme carrying, as it does, the dissolution of a family because of the absence of any maternal interest. Niblo has brought out in admirable fashion the logic of the play, dwelling upon the feminine urge to find expression—just as it served as the pivot of dramatic events in the play.

If there is any criticism to be made of the feature it may be aimed at its length. The prologue should be shortened since it only serves in planting the cause for the conflict in the home. The war is responsible for much upheaval in the way the human race has since conducted itself. The author, James Forbes, could not have struck a more genuine note than playing upon the search for expression of the modern woman. Once Mrs. Fair comes back from Europe and becomes "The Famous Mrs. Fair," the picture develops an interest which will carry it far in pubic appeal. None of the scenes are farfetched. What is shown could reasonably happen. There is good, sound philosophy and drama neatly interwoven.

Mrs. Fair takes to the lecture platform. As a result her house tumbles to pieces, for Mr. Fair is not the type of man to pay much attention to "happiness in the home." He carries on an intrigue with a gay widow, the boy marries a girl who is not of his social station, and the daughter after joining a fast jazzy set, elopes with a worthless lounge lizard. Mrs. Fair returns home and the conflict is dramatically effective when a divorce is contemplated between the couple. But their differences are forgotten in the search to save the daughter from disgrace. Once the mother learns her true position in the scheme of things—that her place belongs in the home the picture solves its story and logic.

It is a most fitting conclusion to a picture which contains a whole volume of good sound logic. Through the agency of the voice the play, insofar as its climax is concerned, proved more sustaining in suspense. However, the screen version is one example that a good play can be made into a good photoplay with a little expenditure of imagination and common sense.

Sylvia Fair.....Marguerite De La Motte

The Story—Treats of a wife and mother who returns from the war with considerable fame for her work over there. She goes upon a lecture tour and returns to find her home crumbling to pieces. Her husband has been ensnared by a giddy widow—her son has married a girl who does not quite fit in the mother's social scheme, and the daughter has eloped with a man of doubtful character. In the search for the girl the husband and wife are reconciled.

Classification—Domestic drama involving triangle situation.

Production Highlight—Myrtle Stedman's good performance. The good support. Good atmosphere. Splendid treatment of story by director. The dramatic climax.

Exploitation Angles—Might play up theme using catch lines, etc. Give the director a play. Tell that he directed "Blood and Sand."

Scene from the "Our Gang" comedy, "The Big Show," Pathe two reeler.

"The Grub-Stake"

American Releasing—Six Reels

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

AFTER a reel or so of rather uninteresting rative, this picture finally becomes a typical Alaskan melodrama with a bold, bad villain who has brought the innocent young sea captain's daughter into the Klondike for immoral purposes, and plenty of snow stuff, wild animals and huskies to interest those who like the "Far North" sort of production.

As a story "The Grub Stake" lacks in plot, construction and continuity. It creaks in many places and never holds attention as a whole. However, after the characters once reach the Alaskan locale, individual sequences do carry excellent interest. There is some very fine scenic stuff, a parade of wild animals in their native haunts, a number of realistic storm scenes and splendid atmosphere.

The cast is good, being fine types and well known to picture audiences. Miss Shipman in the first part of the picture seems badly cast, over acting and making a general poor impression in trying to get over the character she portrays, that of an ultra innocent and unsophisticated young girl. Later, however, she gets to the kind of material in which she specializes and the general result is satisfactory.

As a whole the production ranks with any of the star's recent releases and should go over especially well after the weather gets warm.

The Cast

Faith Diggs.....Nell Shipman
Jeb.....Hugh Thompson
Mark Leroy.....Alfred Allen
Malemate Mike.....George Berrell
The "Skipper".....Walt Whitman
The Mounty.....C. K. Van Auker
Wong.....Ah Wing

Directed by Bert Van Tuyle. Written by Nell .. Shipman. Produced by Bert Van Tuyle. ..

The Story—Alaskan gambler entices young girl to Klondike through a fake marriage. The girl learns the truth, and with her invalid father makes her escape. She becomes lost in the wilds and after hardships is discovered by the son of a dance hall woman, who has a cabin in the hills. A romance develops.

Classification—Snow and north woods picture with educational interest because of the wild animals shown.

Production Highlights—Storm sequences, dance hall episode and antics of a number of bears.

Exploitation Angles—Opportunity for atmospheric lobby displays. Chance for "Klondike" prologue. Wild animal scenes. Star and cast.

Drawing Power—Should go best in houses that prefer melodrama and action pictures.

"The Isle of Lost Ships"

Tourneur-First National—Eight Reels

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HERE is one of the greatest novelties which ever found its way to the silver-sheet. It shows Maurice Tourneur as a director who is almost in a class by himself as a dispenser of atmosphere. Such a story as "The Isle of Lost Ships" is not the easiest thing to translate for the screen. It calls for much ingenuity of setting, much local color, much atmosphere and much realism. Yet Tourneur has assembled these points and made them into a picture which is unusually interesting not only from the standpoint of fantastic design, but also because of its fascinating story of adventure.

Call it improbable, yet it is staged with such genuine realism that one instinctively feels like an actual participant. There is no planting of incident. With bold strokes Tourneur plunges into his narrative and with a crescendo of action and suspense the action carries one along in the deepest suspense. Some of the individual shots will inspire many with an eerie feeling. For instance, when the ship strikes a derelict and drifts into the "isle of lost ships" in the Saragosso Sea where other boats from other centuries to modern times are floating about on a bed of kelp or sea-weed. The dramatic action is finely emphasized. And the adventure keeps pace throughout every scene.

There has never been shown a finer stroke of colorful realism than the storm at sea with huge waves crashing over the decks. The suspense overwhelms when one wonders what is to become of the little group of three survivors—one of whom is an escaped convict, another a detective bringing him back to the States, and the third the fair heroine who is in this story for the sake of romance. It is the sequence which shows the boat marooned in the legendary isle which emphasizes the note of adventure. Here is Tourneur giving a display of wonderful photographic effects—submarine shots, ancient Spanish galleons, modern liners all assembled with marvelous detail and atmosphere to give it background. And in this colony dwell a motley group of derelicts who are ruled by a vicious officer. He desires the girl but the convict overpowers him and is crowned king of the isle.

Then to the fantastic climax when the shipwrecked people attempt to escape in a submarine—a scene which is as exciting and realistic as painstaking attention to detail can make it. "The Isle of Lost Ships" will have them talking about it for a long time. It excites the senses as well as the imagination—a genuine novelty which takes the spectator on a highly picturesque journey. It offers many new and surprising features. Put it down as a sure bet. And get it quick.

Regional News From Correspondents

Buffalo Briefs and Western New York News

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, former manager of Shea's Hippodrome, and now head of Paramount's theatre department, dropped into the city last week for a visit with old friends. While here he announced that Arthur J. Amm, who recently resigned as housemanager at the Eastman, Rochester, will probably go to Atlanta, Ga., to work with Southern Enterprises branch of Paramount's theatre department. Johnny O'Neil, former manager of Fay's, Rochester, has succeeded Mr. Amm at the Eastman.

The report given out by Associated Theatres, Inc., which recently opened the State theatre in Corning, N. Y., that the company had taken over control of the Liberty, Princess and Regent theatres in the same town was denied by C. V. Stowell and Fred Gerber, managers of the Liberty. They declared that the board of directors after entering negotiations with the corporation, had rejected the plan as "an unequitable arrangement." Otto T. Schroeppel, manager of the Strand and Andrews in Salamanca, N. Y., two Associated houses, was in Buffalo last week and declared that his company will soon control 25 theatres in Western New York. Otto said that business was picking up in his town.

All is set for the re-opening of the Criterion theatre under the management of the Mark-Strand interests, of which Moe Mark and Walter Hays are the heads. The house will open Monday, March 19, with pictures, musical comedy stock and vaudeville. Ben Holmes and Lionel Edel will be the managers. It is hoped that the extremely liberal admission scale with the big entertainments will put the house over. Pictures will be second run Paramount with "Knighthood," as the opening film play.

There were a number of incorporation papers filed in the Erie county clerk's office this week. The Clinton-Strand Theatre, Inc., is capitalized at $25,000, has Constantine and Nicholas Vassiliadis and Harry Roussi as directors and will build a picture house in Clinton Street. The New Try-It Theatre, Inc., has a capital of $120,000 and Walter C. Dayton, J. D. Parmelee and S. T. Lockwood as directors. This company will build a new picture house on the site of the old Try It in Black Rock. E. M. W. Pictures is capitalized at $10,000 and will produce industrial film. Ira M. Mosher, Elmer C. Winegar and R. W. Elmes are the directors.

After viewing several of the shows in Falls Street and Pine Avenue, Niagara Falls, N. Y., last Sunday, policemen told the managers to appear in police court, but, alas, Judge Piper ruled that there were no violations of the State vaudeville law and the managers did not have to appear. The churches in the Cataract City have started a crusade against vaudeville in picture theatres on Sunday. The managers said that nothing but straight singing and instrumental entertainment is given, which is not a violation of the statute.

The Lumber theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., opened its exclusive Paramount policy this week and Harris Lumberg announces that all attendance records were broken. "Adam's Rib' was the opening attraction under the new policy.

Howard J. Smith, president of the local unit of the M. P. T. O. A., and manager of the Palace theatre, spoke before the League of Women Voters in the Iroquois hotel last Monday afternoon in favor of the repeal of the censorship measure in New York State, while Mrs. Chauncey J. Hamlin spoke in favor of keeping the censor commission intact.

Arthur P. Kelly, formerly secretary of the Rochester Ad Club, has succeeded Fred Harris as publicity director at the Eastman theatre in Kodak Town. Mr. Harris is planning to spend all his time on the Community Chest publicity.

Betty Blythe appeared in person at the Lafayette Square theatre last week and knocked all attendance records for a row of goose eggs. While in town Betty addressed the Ad Club, sang a program for radio broadcasting and submitted to interviewers who gave the "Queen of Sheba" columns of space in the papers. M. Slotkin was so pleased with the business for the week he is planning to present everyone connected with the theatre new spring suits—except the press agent as usual.

Jottings from Kansas City and Vicinity

A NEW independent exchange, the Sydro Distributing Company, was organized in Kansas City last week by Syd Rosenthal, former general manager of the Mid-States Distributing Corporation. The new exchange is located at 1822 Wyandotte street. Some of the best independent pictures have been obtained, according to Mr. Rosenthal, including the 1923 Dick Hatten westerns and a new series of Francis Ford productions.

M. Van Pragg, former president of the M. P. T. O., Kansas, who resigned recently, and who transferred the operation of his Art theatre, Kansas City, Kas., over to the Grubel Brothers circuit, now is covering the territory for Universal, the company with whom he started as a booker before entering the ranks of the exhibitors.

Bert Reisman, Kansas City Paramount salesman, spent last Saturday in bidding friends in the film colony good bye. He was transferred to the Milwaukee exchange.

W. C. Haynes, the new assistant manager of the Kansas City Goldwyn office, furnishes another good example of the fruits of untiring service. Starting as head booker for Goldwyn four years ago, after resigning from Famous Players-Lasky, Mr. Haynes steadily has climbed up the ladder of promotion. There is no exchange man in Kansas City who has won the complete confidence of exhibitors in Missouri and Kansas more than Mr. Haynes.

The Wichita theatre, one of the larger houses of Wichita, Kas., which has been closed for several months, reopened its doors to the public Saturday, now being operated by the Consolidated Amusement Company. The Jewell theatre, LaHarpe, Kas., also will be re-opened by O. W. McIntosh March 19.

A. M. Eisner, former secretary of the M. P. T. O., Missouri, who has been operating the Broadmour theatre, Kansas City, now is in charge of the booking for the Capitol Enterprises, one of the largest circuits of motion pictures theatres in the Middle West. Headquarters of the company have been established at Eighteenth and Baltimore Avenue. Mr. Eisner will continue to operate the Broadmour theatre.

Beginning Sunday, the musical routine of Frank L. Newman's Royal theatre, Kansas City, was completely revised. A special number by the orchestra is featured at each of the deluxe performances and a violin solo by the new conductor, Dr. Carlos De Mandel, who has just completed a preliminary engagement as guest conductor at the Newman theatre. Instead of remaining in the pit for the overture, the orchestra occupies the remodeled stage and remains in that position through Dr. Mandel's solo. The new director, who formerly was musical director of the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco; the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, and the Astor hotel, New York, has planned a series of musical novelties for the Royal orchestra, which has been augmented to fifteen musicians. Gregory Kreshover will be assistant conductor, while the organ will be in charge of Harry W. Frank and Miss Norman Mannering.

Mrs. Gertrude Sawtell, new chairman of the Kansas censorship board, assumed her duties Monday at Kansas City, Kas., after a conference in Topeka, Kas., with Governor Davis, who appointed her. She replaces Dwight Thatcher Harris, whose resignation took effect March 1.

Members of the Kansas City Parent-Teacher Association were given a special preview showing of the picture, "The Prince and the Pauper," at the Pantages theatre Tuesday. The theatre is offering $20 in gold to the grade school pupil who writes the best 200-word essay on Mark Twain and the prize offer already has received liberal support in the columns of daily newspapers.

It was a large throng from Kansas City's film colony that gathered to bid good bye to Miss Freda Betts, assistant cashier of the Kansas City First National office, who, with her mother, Mrs. Lula M. Betts, started on an eight months' cruise around the world. Before returning to her desk again, Miss Betts will have visited virtually all the principal countries of the world. Such a trip marks the first of its kind among Kansas City film employees, especially as far as the extended vacation is concerned.

Cleveland Briefs and Film Row Personals

O. E. BELLES is president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. He didn't want the job when it was offered to him last fall at the annual election of officers. But the membership-at-large wanted the man at their head and would take no refusal of nomination. So Belles became president. It has not been an empty title, for Belles has worked for the organization like a Trojan, and here are some of the things he has accomplished: first, he put a business manager in charge of the League; next, he established an office in the Film Exchange Bldg., where exhibitors may report their troubles to the business manager and be sure of getting help; then he put the League on a stable financial basis; every theatre now runs an organization advertising slide, and also pays annual cash dues based on the number of seats in his house. And now Belles has just joined the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, so as to be better able to represent the motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland.

O. E. Belles.

Manager Jim Dunlavy decreed last week as "Love Week, and Dedicated to the Sweethearts of Akron" in honor of his current feature, "One Week of Love." Dunlavy said that, judging from results, Akron must be full of sweethearts.

Frank Allwein and D. Schreffler, owner-managers of the Opera House, Shelby, came up to do their week's shopping in the First National exchange.

Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell Brown of the Liberty theatre, Zanesville, inspected the new spring pictures, devoting Thursday and Friday of last week to private screenings. Among those which were screened for the Browns was "Where the Pavement Ends."

August Ilg, owner and manager of the Wonderland theatre, Lorain, is getting ready to break ground for a beautiful new 1,500 seat house in Lorain, according to whisperings around the Film Bldg.

"Mayor" Frank Kelley of the Lincoln theatre, Massillon, brought the very latest collection of 1923 stories with him on his visit to Cleveland this week. Kelley can tell a story as well, or better than anyone in the business. That's another reason why he's a popular visitor in the Film Row.

Everybody in the film business will be glad to hear that John J. Murray, the genial proprietor of the Opera House in Warren, is recovering after a bad heart attack.

A. C. Hoganson, manager of the Alhambra and Pantheon theatres, Toledo, is suffering from an infection said to have been acquired in a barber shop. Hoganson is wearing his face all bandaged.

J. E. Allmen, of the Pike theatre, Dover, died last week after an illness of several months. The house is being run by his brother, E. F. Allmen.

J. S. Tolland, in charge of First National publicity in northern Ohio, is ill. He is at Mt. Sinai Hospital, and according to latest reports, is not permitted to see anybody.

Walter F. Lusk, for five years manager of the Cleveland First National exchange, and now manager of the Washington, D. C., exchange for First National, has recovered from his recent illness to such an extent that he is spending some time of each day at his desk. Lusk has been sick ever since he left Cleveland more than six weeks ago. Ohio exhibitors and fellow exchange men will be glad to hear that Walter is on the mend.

"Billie" Liebson, local manager of American Releasing Corporation, is the only local exchange manager who has ever been in the chorus. Manager Liebson is taking part in a performance of "Bohemian Girl" that is to be given at the Hanna theatre the week of April 23d, under the direction of a prominent local singing teacher. Oh yes, Manager Liebson has a "Miss" before the Billie.

The Film Board of Trade of Cleveland held its semi-annual election of officers last Monday. Robert Cotton, Fox exchange manager, was unanimously re-elected president; Maurice Lobensburger, of Standard Film Service Co., vice-president to succeed Charles Rogers, Pathe manager; Clifford E. Almy, re-elected secretary and treasurer. The election was made the occasion of a dinner party of the organization.

The private screening of "Down to the Sea in Ships" which was held in Cleveland last week at the Stillman theatre, was one of the most successful invitational screenings ever presented in Cleveland. More than seven hundred and fifty people were present. Although the screening took place at the conclusion of the regular Stillman show, the audience was always attentive, and appreciative.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, spent the week in Detroit in pursuance of his policy of paying his exchanges periodic visits.

The Miles theatre site, East Ninth Street, has been purchased by the Cleveland Trust Company. Eventually, the bank will acquire all property on East Ninth Street from Euclid Avenue to Prospect Avenue, and will erect a new structure. In the meantime, the Miles will continue to operate. The terms of the sale stated that the Miles would operate for another ninety days. An additional three weeks has been added to the ninety-day limit in order to permit Miles to play out his contract with the Pantages Vaudeville Circuit. Rumor has it that when this vaudeville contract has expired that Charlez Miles personally will continue to operate the house under a separate arrangement entered into with the Cleveland Trust Company, and that he will play big first run feature pictures. This holds immense interest, if true, inasmuch as the first-run showings are now in the hands of Marcus Loew, who controls the State, Stillman and Allen theatres, and of Walter Reade, who is operating the Hippodrome. While the Miles is slightly off the beaten track, local motion picture interests feel that it will be a distinct advantage to have another first-run outlet.

The paper is issued every Saturday and contains the program for the week, advance information on the next week's attraction, items on coming pictures and short stories and squibs about things and persons around the theatre. Personal items about various employees and happenings around the house are included.

The paper is nameless as yet, but a contest for the best name is now being conducted and the winner will receive a season pass to the theatre as a prize. The publication found immediate favor with the patrons and is proving a success in both an advertising and entertainment way.

A special preview of "Driven" was given recently by Manager R. W. Albany Briefs and Eastern New York News

HARRY GANS, who has been connected with the Albany exchange of American Releasing for the last two months as manager, left last Saturday for Buffalo, where he will be connected with the Hodkinson offices. Mr. Gans was at one time connected with First National. He will be succeeded here by Mr. Blancke, of Boston.

William Smalley, who handles theatres in Cooperstown, Oneonta, Fort Plains, and elsewhere, spent three days last week along Albany's Film Row, booking for the weeks to come.

F. B. O. exchange in Albany, handled by Vic Bendell, is resplendent in its new offices. Mr. Bendell is making his first trip this week to Utica and Watertown.

W. H. Linton, hailing from Utica, but known to everyone as "Pop" Linton, was in Albany the past week.

First National is doing a lot of exploitation around the Capital District these days, with A. L. Burks handling the job. Last week Mr. Burks put over some good stuff in connection with the showing of the "Hottentot" at the Glove in Gloversville, and "Smilin' Through" at the Strand in Dolgeville. This week he is putting over "The Hottentot" at the Gem in Little Falls, and "East is West" at the Hippodrome in the same place.

Sam Eckman, Jr., vice-president of Goldwyn, was in Albany last week, attending the censorship hearing.

There is a rumor that the Majestic in Utica, now playing pictures, may go over to stock May 1, and that the Colonial, now a burlesque, may run pictures.

exchanges, A. J. Herman, manager of the Albany branch, still holds the lead.

Morris Silverman, owner of the Happy Hour in Schenectady, celebrated his fifteenth wedding anniversary last Thursday, by giving a theatre party.

Meyer Schine is now dickering with William Smalley for the Maxey in Oneonta, one of the most beautiful theatres in that section of the state.

"The Hottentot" scored so well at Carthage, N. Y., last week that it was held over for a third day.

S. E. Feld, a salesman for First National, who has been confined to his home in New York with the grippe, is back on the job.

The Majestic, in Troy, N. Y., which will be opened under new management about April 1, will take the name of The Astor.

Charles Walder is much elated these days through having booked the entire year's output of Goldwyn with Goldstein brothers at Springfield, Mass., who handle the Park theatre in Utica. Last week, the Albany exchange maintained by Goldwyn closed more business than in any single week since it was opened.

There is a fight on between the Majestic theatre in Albany, N. Y., and one of the daily newspapers in that city. The theatre objected to the severe criticisms said to have been made by the newspaper and has withdrawn its advertising.

Manager Herman, of the First National exchange, placed sixteen pictures to run sixteen consecutive weeks, beginning March 11, with Ben Apple, owner of the house, in a deal consummated last week.

Schenectady theatres were tied up to some extent in their afternoon shows one day last week, through the fact that the man driving the truck from the Albany exchanges to the Schenectady theatres failed to wake up much before noon. By the time the film reached the Electric City, the wires leading to the exchanges were humming from disgruntled exhibitors.

Summer resort towns in northern New York are anticipating a banner business and the motion picture theatres are already placing their orders far in advance, seeking the highest type of pictures for the tourists. The houses in Malone, N. Y., have practically been booked solid for the entire summer.

News of Boston and the New England States

FILMS which have played Boston recently as special features are coming back again in short lapse of time at popular prices. "Robin Hood" played Gordon's Capitol, Boston's newest theatre the week of March 5, and next week the "Christian" will open at the Modern and Beacon theatres, owned by the same interests that have the Park theatre, where the film was featured at top prices recently.

Boston's exclusive suburb, Brookline, has never allowed a motion picture theatre within its boundaries, but in the face of many previous failures, Howard Gray has petitioned the selectmen for a license to build and operate a 2,000-seat house at Coolidge Corner, the heart of the town life. The proposed structure will cost about $300,000 if it materializes. At a meeting last week the selectmen voted to refer the petition to the incoming board.

State Detective Edward F. Horrigan, known to thousands in Massachusetts, having served as bodyguard to four governors, has been transferred to duty under Col. Alfred F. Foote, commissioner of public safety, the man who passes on all motion pictures shown on Sunday in the state. Col. Foote said that the transfer took place merely in the routine of business. It is understood that Horrigan will assist in passing on the movie films.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" was given a special showing in the Veterans' Building, Concord, Mass., last Wednesday. The performance was for the benefit of the Near East Relief, and was followed by dancing.

The Women's Club of Westboro, Mass., are preparing a campaign for the purpose of improving the motion pictures shown in that town. They are aided by the clergy, and the committee is headed by Mrs. George L. Meade.

Manager J. H. Brennan of Loew's State theatre, Boston, had a special white carnation day last week during the run of Paramount's "The White Flower," starring Betty Compson. He gave the flower to all women patrons. Also he had the stage strewn with them all week, set off by a stage wide semicircle of flower filled vases.

Exploitation Manager Deuserne of Arrow hit Boston Monday and immediately became very busy, for "The Streets of New York" opens simultaneously March 19 in Lowell, Lawrence, and Springfield, and rumor hath it that he has some ambitious campaign lined out. The film also opened the 14th in Boston at Gordon's Scollay Square and will later play several other Gordon houses.

"Fighting Blood," according to members of the Boston Athletic Association, is a right scrappy picture. Manager Fitzgibbons of F. B. O.'s Boston office showed association members the first three rounds of the film Sunday afternoon at the club quarters, and they just "lapped it up."

"Fitz" of the F. B. O. has also secured Easter Monday as the opening date for "Thelma," the picture adapted from Marie Corelli's novel and starring Jane Novak, at the Tremont Temple, Boston, for a three weeks' run.

Fox theatre, Springfield, Mass., was the locale for the world premiere of the William Fox production "If Winter Comes," on March 5. The town knew it was there, for all papers carried two-column spreads, half a column deep.

Edward Leonard

Renewed attempts have been made to have a showing of the Soviet propaganda motion picture, "Russia Through the Shadows," at some theatre in Springfield, but Mayor Leonard has consistently turned to the proposition an exceeding cold shoulder. He is quoted as saying that any further attempt is useless and that even if he saw the film he would still ban it if he found nothing objectionable, as he knows "the local persons interested."

Jean Acker (Mrs. Rudolph Valentino No. 1) held the headline place on the bill at Keith's theatre last week, as the Boston papers put it, chiefly because she was Mrs. Valentino.

Robert A. Bertschy, for some time manager of the New Haven office, Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has now come to Boston as their branch manager. He is occupying the shoes so ably filled some time ago by Stanley B. Waite, who is now making things hum around the Boston Pathe office.

"The Third Alarm" went over so strong in Springfield, Mass., after fertile seed had been sown by Ed Hurley, F. B. O. demon exploiteer, in one of the most thorough campaigns the city has seen, that even the Mayor, Edwin F. Leonard, said that the film had enough thrills to last a year. Stephen Fitzgibbon, F. B. O. manager at the Boston office, got his finger in the pie, too, and was the recipient of a copy of the "History of the Springfield Fire Department," given him by William J. Denver, president of the Springfield Veteran Firemen's Association.

This new theatre is managed by Blank. Mr. Overman, who was associated with J. E. Hostettler, of Hostettler Amusement Co. in Omaha and an exhibitor at Sioux Falls, S. D., has started auspiciously on his career as manager of the Rialto. Trade Briefs from the Florida Territory

E. M. HALSEY, who operates the picture show at Zephyrhills, was in Tampa this week buying some new equipment. Someone broke into the hall, pried the lock off the booth, stole the lenses and condensers from his machine, and carried off several reels, re-wind and other items.

They will handle all the billing for the Tampa theatres, as well as several of the national advertisers.

A few years ago the Strand Amusement Company of Tampa, bought the building next to their Bonita theatre. They knew the day was coming when they would have to enlarge that house. At the annual meeting of the corporation, which is to be held on the 13th of March, the directors are expected to approve the plans for the new theatre. The plans call for a front of marble and tile, a seating capacity of 1,200 on the main floor, and rattan seats, instead of the usual wooden backs and seats. This will be an innovation and quite appropriate for the tropical climate. The company are also planning on a neighborhood house to be located in the Hyde Park section of the city.

Exchange and Exhibitor Items from Butte

NEWS reached the Butte office this week that C. W. Koerner, manager of the Associated First National exchange in this city, has been promoted to the head of the Portland office. While Butte's loss is distinctly Portland's gain the many friends who are felicitating him on the event nevertheless regret that they are to part with such a congenial co-worker. Tuesday evening Mr. Koerner was the guest of honor at a banquet in the Francis at ten o'clock covers being placed for 35. Those present represented the moving picture interests of the city.

Monday evening after the close of the theatres the employees of the American and Rialto autoed to Gregson Springs. There were some fifty in the party. The hot springs are always luring but a swimming party of fifty was one of the most delightful events of the social year. After enjoying the big plunge for an hour or so, the crowd took possession of the spacious ballroom and tripped the light fantastic until five in the morning. During the hours a splendid menu was served in the dining room of the hotel.

Trade Happenings In and About Washington

EASTERN District Manager Hussey of the Educational exchanges of New York has been visiting J. A. Bachman of the Washington office and spent part of the week at the Baltimore sub-office. It is learned that Educational's home office is highly pleased with the wide showing and favorable criticism of the popular comedies released by them in this territory. When exhibitors like Harry Crandall, Guy Wonders, Tom Moore, and the local Loew houses give first runs of the leading Educational comedies the same week as "the spice of the program" there is reason for the pride expressed by E. W. Hammons and aides.

The Film Board and the Capital Film Review are now located in the new suite at 702 Mather Building, sub-let from the F. B. O.

Crandall, owner of the theatres bearing his name in Washington and vicinity, left the Capital last Wednesday on a hurried business trip to New York. Mr. Crandall was followed on Thursday by Nelson B. Bell, in charge of advertising and publicity for the Crandall enterprises, bent on an entirely different mission connected with the conduct of the theatres.

Trade News From Milwaukee

DUSTIN FARNUM, motion picture star, will race in Milwaukee at the annual speed and motorboat regatta during the Neptune Frolic the first week in September, according to an announcement of the Milwaukee Civic council, which sponsors this yearly event, and will be part of the G. A. R. convention. The frolic committee has received Mr. Farnum's assurance that he will be here to participate. He is a great racing fan and has driven in both automobile and speed boat races on the coast for several years. He owns a powerful hydroplane which he will ship here and drive.

A motion-picture star popularity contest, totally without prizes or remuneration of any kind, for the purpose of ascertaining Milwaukee's most popular masculine and feminine stars, has been conducted by the Milwaukee Sentinel for the past month. Readers were asked merely to send in the names of their favorite and a brief line of explanation. The three leaders among the men and women were as follows: Harold Lloyd, 202; Rodolph Valentino, 155; Douglas Fairbanks, 109; Priscilla Dean, 196; Norma Talmadge, 172, and Katherine MacDonald, 134. Fifty-seven male stars received votes, and 44 women.

Barbara La Marr's picture, Quincy Adams Sawyer, being shown at the Alhambra the week of March 3, has had a beauty tie-up with Terraderma-lax, an English beauty clay. Several local downtown drug stores had displays of their goods topped by huge stills of the star, and announcing that a motion picture showing Miss La Marr demonstrating the beauty clay will shortly be shown.

The "heart-throbs" of "Mighty Lak a Rose" were capitalized by the Strand theatre in its showing of the week of March 3, by a huge double page tie-up with local advertisers. The title of the picture was in itself a big drawing card, but such extensive advertising helped the picture greatly.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

Showing Buster Keaton coming up for air in the First National picture, "The Love Nest."

"Hot Water"

(Christie-Educational—Two Reels)

THERE is sufficient comedy to make this two-reeler a good one to run anywhere, but the theatre in which it will score best is the neighborhood house, patronized by married couples and children, for that is what it's all about.

Neal Burns is a newly-wed. His wife, is a pretty girl (Duane Thompson), incidentally a new comedy leading woman who is decidedly pleasing. They expect to raise a family of five children but are eager to gain experience in taking care of kiddies. Therefore, welcome the opportunity offered by a widower friend who expects to go to Europe and ships his child, parcels post, to the couple. Meantime, the young married man's bosses plan to play a joke on him, each borrowing their own children (two to a family) and bribe the station agent to tag the four, so that when the newly-weds arrive there are five children on their hands instead of the one expected. The fathers tell their children that they may be as naughty as possible for one whole day, so that as soon as the five are herded into the automobile they begin. The young couple find that five children in a house can disrupt things in general, and not until the following day is the situation clarified. The father of the motherless baby decides to take his child with him to Europe, so calls to claim his own. When the wives of the two bosses find they have been misinformed as to the whereabouts of their respective children, there is considerable explaining to do. All of which goes to make up a rapid, laughable and entertaining farce.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Bowled Over"

(Roach-Pathe—One Reel)

PAUL PARROTT appears as the would-be champion bowler, and the picture opens showing the hero in bed being disturbed by the ringing of an alarm clock, then goes into laughing detail, at last showing the companion by his side to be pins, carefully covered up so as to be safe for the bowling tournament.

The fun centers during the tournament, when Parrott is the victim of rivals who leave no stone unturned to bring about Paul's defeat. Trick apparatus is employed with good results, as the reel is full of action and will be especially amusing to those familiar with the troubles of one who frequents the bowling alley.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Love Nest"

(Buster Keaton Comedy-First National—Two Reels)

BUSTER Keaton had so much fun and furnished so much amusement in a comedy about a boat on the high seas, shown some time ago, that he has evidently attempted to provide a sequel. "The Love Nest" is one of the most comic pieces which the sad face comedian has given the screen. He utilizes the dream situation in building his burlesque, yet one never suspects this bit of ancient treatment until it is shown at the finish.

Buster has rigged up a boat called "The Love Nest." He will sail the briny deep in an effort to forget an unhappy love affair. And then the fun begins. The comedian's frail craft is sighted by the skipper of a whaling boat. He anchors alongside, clambers aboard and proceeds to get in "dutch" with the powerful captain. The latter has made Buster his cabin boy. When one of the crew does something out of order he is tossed in the ocean and a ready wreath follows him. Keaton manages to avoid Mr. Jones' w. k. locker in scenes which would make a wooden Indian laugh.

We predict a raucous moment of laughter in any house anywhere, when Buster is yanked into the water by a whale. He tows the big fish back to the boat and the skipper duplicates the scene. Perhaps the most amusing touch is that which shows Buster trying to fish while standing on a target standard. The warship shoots several projectiles around him, but he mistakes them for fish and casts his rod in an effort to catch them. Then comes the dream situation and the puncture of Buster's nightmare when the standard is shot to pieces.

For sheer burlesque and comic exaggeration the Keaton comedies are in a class by themselves. This is good enough to steal the thunder away from a feature unless the chief attraction is an extraordinary one.—LAURENCE REID.

"Uneasy Feet"

(Hamilton-Educational—Two Reels)

THERE is so much action, so many angles to put to use in the make-up of this entertaining comedy that it would be difficult to enumerate them. It begins with showing the arrival of Lloyd Hamilton, a country boy, in the city, where taxicab drivers surround him and in their efforts to claim him as a fare leave him in the street practically unclothed. A policeman orders Hamilton to get some clothes on, and, in his efforts to do so, he enters a clothing store, where some of the action takes place, and then a shoe store, where some laughable situations occur.

When Hamilton finally is clothed with a suit, the policeman pacified, he is overtaken by a rain storm, and as the new clothing dries it shrinks so that the policeman becomes wrathful again. The ruses Hamilton employs trying to avoid the policeman make up the fun, and there is plenty of it for every kind of comedy fan.

Incidentally, the two-reeler is equipped with some rattling good sub-titles, most of which can be depended upon to gain a laugh independently of the action.—LILLIAN GALE.

"A Peasant Journey"

(Our Gang-Pathe—Two Reels)

THE Roach comedies known as "Our Gang" have earned sufficient reputation as to immediately identify them with the stock cast including Sunshine Sammy, Mickey Daniels, Jackie Condon, little Farima, Jackie Davis et al. Therefore, the best way to form a good idea of what "A Pleasant Journey" is like, is to picture yourself suddenly called upon to take that gang from Los Angeles to San Francisco in a Pullman, otherwise occupied by finicky people, a man with the gout and a woman, who without children of her own, could advise the proverbial old lady in the shoe how to manage them.

The plot suggestion is that the Children's Welfare Association of Los Angeles wishes to send a number of children to, San Francisco and assign one of their members to make the trip. She suffers a sprained ankle and induces her fiance, a bachelor of thirty, to take her place. "Our Gang" take advantage of an unusual opportunity to "train ride," substituting themselves for the orphans and not until they have successfully annoyed all the passengers and arrive at San Francisco, does the bachelor learn that he has traveled with the wrong outfit. Furthermore, he faces having to take them back.

A traveling salesman on board offers to help entertain the gang by opening his sample case containing horns, fire works and sneeze powder. Consequently, there is not a dull moment and we defy anyone to look at this picture and refrain from laughing aloud. — LILLIAN GALE.

"The Alley Cat"

(Aesop's Fable-Pathe—One Reel)

SOMETIMES it is most difficult to describe what is contained in a cartoon fable, but when one happens along that stands out among those of recent issue as one of the best ever screened, it deserves some delineation.

Farmer Al Falfa's home is overrun with mice. A lone mouse enters the pantry and removes an egg from a carton. Other mice appear and they use the egg as a football. All goes well until it lights upon the farmer's head and he starts after the intruders. Immediately the kitchen floor becomes alive with the little fellows, who scamper into holes in every conceivable place, scamper in and out to prove their bravery and as nothing can be done about it farmer Al Falfa gives Fanny, the cat instructions to to her duties and then the fun increases. The moral is: "What Can't Be Cured Must Be Endured." —LILLIAN GALE.

Comedies, Short Subjects & Serials

Campaign on "Topics" and "Fables" Begun

A nation-wide campaign exploiting "Aesop's Film Fables" and "Topics of the Day," released by Pathe, started with the week of March 12 in Greater New York, Keith and Moss theatres co-operating.

Exploitation includes space for "Fables" and "Topics" in 24-sheets used by Keith theatres in Brooklyn and Jersey City, and by Moss New York houses—Coliseum, Franklin, Hamilton and Regent. Keith houses in New York: The Colonial, Eighty-first Street, Royal and Riverside. These subjects had space in 48-sheets used by the Bushwick and Orpheum theatres in Brooklyn.

The subjects mentioned also share space in other paper and general publicity of the theatres cooperating. It is announced that the foregoing are details of the exploitation campaign being extended in a similar way throughout the United States.

Denby Assures Pathe News of Navy "Doings"

In appreciation of the continuous efficiency of Pathe News in picturing for the screen events in connection with the U. S. Navy affairs, Secretary Edwin Denby addressed to Editor Emanuel Cohen the following letter, dated March 5, 1923, which he concluded with:

"Through the continued picturization of what the Navy is doing in peace times the American public has, I am sure, a better understanding and a fuller appreciation of what their Navy really is.

"I wish to thank you personally for the interest in our Navy which you have shown on this and other occasions, and to assure you that the Department will co-operate at all times with you in keeping the public informed of what 'their Navy' is doing.

"With kindest personal regards,

"Yours sincerely,

"Edwin Denby."

International News Shows Baby Peggy

The International News Reel shows an amusing sequence of Baby Peggy, the four-year-old Century Comedy star, meeting Irene Castle while the latter spent two weeks in Los Angeles. The reel shows Peggy calling upon Mrs. Castle and the famous dancer showing the little tot the latest dance steps.

Other scenes show Peggy's home life in a series of intimate pictures, which show how she spends her day. Peggy is shown playing on the lawn of her new home with her older sister, reading her fairy tale books, playing with her large family of dolls, washing the doll's clothes and sorting her thousands of fan letters with her mother

"Crystal Jewels" March Release

Fox Educational Shows How New York Is Provided With Water Supply

AMONG the March releases of Fox Educational Entertainments is "Crystal Jewels," which shows how New York City is provided with its water supply and the terrific task accomplished in completing the mammoth tunnel from the Catskills to Manhattan. Concerning this unusual engineering feat the New York Times, in an editorial printed Sunday, February 18th, 1923, says:

"The Shandaken tunnel borers met in the heart of a Catskill mountain after five years of burrowing night and day * * * The eighteen mile tunnel has been completed. As soon as it is lined with concrete Schoharie Creek will deliver 250 million gallons of water a day to Greater New York by way of the Ashokan Reservoir. The job of the engineers was to reverse the flow of the stream * * * by building a dam and piercing the Catskill Mountains for a distance once and a half as long as the Simplon of the Swiss Alps * * * The town of Gilboa, with its churches, houses and stores, farms and pastures had to be sacrificed to make room for the waters of the dam."

The particularly interesting points of this waterway are set forth in the Fox reel, showing the interior of the tunnel, one of the largest in the world; the Ashokan Reservoir, and the laboratory where the water supply is continually examined under the microscope. Those who watch the picture, follow the amazing route of the crystal stream along its entire course, doing a mental dive as the main line passes under the Hudson River.

Hamilton Comedies Prove Popular

Educational Reports First Four of Series Enjoying Splendid Bookings

WITH four of the six comedies in his first year's series of Hamilton Comedies for Educational already playing in the theatres throughout the country, Lloyd Hamilton now stands in a unique and pre-eminent position among the leading comedians of the screen.

While his contemporaries in the first rank of screen comedians have been devoting their time and efforts to making feature length comedies, Hamilton has been turning out box office attractions of no less merit, and keeping them within the short subjects limit in length. With no less effort expended in their production, and no less quality apparent on the screen, these two-reel comedies have proven to be the most dependable of the short length pictures of their type offered to the exhibitor at the present time.

The first four pictures made under the management of Hamilton have been released and are now showing. They are "The Speeder," "The Educator," "No Luck" and "Extra! Extra!" Each of these pictures has earned excellent reviews at the hands of trade paper reviewers, and also from newspaper critics.

Large metropolitan dailies in the past have seldom devoted much space to reviews of short subjects, and therefore the reviews from these papers are perhaps more significant than those from other cities. The News of Washington, D. C., reviewing the program at one of the Broadway houses, and speaking of Hamilton's "No Luck," says:

"This fellow Hamilton is one of the screen's greatest pantomimists, with a marvelously mobile face and an unerring sense of comedy. Hamilton, one day, will be a mountain among the screen molehills. You owe it to yourself to see him."

The New York Morning Telegraph reviews "The Educator," stating that it is a "masterpiece of comedy," and this paper's review on Hamilton's next picture, "No Luck," says that "It is the funniest comedy seen since Hamilton's last."

A typical report from exhibitors is summed up in the words of the manager of the University Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn. "The Speeder," says Glen Vliet, manager of the University, "is the finest two-reel comedy we ever ran. It pleases, and you can boost Hamilton, as he will get them in and send them away happy."

That exhibitors are short-sighted who do not capitalize on the growing popularity of Hamilton is the opinion expressed by Miss Ray Lewis, managing editor of the Canadian Moving Picture Digest. Commenting editorially on "The Speeder," Miss Lewis says:

"Why more of these most amusing comedies are not given special attention and mention we cannot understand, save that it appears to take an unusually long time to convince exhibitors that it is quality and not quantity in a picture which makes a feature."

Hamilton has recently completed his fifth comedy of the year, "Uneasy Feet," which will be an early release, and has started production work at the United Studios on the final comedy of this group, which has not yet been titled.

Harry Edwards Directs Baby Peggy

Baby Peggy is at work on her first productioin for 1923. It was written by William Friedle, recently engaged to write plots for the talented youngster. Edwards was given the job of directing Peggy as a reward for his excellent work with Buddy Messinger.

The picture, which has not yet been named, shows Peggy swinging in her favorite swing. The rope breaks and she is thrown into a wagon full of orphans which is passing by. Peggy is, in spite of her tears, taken along to the orphan asylum with the rest. Adoption day comes round and all the children are adopted except Peggy. She sees the new parents buying dolls for their adopted children and she conceives the idea of slipping into a box and passing herself off as a doll.

Keaton Comedy Again Called Big Feature

"Buster Keaton's 'The Frozen North' is about as funny a two-reeler as one could ask for, and even if it were the only thing on the bill it would repay one for a visit to the Rialto," is the New York Evening World critic's comment on this new release of the famous smileless comedian.

"'The Frozen North' is a stirring tale of the land of chilly landscapes and burning hearts," says the New York Evening Telegram.

"Buster Keaton is nothing short of superb in 'The Frozen North.' This comedy is a conglomerate satire of the screen dramas of the great open spaces. Robert W. Service, the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, the William S. Hart and Eric Von Stroheim type of villiains all of the western and northwestern stuff is here with a vengeance."—N. Y. Evening Journal.

Experimental Laboratory for Pathe Review

Recent novel effects screened in Pathe Review which cannot be produced with the equipment of the ordinary motion picture studio are said to have inspired many inquiries from exhibitors and individual patrons. The answers reveal the fact that Pathe Review has established an experimental laboratory for the working out of novel ideas requiring new developments in motion picture technique.

The innovation was materially encouraged, says the Pathe Review editor, by the long standing, close cooperation of experts and curators at most of the important art and scientific institutions—notably the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art and the American Museum of Natural History. Further striking developments are promised in the near future.

Late Studio and Player Briefs

F. B. O. Production Notes

The steel work of the sky scraper built for scenes in "Day Time Wives" was wrecked for the accident sequence. No one hurt. The production is under the direction of Emile Chautard.

The title of Harry Carey's next starring vehicle is "The Miracle Baby," under the direction of Val Paul. The company has gone to Truckee for snow scenes.

The Chester Bennett production starring Jane Novak, originally titled "Divorce," has been changed to "I Want a Divorce." A big cafe set, with an ice skating rink was built for this production and twenty professional skaters were schooled into remaining within camera range.

Mal St. Clair is beginning the tenth of the "Fighting Blood" Series "The End of a Perfect Fray."

Ernest C. Ward has been placed under long term contract as director.

Tom Wilson has signed a contract for two years, to play character roles.

At Universal City

Wallace Worsley is now filming the mob scenes for "The Hunchback," using twelve hundred extras for whom especially designed costumes, made to measure, are being used. The call for extras was for seven o'clock. All were made up and on the set at eight o'clock when the first scene was made, due to the management of Charles Stalling, production manager and William Koenig, business manager for the company, who were congratulated for the unprecedented efficiency employed.

Universal has employed a large receiving outfit to be used as entertainment for players and extras during noon hours.

Earle Kenton, for two years Sennett director, has been engaged by Universal to film the new series of "Leather Pushers," featuring Reginald Denny.

"Up the Ladder," starring Virginia Valli, with Reginald Denny as lead, will not be filmed for a number of months. Instead, Valli will be starred in "A Lady of Quality" by Frances Hodgson Burnett, under the direction of Hobart Henley.

The cast supporting Herbert Rawlinson in "Twenty Dollars," under the direction of Herbert Blache, includes Tully Marshall, Doris Pawn, Nickolai De Ruiz, John Cossar, Roy Laidlaw and Arthur Hull.

Ethel Gray Terry has been engaged as lead for the all-star cast subject "What Wives Want," under the direction of Jack Conway. The players include Niles Welch, Ramsey Wallace, Vernon Steele and others.

Marion Orth, short story writer and author of "The Price of a Good Time," "Borrowed Clothes," "The Lure of Jade," and others, has been added to the Universal scenario staff to write seven original screen stories during the year.

Yorke Norroy Series Now Ready

George Bronson Howard's Tales of Secret Service in Two-Reelers

"THE FURTHER ADVENTURES OF YORKE NORROY," a series of four two-reel features from the pen of George Bronson Howard, internationally popular novelist, are now being released by Universal. The pictures were made under the direction of Duke Worne, with Roy Stewart as star. Part of the series was personally supervised by the author himself, who was a member of the Universal City scenario staff until his recent death.

"Yorke Norroy" was Howard's best known and most popular fictional character. He was the first diplomatic secret agent used as a hero of fiction. The original stories, a series called "Yorke Norroy, Diplomatic Agent," were widely hailed when they appeared in the Popular Magazine. The adventures of this diplomatic detective were followed by thousands of fiction fans.

The new York Norroy stories, which have been screened as "The Further Adventures of Yorke Norroy," were written by Howard shortly before his death, and are said to be his best work.

The first of the series now is being shown. It is called "One of Three."

"Under Secret Orders" is the second of the series. It is to be released March 19. The action is laid partly upon a transatlantic liner and shows Norroy again foiling foreign crooks seeking to get important documents from the American secret service agents.

The third of the series is "The Secret Code," to be released April 14, following the one-every-three-weeks policy for this series. It involves the seizure of a radio station in America by foreign agents who seek to transmit dangerous information to their respective governments.

The last of the series, to be released May 5, is entitled "The Radio Active Bomb." The story deals with the attempt by a group of foreign secret service agents to get possession of a radio active bomb which an American inventor submitted to the War Department.

Although released in a series, "The Further Adventures of Yorke Norroy" pictures have no connection with one another except the leading character, "Yorke Norroy," which runs through the entire series.

"Leather Pushers" in Demand

Third Series of Universal's Fight Two-Reelers Being Booked Rapidly

UNIVERSAL'S announcement that a third "Leather Pushers" series of two-reel Universal-Jewel pictures is to be made has met with country-wide acclamation on the part of exhibitors and photoplay patrons, it is announced by Art Schmidt, Universal sales chief.

Although arrangements have just been completed for their production, many exhibitors already are booking them. This demand for advance bookings on the new series is growing by leaps and bounds, it is stated, and indicates the great popularity of the original "Leather Pushers" series of six pictures and the recently released "New Leather Pushers" series of six more pictures.

As in the original series and the second series, the third series will have Reginald Denny as the star, and will be made by Harry Pollard. Also, Hayden Stevenson, the genial prize fight manager, will play the same role in the forthcoming series.

As an example of the eagerness with which exhibitors and the public are looking forward to more "Leather Pushers" pictures, the Universal offers in evidence the following wire from one of its exhibitor patrons, and which is said to be indicative of many communications received:

"One of the best steps Universal ever took was to plan release third series 'Leather Pushers.' Contracted for same yesterday. Announcement to patrons greeted by deafening applause. Everybody anxiously awaiting release. Goes to show people appreciate pictures above ordinary, such as your 'Leather Pushers.'"

The foregoing telegram was received from Mr. A. Dobbs, manager of the Empire theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

In the New York territory the effect of the announcement was beyond all expectations. As soon as word of the projected series was received from Universal City, the big "U" exchange sent out a brief mail notice to all its exhibitor patrons.

In less than twenty-four hours the exchange telephones were busy answering queries. Practically every exhibitor who had used the first two series wanted the third. The theatre owners were especially anxious to copper rivet the series for the coming summer season, as it was frankly admitted, according to Universal executives, that "The Leather Pushers," the first series, did more to hold up business during the hot weather last year, than any other film offering.

"Shipwrecked" Is Joe Rock's Latest

Jo-Rok Productions, distributors of the two-reel comedies starring Joe Rock, this week received his latest subject, "Shipwrecked," in which Billie Rhodes supports him. It is his sixth release this year and is said to maintain his standard of clean-cut, original fun. The comedy is a burlesque on "Captain Kiddo."

Territory on "Her Accidental Husband" Solid

Requests for open territory on "Her Accidental Husband" active, reports the offices of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, and it is announced this week that negotiations are pending which will put this feature over one hundred per cent in record time.

Another important territory was closed when Independent Film Company of Philadelphia completed arrangements to handle the production in their territory. This includes Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

The sale was made to Louis Berman of that company, who immediately following the announcement of the readiness of this production for release, immediately wired to learn whether his territory was still open and to inquire details. Following a reply in the affirmative, Mr. Berman made a special trip to New York to see the feature screened. He declared the cast, which includes Miriam Cooper, Forrest Stanley, Mitchell Lewis, Richard Tucker, Maude Wayne and Kate Lester wonderfully suited to their respective parts.

Mr. Berman announced before leaving New York that he would make arrangements to release "Her Accidental Husband" immediately in his territory, and asked for prints at the earliest possible opportunity.

"Suzanna" Gets Approval of Frisco Mayor

Declaring that he had been thoroughly entertained by Mack Sennett's newest comedy drama, "Suzanna," an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release, starring Mabel Normand, Mayor James S. Rolph, Jr., of San Francisco, wrote the following letter to Mr. Sennett:

"It was my privilege a few nights ago to witness a pre-view of your latest picture, 'Suzanna,' starring Mabel Normand and which has been showing at the Strand theatre in this city.

"I was greatly interested in this production and thoroughly entertained by it, enjoying particularly the touches of life in early California which this theme so cleverly portrays."

Cordouan Light in Fox Educational

In the Fox Educational Entertainment, "Sentinels of the Sea," scenes are shown of the Cordouan Light, off the southern coast of France. The light is ten miles from the shore and for days at a time the keepers are prevented from leaving the light by the roughness of the water, always bad at this point. The Fox cameraman was forced to make the trip in an open boat and was reached into the water before reaching the lighthouse. The views he took bear the official approval of the United States Bureau of Lighthouses.

Burr in South for Few Weeks

Extensive Production Schedule to Be Put Under Way Upon His Return

C. C. BURR, president of Mastodon Films, Inc., will recuperate in Palm Beach from his severe illness of the last several weeks. With his family and attending physician, Mr. Burr will leave for the South in the next several days.

A slight cold somewhat neglected was the forerunner of a severe attack of pneumonia which overtook the Mastodon executive in the midst of active preparations for the season's program of features for the independent market. Johnny Hines, who has just finished "Luck," was marking time impatiently to start off on his next and thus far biggest feature comedy. Two stories have been bought and productions on these were awaiting Mr. Burr's command to begin.

These stories are "The Average Woman," the famous Saturday Evening Post story by Dorothy de Jaegers and "Rich Men's Sons" by Gerald Duffy.

The first program has been accounted for with the completion several weeks ago of "You Are Guilty," with James Kirkwood and Carmel Myers as the featured players, and Johnny Hines' latest feature comedy, "Luck." Both of these pictures are being rapidly sold to the independent territories. The earlier part of the program, which is already having national release, are "The Last Hour," with Milton Sills and Carmel Myers; "Sure Fire Flint," with Johnny Hines, and Johnny's "Burn 'Em Up Barnes" and "I Am the Law."

Plans for increasing the output of short subjects were also under way. Raymond Harris, assistant to Mr. Burr, has taken over complete supervision of the short subject department in Mr. Burr's absence and has active plans for immediately augmenting the number of All-Star comedy releases. This department was organized last September and to date has produced eight comedies. These comedies feature Charlie Murray, Raymond McKee and Kathlene Martyn, a former member of the Ziegfeld Follies and an acknowledged stage beauty. All-Star comedies are released regularly to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

A new addition of Earl Hurd's cartoon comedies and Burr's scenics and novelty reviews is being prepared and will be released through independent exchanges, as are all Mastodon feature productions.

Mr. Burr will probably spend about three weeks in Palm Beach. Immediately upon his return, it is announced, he will begin productions upon several big features already determined upon.

Boost for "Fun from the Press"

Large Number of Bookings Is Accredited to Literary Digest's Campaign

ACCORDING to C. J. Post, assistant to the president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, whose efforts center upon the propagation of the Literary Digest's "Fun from the Press," many contracts have been received by the home office and sales made direct by mail. In the estimation of Mr. Post this is due to the exceptional exploitation and sales promption provided by the Literary Digest.

Through the efforts of the Literary Digest and the accounting firm of Price Waterhouse & Company, the number of families reached, through the Literary Digest's advertising and the special Digest's plan of direct to the home campaign, has been compiled. These facts then can be given for each locality in which the exhibitor is located. Through this plan figures have been compiled whereby it can be shown wherein the local exhibitor can get "Fun from the Press" for a less cost than it would take for this particular exhibitor to circularize or advertise this production in his own territory.

Mr. Post says, "Over 650 daily newspapers every week carry from one-third to a full page of advertising in which "Fun from the Press" is heavily featured; 25,000 street cars carry two-color car cards. In November over 8,000,000 circular letters were sent to the telephone subscribers of the United States. In addition to this the sales force of the Literary Digest, comprising 15,000 canvassers, have been instructed to urge every prospect to see this one-reel laugh maker. By pointing out these facts to the exhibitor and showing him by actual figures the number of people in his particular locality that are reached through the avenues of advertising adopted by the Literary Digest, little difficulty has been experienced in proving to him the value of 'Fun from the Press.' This results in an unusual amount of contracts being made by mail."

"Only a Husband" a Hall Room Comedy

"Everybody marries for better or worse—but most of 'em don't know which they're going to get" is the burden of the newest Hall-room Boys Comedy which C. B. C. has just received from the West Coast for release.

"Only a Husband" is the title that has been given this release—and it is promised that husbands everywhere will join the Husband's Protective League after seeing it—while wives will polish up the cut-glass potato mashers to greet them with when they return.

Jean Havez wrote the story for this comedy, Al Santell directed it. The cast includes George Williams, Al Smith, Marion Mack and Bud Jamison.

Scenes from Viola Dana's latest comedy drama for Metro release, "The Noise in Newboro."

The new titles—all of which are Syd Chaplin's work—add immensely to the whole picture. There are many art titles which add their touch. Messrs. Aitken and Price are not trying to bring cheapness to the Exhibitor in the Keystone Revival.

In a statement regarding the Keystone pictures to be revived, Mr. Price says:

"We are aiming at a business proposition, with a business profit in it for all hands. Keystones have always been moneymakers, even under the worst conditions. Two-reel laugh pictures are always in great demand—and there are precious few of them.

"We have taken the best of the classics only—with Charles Chaplin, Mabel Normand and other public favorites in every one; then we've brought them up to the minute with new titles and publicity. All this costs money; lots of it. And we have spent it with a free hand; because at the very most, it couldn't burden the production as do the amazing salaries now being paid.

"These pictures are a business proposition—sold on a business basis. The wise exhibitor is letting us see how he feels about it—mainly by telegrams!"

Tie-Ups Arranged for "Ninety and Nine"

Exhibitors in states where there are large forest preserves are booking "The Ninety and Nine" and tieing up the showing with forest fire prevention. The campaign started by William T. Cox, State Forester of Minnesota, is to be copied extensively in other states where conservation of timbered districts is of civic importance.

Chicago Greets "Bell Boy 13"

Critics of Windy City Write Well of Ince Special Starring MacLean

"BELL BOY 13," a Thomas H. Ince special production starring Douglas MacLean, which is being released through First National, received enthusiastic praise from the motion picture critics of the Chicago newspapers when it opened at the Chicago theatre for an extended run. Mae Tinee, the critic on the staff of the Chicago Tribune, said it was "full of pep" and that she laughed at the comedy "from start to finish." Following are some of her comments:

"If you don't laugh at 'Bell Boy 13' you must be enveloped in a cemeterialic (?????) atmosphere that no merriment can pierce. Anyway—I laughed and everybody else in the audience, of which I was one, laughed at the thing from start to finish. We chuckled. We haw-hawed. We snickered. We grinned. So—it may be tragedy for some folks but it was comedy for us, and we are willing to bet—O something or other—that you'll find it funny, too.

"You will say, though, that this little skit is exceedingly well acted and directed. It is full of pep; has some clever subtitles and good photography and direction. Without a doubt, though, it is the personality plus of Douglas MacLean that puts it over with such a bam. He is the Eddie Cantor of the silver sheet."

The Chicago Daily News had the following to say:

"Douglas MacLean finds his engagements with Thomas H. Ince spirited ones and the presence of a strong nerve necessary. In "Bell Boy 13," the love-comedy which is now on view at the Chicago theatre, MacLean has to teeter along the window ledge of the twentieth story in a modern hotel. He must slip and almost fall while the blue and empty air of Broadway holds out its protecting arms for 200 clear feet below."

Cosmopolitan Points Out Co-operation Accorded Marion Davies Film

COSMOPOLITAN officials point to the newspaper co-operation accorded its production, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," starring Marion Davies under the direction of Robert Vignola, as proof of the growing prestige of the screen among the editorial and newspaper circles of the country. The following instances are cited in a statement from the Cosmopolitan offices in support of its contention:

"The Cleveland, Ohio, Plain Dealer conducted a prize contest for the best list of books submitted to be made into photoplays for Miss Davies. The Cosmopolitan Productions scenario department secured some of the prize lists submitted, gave them their careful attention and the result is that Miss Davies will be seen in several of the stories selected for her by Plain Dealer readers.

"The Harrisburg, Pa., Telegraph held a contest to find the girl who most closely resembled Marion Davies. There were hundreds of entries and the prize winner was given a fine spring wardrobe which she was allowed to select herself from one of the leading Harrisburg stores.

"In Chicago one Sunday the various newspapers looked like a Marion Davies edition owing to the fact that 'When Knighthood Was in Flower' was playing at thirty-two different theatres in the Windy City."

"The Pill Pounder" and "The Life of Reilly" Completed

WITH the completion of "The Pill Pounder" and "The Life of Reilly," C. C. Burr will have produced No. 7 and No. 8 of his All-Star comedies. These are distributed through Hodkinson.

It was last September that C. C. Burr announced that he would make the production of two-reel comedies a feature of his regular output. One comedy is made every four weeks.

Since the announcement, the following comedies have been released, "Faint Hearts," "A Social Error," "Four Orphans," "The Fatal Photo," "The Busybody," "So This is Hamlet," "The Pill Pounder" and "The Life of Reilly."

Charlie Murray, veteran screen comedian, has been consistently featured throughout the entire series of All-Stars. With him has been Ray McKee. Mary Anderson was at one time a member of the All-Star comedy players, as was also Flora Finch, who will be remembered for her association with the late John Bunny.

A star has been developed by C. C. Burr in the person of Kathlene Martyn.

The interior scenes for All-Star comedies are taken at the studio of the company on Long Island. Exterior scenes have been taken as far south as Florida and various points north.

On April 15th, the players, under the direction of Gregory La Cava and Richard Thorpe, are scheduled to go to the Bermudas to film special exterior scenes demanding local color.

Round Three of "Fighting Blood" Released

ROUND three of "Fighting Blood," which is the current week's offering on the Film Booking Office's short subject program, is titled "Six Second Smith." This subject follows "Fighting Blood" and "The Knight in Gale,' the first two episodes of the H. C. Witwer-Colliers' Weekly stories, which have been filmed by F. B. O. with George O'Hara in the leading role. "Six Second Smith" shows the first professional ring battle of the young hero of the series, who in the first story abandoned "soda jerking" to become a boxer, and who in the second had a gymnasium try-out which started him on his career leading eventually to the middleweight championship of the world.

O'Hara's opponent in this boxing match, which is staged in a regulation ring before a crowd of hundreds of "extras," is Leach Cross, 'the fighting dentist" and one time contender for the lightweight championship of the world. Cross, now retired from the ring, was secured by Mal St. Clair, who is directing "Fighting Blood," to appear in the picture. Clara Horton appears in the leading feminine role.

"Secrets of Paris" in Three B'way Houses

The G. C. Burr-Whitman Bennett production, "Secrets of Paris," set an unusual precedent by playing at three first-class Broadway houses within practically the same number of weeks.

After a successful run at the Cameo, "Secrets of Paris" was given a special performance at the George M. Cohan theatre, a legitimate house on Broadway. The following week "Secrets of Paris" played at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre.

The Commonwealth Film Corporation, who is handling "Secrets of Paris" for New York territory has already arranged a big number of bookings to follow fast on the heels on this Broadway showing.

Boudoir Set Feature of Cosmopolitan Film

A boudoir set that is said to vie in its exotic beauty with any ever fashioned for a motion picture is declared to be the one which was fashioned by Joseph Urban, celebrated scenic artist, for a scene in "The Enemies of Women," Cosmopolitan Productions forthcoming super feature, picturized from Vicente Blasco Ibanez's popular story of the same name.

Lionel Barrymore and Miss Rubens are featured in "The Enemies of Women," the cast of which also includes Pedro de Cordoba, Gareth Hughes, W. H. Thompson, Gladys Hulette, and William Collier, Jr.

Production-Distribution Activities

Earle Williams as he appears in the Vitagraph Special, "Masters of Men."

"Daytime Wives" Nearing Completion

"Daytime Wives," a new special for F. B. O. release, is nearing completion at the Film Booking Offices studio under the direction of Emile Chautard. Scenes were filmed this week on the big "skyscraper" set, which was erected at the studio for the picture, and the present schedule calls for an early shipment of the print. To add realism to the construction scenes which form an important part of the picture, a framework several stories high was especially built and contractors' derricks obtained, so that the swinging of the iron girders to dizzy heights could be accurately pictured.

Wyndham Standing is cast in the leading male role, with Ann Perdue playing the stenographer, and Grace Darmond the wife. This eternal triangle story is said to have been developed in a unique and fascinating manner by Wyndham Gittens and Helmer Bergman, who wrote the continuity from the story by Lenore Coffee and John F. Goodrich.

"Shadows" Praised by Fan Publication

"Shadows," the Preferred Picture presented by B. P. Schulberg with Lon Chaney in the leading role, received another tribute as an exceptional picture when Moving Picture Stories, a weekly fan publication of large circulation, was inspired through the merits of the film to establish a new department, "Just Among Ourselves." In explaining the inauguration of this department of comment, the editor said, "Did you ever see a picture, a bit of acting that impressed you so forcibly that you just couldn't wait to talk it over with someone? That's the way I felt when I saw Preferred Pictures' production, 'Shadows.'"

"Abysmal Brute" on Way East

Adaptation of Jack London's Fight Story Set for April by Universal

"THE ABYSMAL BRUTE," Hobart Henley's latest Universal-Jewel production, is on the way East, the Universal home office reports. It is expected in New York in a day or so, and as soon as it has been reviewed by Universal executives, it will be rushed to the laboratory, where advance prints will be made for the various Universal exchanges in this country and Canada.

A special showing, before a selected audience of persons high in the film world, was given in the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, on the eve of the departure of the original print eastward. The feature was acclaimed as a knock-out and classified as one of the big pictures of 1923.

Wiring to the Universal home office, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Pictures Corporation, voiced the following opinion, after seeing the first screening of the Henley production:

"Held premiere showing of 'Abysmal Brute' Ambassador Hotel tonight. Everyone says better picture than 'The Flirt!' I personally am delighted with it. Think it one of the best audience pictures I have seen in many months. We have hit it big again."

"The Abysmal Brute" stars Reginald Denny. Jack London wrote "The Abysmal Brute." It is one of his most popular novels, and gives a dramatic insight into the ring game as it existed on the West Coast a decade ago.

Mabel Julienne Scott plays the chief supporting role. Others in the cast include Charles French, Hayden Stevenson, David Torrance, George Stewart, Buddy Messinger, Craufurd Kent, Irene Haisman, Dorothea Wolbert, Julia Brown, Nell Craig, Will R. Walling, Tom McGuire, Harry Mann, Tom Kennedy, Noble Johnson and others.

In addition to the regular cast, the west coast was combed for ring material to reproduce accurately the atmosphere of sporting circles. Nine well-known prize fighters were added to the cast. Among them are Kid Wagner, Goat Lavin, Monty Farrell, Tom O'Brien, Jack Horrick, Al Norton, Leo Latlock and Pat Harmon.

Carl Laemmle has dedicated the picture to the American Legion, because of the wonderful spirit of clean athletics engendered in young American manhood by the war and the subsequent veteran activities.

A. P. Younger, one of Universal's most experienced scenario writers, adapted the Jack London novel for the screen. The scenes, most of which were filmed in the California mountains, at the beach and at Universal City, were photographed by Charles Stumar. Universal plans to release "The Abysmal Brute" early next month.

Distinctive Expanding Schedule

"Seats of the Mighty" by Gilbert Parker Acquired for Production

SINCE the announcement of the first two 1923 feature-productions of Distinctive Pictures Corporation—"Backbone" and "The Ragged Edge"—Arthur S. Friend and Henry M. Hobart have been busy on the development of the full schedule for the year.

The most recent acquisition was made last week when Sir Gilbert Parker, author of "Seats of the Mighty" and "The Right of Way," went over to the Madison avenue offices and sold to Distinctive his celebrated novel, "The Weavers." It is a tale of the Egypt of fifty years ago—gripping in plot, fascinating in its swift action. The story will require a great cast and will permit of the creation of unusual sets, on which work will be begun immediately.

Work has already been begun on "The Steadfast Heart," by Clarence Budington Kelland, author of "Backbone." This story is based on a serial now running in Collier's Weekly and deals with the fight of a waif of a boy against adversity and the barriers of society.

Another on the Distinctive list is "Two Can Play," by Gerald Mygatt. The story deals with the whim of a wealthy man who does not wish his niece to marry a "lounge lizard" obviously unsuited to her tastes and desires. He engages a young man to act as a burglar—a "Raffles"—and complications set in when a real burglar appears on the scene.

The sixth of the list is "The Green Goddess," the William Archer melodrama which George Arliss has been using on a successful tour of the country after the long run in New York.

"Daughters of Rich" to Be Issued April 22

"Daughters of the Rich," Edgar Saltus' famous novel, now in its second week of production at the Schulberg studios, will be released by the Al Lichtman Corporation on April 22d., as the eighth Preferred Picture on their program.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in a scene from "Modern Marriage," American Releasing Corporation's picture which marks the return of these stars to the screen

Enlarged Staff to Aid Will Nigh's New Film

A directorial staff of eighteen and a technical staff of fifteen are at work on Will Nigh's second feature production for L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, now nearing completion in the East.

Ben Behrens, Nigh's right hand man and assistant director, heads the list of directorial associates under Nigh. He acted in the same capacity on all of Nigh's previous hits. The business end of the production is in the hands of Frank Loomis, one of the most efficient studio managers in the field. The art director is John T. Schulze, designer of all of Nigh's past settings.

The photographic division is headed by Jack Brown and Sidney Hickox, both veteran cameramen and experts in trick photography. They have injected novel effects that will surprise filmdom. Timothy McGrath is chief electrician. Jack Sharp is chief of the construction department. Under his hand eighteen full-stage sets were built in record time. Among the more important assistants are Fred Kohlberg and Charles Harten in the electrical division, Ernest Feighte, assistant art director, and Alice Satin, continuity writer.

Keen Interest in Assoc. Photoplay Product

The announcement made last week of the reorganization of the Associated Photo-Plays, Inc., and the appointment of A. Canter as sales manager is followed this week by news of the arrival of the first of a series of five pictures starring Milton Sills, "Why Women Re-Marry."

Mr. Canter, who is in charge of sales of all the productions to be released through franchise holders in the state right field, states that much interest has already been evinced in the first of the Milton Sills series.

Both foreign and domestic buyers have begun bidding for the territorial rights of the pictures, it is stated.

Gladys Walton in "Gossip," a Universal picture.

Nell Shipman to Locate in Northern Idaho

Nell Shipman, author, star and producer of American Releasing's "The Grub-Stake," made at Priest Lake, Idaho, will produce all future pictures there.

Bert Van Tuyle, her manager and director, is making arrangements to obtain several hundred acres on the Lake, where a permanent motion picture village will be built. Miss Shipman's wild animal zoo, consisting of nearly 200 animals, and her kennels of forty dogs, have been quartered at the Lake since completion of "The Grub-Stake" and a permanent home is planned for them there.

"We have made outdoor pictures in all parts of the country where we could find beautiful scenery," says Miss Shipman, "but Northern Idaho, especially Priest Lake, has the most wonderful and inspiring scenery for our purposes to be found anywhere. We can work there for the next ten years without using the same location twice."

The Nell Shipman Company have started on a series of twelve short wild animal pictures, to be followed in the Spring by their next feature, "Over the Last Ridge."

"Greatest Menace" Due via State Rights

Mayer & Quinn has for release a new production, entitled "The Greatest Menace," which is said to deal with the drug horror in a most dramatic and realistic manner. From start to finish it is melodramatically and graphically told, the film being taken from an original story by Angela C. Kaufman. The production is the work of J. G. Mayer. The adaptation and directing are the work of Alfred Rogell. The picture will be released via state rights market.

The all star cast includes such American favorites as Ann Little, Wilfred Lucas, Robert Gordon, Harry Northrup, Rhea Mitchell, Andrew MacClennan, Mildred June, "Red" Kirby, Gordon Mullen and Lew Meehan.

The Resolute Film Sales, Inc., will act as personal representatives for Mayer & Quinn with Lester Blankfield as special representative in New York.

Shipman Releases via Hodkinson

Features Made in Canadian Locales Expected to Set Up New Standards

A NEW storehouse has been tapped in the production of worthwhile pictures, which bids to set a new mark in this important industry. Up to date there have been few pictures that have had as their locale the Canadian wilds. Pictures have been produced using the theme of the Northwest mounted police, and stories laid in Alaska and the Yukon, but according to Mr. Shipman, Canada offers a veritable bonanza for the production of pictures, the surface of which has as yet been barely scratched.

It has remained for Ernest Shipman, a Canadian by birth, to produce the first all-Canadian pictures. "The Man from Glengarry" which is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation can be called the first absolutely all-Canadian photoplay. The author, Ralph Connor, is a Canadian, the producer, Ernest Shipman was born in Ottawa; Henry MacRae was born in Glengarry County; the Ottawa Film Productions, Limited, financed the production, and every scene was made in Ottawa and vicinity; not only that, but the picture was cut, printed, developed and finished in Canada, so that from the beginning to the end it is wholly a Canadian product.

Among other productions from the pen of the Canadian author Ralph Connor, (The Rev. Sir Chas. W. Gordon, D.D.) which Mr. Shipman has produced and which are now playing with tremendous success are "The Sky Pilot," "God's Crucible," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted."

Other pictures which will soon be released are "Glengarry Schooldays" from the pen of Ralph Connor, and "The Rapids" by Alan Sullivan, both entirely Canadian products. It is understood that Mr. Shipman is now working on several other pictures of like character.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation have arranged with Mr. Shipman to distribute these productions, the first of which "The Man from Glengarry" will be released March 25th.

Big Plans for "Wonders of Sea"

Extensive Preparations for Showing of Film in First-Run Theatres

PLANS are fast being consummated for the release of J. Ernest Williamson's latest undersea picture, "Wonders of the Sea," now being shown on the screen of all Loew theatres, opening Monday, March 12, at Loew's State, for first run theatre.

This is the picture which made its metropolitan debut of three consecutive weeks at the Rialto, Rivoli and Rialto theatres, and at the close of which engagement, it was rumored that "Wonders of the Sea" would be treated as a "special" and released on the open market at advanced prices. Just what was to be done with the Williamson "feature" remained in doubt until ten days ago, when Mr. Williamson decided that his best interests would be served by arranging for percentage exchange distribution, and accordingly, announcement was made that "Wonders of the Sea" would be distributed by the Film Booking Offices of America.

This latest of J. Ernest Williamson's pictures was produced at an increased cost—almost double the cost of any of this producer's expensive productions, it is stated. Mr. Williamson worked almost double the period usually required for cutting and titling—new "octopus" have been added—with the result that the picture now stands a full 5,500 feet.

Plans for a huge national campaign are well under way, it is announced. All of the advertising accessories commonly considered essential to the proper exploitation of a photo play feature of this caliber—and then some—will be ready within the next fifteen days. The posters, some of which are already finished, from drawings from the ablest artists in the country, are said to be particularly striking.

Clarence Burton Completes Big Roles

Clarence Burton, who for three years has been playing heavies in Paramount productions at the Hollywood studio of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has just completed two important roles in which he appeared as heavy in "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" and "Sixty Cents an Hour."

Mr. Burton has specialized in heavies for the greater portion of his long screen career and his exceptional ability in this line has resulted in the renewal of his contract year after year by the executives of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Producer:

There is sufficient talk of "new blood" in the industry to support a belief that this will be seen by those with whom I can do business.

Briefly, I WANT TO DO YOUR NEXT CONTINUITY.

I'm not an "old stager" at the game, nor yet a "green hand." I'm a fiction writer with about a year's intensive studio training in the preparation of shooting scripts for my own stuff.

I'd like to hear from independent producers who want thoughtful, intelligent continuity or screen originals, based upon THE FULL DEVELOPMENT OF STORY VALUES.

You're not asked to buy a pig in a poke. I have just finished the shooting script of a picture that is shortly to go into production. To any producer who needs COMPETENT CONTINUITY, I will send, on request, and WITHOUT OBLIGATION, a copy of that script as a sample of what I am doing. You can go over it, and then, if you're convinced that I CAN DO WORK FOR YOU, let me write your next continuity on a flat-rate basis.

I'm fairly familiar with picture costs and the small independent who wants economy of sets without having his picture look "skimpy" can get that kind of continuity from me WITHOUT A SACRIFICE OF STORY VALUES.

Will you let me hear from you?

Puts Harold Lloyd on Plane with Chaplin

The Chicago Tribune's review of "Dr. Jack," signed by Mae Tinee, places Harold Lloyd on the summit of all achievement in screen comedy.

Miss Tinee writes: "It is neat, snappy, fast appealing comedy in which Harold Lloyd leaps to a place on the platform with Charles Chaplin. He's been on the steps leading up to the platform for a long time. Now he's there, standing side by each, figuratively speaking, sipping from the same glass.

"And, finally, in 'Dr. Jack' Harold Lloyd proves himself a supercomedian, in that he insistently appeals to the sympathies as well as the risibilities. He keeps you laughing at him, but rooting for him."

Praise for "All Brothers Were Valiant"

"If you would forget for a brief and delightful hour all about taxes and how your mother-in-law acts, and about the grease-spot on the front of your new gown, and the ripped place you found in your new glove, and how the man next door practices his sliding trombone, just step inside the velvet curtains at Loew's State and allow yourself to slip under the spell of 'All the Brothers Were Valiant.'"

This is the recommendation of the photoplay reviewer of the Los Angeles Times, after witnessing a presentation of the Metro production, "All the Brothers Were Valiant," an Irvin V. Willat production based on the celebrated sea story by Ben Ames Williams. Lon Chaney, Malcolm MacGregor and Billie Dove head a distinguished cast in this exciting photoplay.

"Oliver Twist" Exploited in British Isles

Cooperating with the British First National organization, the London Daily Sketch has offered a prize of 25 pounds sterling for the boy who looks most like Jackie Coogan as a means of publicizing "Oliver Twist" abroad. The winner will also get a free trip to London and will make a personal appearance wherever the picture is being shown.

Several exhibitors have become interested in the idea and have added to the prize money, so that at last reports the sum had grown to over 160 pounds sterling. In addition Peter Astor, of the Astor productions declares that the boy selected can have a part in his new picture "Peter's Reform." This will give the lucky lad three or four weeks to act and play around London

"Midnight Cabaret" Stars Larry Semon

Larry Semon is at work upon a new comedy to be released by Vitagraph. It is called "The Midnight Cabaret" and it is said that for lavish production it exceeds anything Semon has attempted. There are scores of pretty girls, headed by Kathlyn Meyers, who plays opposite Larry in "The Barnyard."

"Brass" Has Premiere in Boston

Warner Bros. Feature Opens Before Representative Gathering at Park

BEFORE a large and representative gathering of Boston officials and others interested in the problem of marriage and divorce, the Warner Brothers' classic of the screen, "Brass," adapted from the novel written by Charles G. Norris, was enthusiastically received and highly praised by the newspaper critics following its presentation at the Park theatre last week.

The production will remain at the Park for an indefinite run. From present indications it is destined to break all previous records for attendance throughout its engagement. According to the Franklin Film Company of Boston, under whose auspices the film is being shown, thousands of people were turned away from the theatre long before the picture was scheduled to be screened.

The Franklin Film Company wired the Warner offices as follows: "'Brass' opened at Park theatre for an indefinite run and thousands were turned away. Patrons showed their appreciation with deafening applause and newspapers were unanimous in their criticisms by pronouncing it a really masterful production."

The Boston Globe said: "A large audience which overflowed the theatre attended the opening showing of the film and generously applauded at the end of the performance. Many notables were in the audience. The auditors showed their appreciation in no unmeasured way and the film was worthy of all the applause it received. Julien Josephson has made a splendid motion picture. The idea of the book, with its analytical and biting attack on marriage as it is today, in contrast to the less exciting but infinitely more permanent marriage of our forefathers was skilfully embodied into the film. There is an excellent cast."

The Boston Telegram said: "If honest applause is any criterion of the true worth of a photoplay, 'Brass' ranks among the greatest of American screen productions. The reception accorded this remarkable picture by the audience of first nighters will long be remembered by those who heard it."

The Herald said: "It is an effective and interesting picture. It presents many problems of married life. The cast on the whole is excellent. Monte Blue as Philip does some finished work."

Boston Traveler said: "'Brass' is an interesting picture and somewhat off the beaten path that pictures tread too often. There is some fine acting. Monte Blue plays Philip and is enabled to make him a much pleasanter character than in the book. He is at all times novel. Marie Prevost does well with Marjorie, both as the pleasure loving, irresponsible, spoiled child and as the remorseful woman."

Five First-Runs in L.A. for "U"

Three Jewel and Two Universal Attractions Billed for March 19 Week

UNIVERSAL will occupy a unique position in Los Angeles during the week of March 19th, when five Universal pictures will have their first runs simultaneously in the leading theatres of that city. The pictures will include three current Universal-Jewel productions and two Universal Attractions.

The Kinema theatre will show "The Flirt," the Hobart Henley success adapted from Booth Tarkington's novel. This picture created a sensation in New York and since its premiere has swept the country, establishing box-office records from coast to coast. It will open in Los Angeles with an enviable record behind it.

In the California theatre, there will be held the Los Angeles premiere of "Driven," the Charles Brabin picture of mountaineer life which recently created such a flood of commendation in New York. This picture was one of the choices of the Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the National Board of Review, and was accorded a special showing by that committee. It was made with a cast including Elinor Fair, Emily Fitzroy, Charles Mack, Burr McIntosh and others. As the result of her excellent work as the lovable mountain girl in "Driven," Miss Fair is now on her way to Universal City to take important roles in Universal productions.

"The Flame of Life," Priscilla Dean's latest Universal-Jewel picture, which also is a Hobart Henley production, will have its Los Angeles premiere in the Symphony theatre. Miss Dean has an exceptionally large following in Los Angeles, and the showing of her releases invariably means box office records there. "The Flame of Life" reaches Los Angeles after showing in several of the country's key cities, where it has met with unusual praise. All critics unite in acclaiming it as the best work of the emotional Universal star.

At Grauman's theatre, there will be shown "The Ghost Patrol," a heart appeal picture with an all-star cast including such popular players as Ralph Graves, Bessie Love, George B. Williams, and George Nichols. The last named has a sympathetic role, similar to his role in "The Flirt." "The Ghost Patrol" is a Sinclair Lewis story.

The other Universal Attraction will be shown at Pantages theatre. It is "The Flaming Hour," and is a stirring romantic comedy starring Frank Mayo, supported by Helen Ferguson and Charles Clary.

National Board Selects "Are You A Failure?"

"ARE YOU A FAILURE?" Tom Forman's production for Preferred Pictures, appears on the latest list issued by the National Board of Review as a picture suitable not only for the family group, but especially for young people. The story for this comedy is by Larry Evans, and the cast the picture features includes Lloyd Hughes, Madge Bellamy and Tom Santschi. It is the March release presented by B. P. Schulberg through the Al Lichtman Corp.

Campaign in New York for "Temptation"

What is declared to be one of the biggest exploitation campaigns launched in the city will be undertaken by the Apollo exchange in connection with their release of C. B. C.'s "Temptation."

This announcement was forthcoming this week from Bobby North of that organization, who says that all the forces in his exchange are at present concentrating in putting over this feature in a big way.

The first gun in Mr. North's plan will take the form of a big twenty-four sheet campaign on this feature. He has just completed arrangements for the taking over of many twenty-four sheet stands in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey, it is stated, and these will be placarded.

Pilgrim's Descendants Assisting Chas. Ray

Actual descendants of the Pilgrims who crossed in the Mayflower in 1620 are taking a deep interest in Charles Ray's production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

Besides receiving letters of congratulation and approval from hundreds of men and women who trace their relationship back to the valorous pioneers, Mr. Ray has had helpful co-operation from various chapters of several national organizations. Such societies as the Alden Kindred, the Mayflower Descendants, and the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution, through prominent members, and, in some cases, the organizations themselves are manifesting a deep interest, and have supplied data which the star has found of great assistance in constructing the historical features of the drama.

Broadway Presentation for "Third Alarm"

Charles B. McDonald, manager of the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre, recently closed one of the most successful weeks in the history of his theatre with "The Third Alarm," an Emory Johnson production released through Film Booking Offices of America. Mr. McDonald lived up to his reputation as a showman by providing an excellent atmospheric lobby for the picture and staging a unique prologue.

"Daughters of Rich" Ready Soon

Third of Schulberg-Lichtman Series of Companion Films Due April 22d

H. P. SCHULBERG announced this week that Preferred Pictures will release in the not too far distant future the final of the series of four pictures, "Rich Men's Wives," "Poor Men's Wives," "Daughters of the Rich," and "Daughters of the Poor."

About a year ago when Schulberg mapped out his production program for the first twelve months through the Al Lichtman Corporation, he had in mind the making of this series of companion pictures as one of the salient innovations of the Preferred output. These four pictures he planned to make the most pretentious of his first releases if exhibitors were receptive to them. The idea underlying their production was to give the public not only four special features of the highest quality in picture making, but to present to them in an interesting fashion stories setting forth present day problems.

Schulberg determined to try out the first series to discover the reactions of the exhibitor and his patrons with the purchase of "Rich Men's Wives" and "Poor Men's Wives" written by Frank Dazey and Agnes Christine Johnston as screen originals. The Schulberg-Lichtman combination was launched with the release of the former to which Gasnier had been assigned as director and a cast including Claire Windsor, House Peters, Gaston Glass, Myrtle Stedman and Rosemary Theby was added. "Rich Men's Wives" is reported to have been enthusiastically received.

Exhibitors requested the early release of the second story to follow it up, and Gasnier was commissioned to make it. "Poor Men's Wives," featuring Barbara La Marr, David Butler, Betty Francisco, and Zasu Pitts had its premier recently at the Criterion in New York and is now playing first-runs throughout the country.

The success of these first pictures has assured Schulberg of the feasibility of his plan and Gasnier is now busy completing "Daughters of the Rich" based on Edgar Saltus' widely read novel. Gaston Glass, Ruth Clifford, Ethel Shannon, Marjorie Daw and Stuart Holmes are in the cast. "Daughters of the Rich" will be released through Al Lichtman exchanges on April 22d as one of the first eight Preferred Pictures.

The fourth of this series, "Daughters of the Poor," will follow later in the season. This will also be a Gasnier production. It will be handled, however, as an entirely different plot just as "Poor Men's Wives" followed "Rich Men's Wives" as a separate story completing its general idea.

Dorothy Dalton Company Back from Florida

After three weeks in Florida, some of the time on the sands at Palm Beach, but more in the swamp lands near Jupiter, where scenes were made for "Fog Bound," Dorothy Dalton and her Paramount company have returned to the Long Island studio to complete the picture. Those who worked in the South under the direction of Irvin V. Willat were David Powell, Maurice Costello, Martha Mansfield, William David, Warren Cook, and Jack Richardson. "Fog Bound" was adapted by Paul Dickey from a short story by Jack Bechdolt.

Picture with Appeal to Women

"Is Divorce a Failure?" Stars Leah Baird; Assoc. Exhib. Release March 18

"EXHIBITORS on the lookout for pictures that appeal primarily to women should welcome 'Is Divorce A Failure?' the first of the Leah Baird 1923 specials, which Associated Exhibitors is releasing March 18th," declares a statement from Associated Exhibitors.

"Women are more theatrical than men," Miss Baird said in a recent interview. "They have an insatiable craving for thrills. The most normal-minded of them betrays at times a desire to kick over the traces, to throw off the shackles of convention. The gilded cage may and does become as irksome as the prison cell. It is the moral monotony of their lives that drives many women to contemplate divorce.

"I named my new picture, 'Is Divorce A Failure?' because the heroine simply couldn't bring herself to believe she was happy until she had gone to Reno. After that so many things happened to her that the title suggested itself. Carol Lockwood, the central figure in the story, unwittingly allowed herself to develop an unhealthful mental condition, and to correct this state of mind I considered it necessary to put her through a series of appalling experiences. Sensations and thrills were necessary to teach her her lesson, and I gave her these in generous doses. They are the only cure for selfishness and theatricalism resulting from auto-suggestion on the part of the individual, and the story purposely avoids giving a more definite motive for Carol's divorce."

Unusual exteriors are said to be shown in this uncommon photoplay, and with the popular featured player supported by an excellent cast and the direction in the hands of Wallace Worsley, Associated Exhibitors is predicting a big success for the picture.

Lichtman Picture Well Received Abroad

Very favorable comment has been accorded "Thorns and Orange Blossoms" in England where the Al Lichtman releases are handled by Walterdaw. The cinema reviews the production as "modern and excellently produced. . . . The public who like romance with a strong vein of emotionalism will welcome this production." The Kinematograph Weekly calls it "an agreeable hour's entertainment. Well photographed and acted." The Film Renter characterizes it as "a best seller that can be unreservedly recommended."

Al Lichtman, who is now abroad, will be in England for the London opening of "Thorns and Orange Blossoms."

"Robin Hood" Wins Editorial Approval

Under the caption, "'Robin Hood' 100 per cent all right," the Seattle Star, during the showing of this United Artists release at the Liberty theatre, Seattle, ran the following editorial:

"So often recently the movies have come in for harsh criticism, it is a postive pleasure to discover a film which can be whole-heartedly and enthusiastically applauded.

"Such is 'Robin Hood,' showing this week at the Liberty. It is a work of downright beauty. It is gorgeously elaborate and spectacular on the one hand, and worked out in fine, thoughtful detail on the other. It is true to the legend, true to the atmosphere of mediaeval England, and always free from cheapness and vulgarity.

"It is Douglas Fairbanks' masterpiece, and it is, if not a genuine work of art, at least an earnest that the movie is susceptible, when in the hands of sincere, intelligent men, of being developed as an art."

Fox Picture Shown to Hospital Patients

The patients in St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, enjoyed a motion picture show recently given for the benefit of Captain Nicholas McDonald, a newspaper staff photographer, who was injured in a flashlight explosion. Harry Birch of the Fox Film Corporation put on the show, "The Town That Forgot God," a nine-reel feature, and "The Pirate," a two-reel comedy, comprising the program.

Correction of Caption in March 17 Issue

The two-column photograph appearing on Page 1311, issue of March 17th, was incorrectly captioned as showing scenes from Elmer Clifton's "Down to the Sea in Ships," distributed by W. W. Hodkinson. The scenes presented in the cut are taken from current episodes of the Pathe serial, "Plunder," starring Pearl White.

Plans for "Ashes of Vengeance"

Schenck to Make This Most Elaborate Film Norma Talmadge Ever Had

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK is planning to make the next Norma Talmadge picture, "Ashes of Vengeance" the most elaborate Miss Talmadge has ever appeared in, declares a statement from First National.

For over a week he had Walter Isreal, head of his costume and research department, in New York buying material for 1200 costumes to be worn in some of the big scenes of the play and gathering together nearly a carload of swords, armor and high hip boots, reminiscent of the days of Charles the IX and Catherine de Medici, in which period the story of H. B. Somerville is laid. It is reported that Isreal spent a little fortune getting brocades, embroideries, laces, dress material and other material for the settings.

Isreal has returned to Los Angeles and has employed thirty five men and women to work on the 1200 costumes, many of which will be seen in the opening scenes of the picture which shows a ball in the Louvre. As it will take nearly three weeks to get these costumes ready Miss Talmadge will not begin working until March 25.

Stephen Goosson will have charge of the sets.

Frank Lloyd will again direct Miss Talmadge. This is the third Norma Talmadge picture for Mr. Lloyd. He directed "The Eternal Flame," and "Within the Law." Lloyd also directed Jackie Coogan in "Oliver Twist."

In Los Angeles Mr. Schenck is taking care of the hiring of the most beautiful horses he can find. One of the big scenes will be a fox hunt in which many horses and valuable dogs will be used.

Premiere for "Covered Wagon"

Extensive Preparations for Opening at Criterion, N. Y., This Week

MOST elaborate preparations have been made by Hugo Riesenfeld for the engagement of James Cruze's Paramount production, "The Covered Wagon," at the Criterion Theatre. The house was temporarily closed last Saturday night and immediately a small army of cleaners, interior decorators and carpenters took possession and have been working all week transferring the interior for the premiere performance Friday night.

Last Sunday evening a pre-view of the picture version of Emerson Hough's novel of the settling of the West was given in the ball room of the Plaza Hotel for the benefit of the New York Maternity Center and the American Fund for Devastated France, the performance being under the auspices of the Film Benefit Bureau. Fifteen hundred society people were present and received the picture with frequent and enthusiastic applause. Members of the Junior League, attired in appropriate costume, acted as ushers.

Dr. Riesenfeld has personally arranged the musical score for the picture and with his assistants has spent several weeks in perfecting the plans for the Criterion presentation. A prologue in which will be presented the songs of 1849 will precede the film. To the New York Public Library Dr. Riesenfeld and Paramount are indebted for the use of copies of some twelve or fourteen songs, all of which were popular in the middle of the last century but have long since been out of print. These songs not only will be sung in the prologue but have been worked into the accompaniment of the picture.

On Thursday evening, over the radio from Station WEAF, of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., in New York, Jesse L. Lasky, Jr., recounted to Boy Scouts and thousands of other radio fans his experiences with Indians and plainsmen while on location in Utah and Nevada with Director Cruze and his company. The subject of this original talk given by the young son of the Famous Players-Lasky vice-president was "Scouting With 'The Covered Wagon.'"

The Criterion is now fronted by one of the most unique electric signs that ever blazed forth on Broadway. On the front of the theatre has been constructed the incandescent outline of a huge covered wagon fording a stream, the water effect being produced with startling realism. On the 44th street side the rear of a covered wagon is reproduced. The big Broadway sign simulates one of the big scenes of the picture, that of the fording of the Kaw River.

Work on "Going Up" Is Nearly Completed

The filming of "Going Up," the screen adaptation of the Cohan & Harris stage hit, which will be Douglas MacLean's first starring vehicle for Associated Exhibitors, is almost finished, according to advices received from Hollywood this week.

Because of the extraordinary amount of flying which is one of the essential features of the comedy, Lloyd Ingraham, the director, divided the production work into two stages. All work with Mr. MacLean's supporting cast, which included Marjorie Daw, Hallam Cooley, Edna Murphy, Francis MacDonald, Hughie Mack and other well known players, ended almost two weeks ago, and Mr. Ingraham and a large staff of cameramen and aviators have since been devoting their time to securing the airplane scenes.

Police Head Urges Anti-Drug Film Be Assisted

Chief of Police Phillip T. Smith of New Haven, Conn., President of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, has dispatched letters and telegrams to the members of his organization inviting them to go to Hollywood and assist in the filming of "The Living Dead," Mrs. Wallace Reid's picture on the narcotic evil.

The action of Chief Smith, who has prepared monographs on the subject and is recognized as an authority, marks the adoption of the film as the official one of this world-wide association in the fight against drugs. This is similar to the move of the California State Federation of Women's Clubs, who recently sent their president, Mrs. W. A. Fitzgerald, to Washington to urge President Harding to give it the highest Government sanction. Mrs. Fitzgerald will also carry the message to other state federations.

4,000 Persons in Big Scene in Tully Film

Some of the work Richard Walton Tully did in Paris for his forthcoming First National production of "Trilby," is coming to light in the news from Los Angeles where Tully is making elaborate preparations for the actual "shooting" of this famous Du Maurier classic. At the Cirque de Medrano he filmed 4,000 persons in the costumes of the period of which Du Maurier wrote. He brought back several thousand feet of negative.

Filming of "Trilby" will begin as soon as James Young has finished directing "Wandering Daughters," his initial First National release.

Fans Form Leah Baird Club in Chicago

Leah Baird's admirers in Chicago have launched a Leah Baird Fans' Club, with the purpose of giving theatre party on the opening night of every Associated Exhibitors release featuring Miss Baird. The club is to hold its first "open meeting" when "Is Divorce a Failure?" the first of the Leah Baird Specials for 1923 starts its first Chicago engagements. Glen C. Lenington, of the First National Bank, Chicago, was the prime mover in the formation of the organization.

Plans for Combination of Three Stages for Separate or Unified Presentation

Articles by Lee S. Ferguson

AS far as we know there is no motion picture theatre using at the present time three stages for presentation specialties. We will therefore take up part of the space this week in describing a stage layout which Managing Director Edward L. Hyman has devised, and which will no doubt furnish many ideas for exhibitors building new houses or remodeling others. Of course, this setting is suggested for motion picture palaces of the larger sort, running from 4,000 to 6,000 seats, but it would not be out of place in smaller theatres if moderated in parts.

In planning this equipment the largest stage of the three should, of course, be in the center. On each side of it would be a smaller stage, these two to be probably half the size of the big stage and ranged at a 45-degree angle running down to the proscenium arch. The stages would be divided by pillars topped by arches, thus making three independent stages, which can be used separately or can be working all at the same time. They suggest to the active minded exhibitor an endless variety of staging methods, permitting the use of tableaux on the small stages while the large stage is being set or even while a specialty is being used which has a bearing on the tableaux. Just the thought of the three stages causes a myriad of ideas to spring up, permitting the theatre to be practically in a class by itself if this paraphernalia is used to the best advantage.

For these three stages there would be four columns, two on the main arch over the main stage, and one at each end of the smaller arches, marking the end of the stage nearest the wall. Each of the columns should have a transparent window in proportion to its size, thus permitting lighting harmonies from strip lights placed behind the transparencies. A very striking effect may be obtained from these windows when the stage lights are down.

On each of the three stage openings there should be a tab curtain, a draw curtain and an iris, providing all that is needed from most any kind of number desired. With a cyclorama back drop around the three stages and with the front curtains drawn, the effect of one large stage is given, merely divided with two columns. If glass traps are placed in the floors of the stages still further effects in lighting may be obtained. The large stage could use three traps and the smaller stages one or two each. Over the stages X-ray reflectors could be used instead of border lights to good advantage.

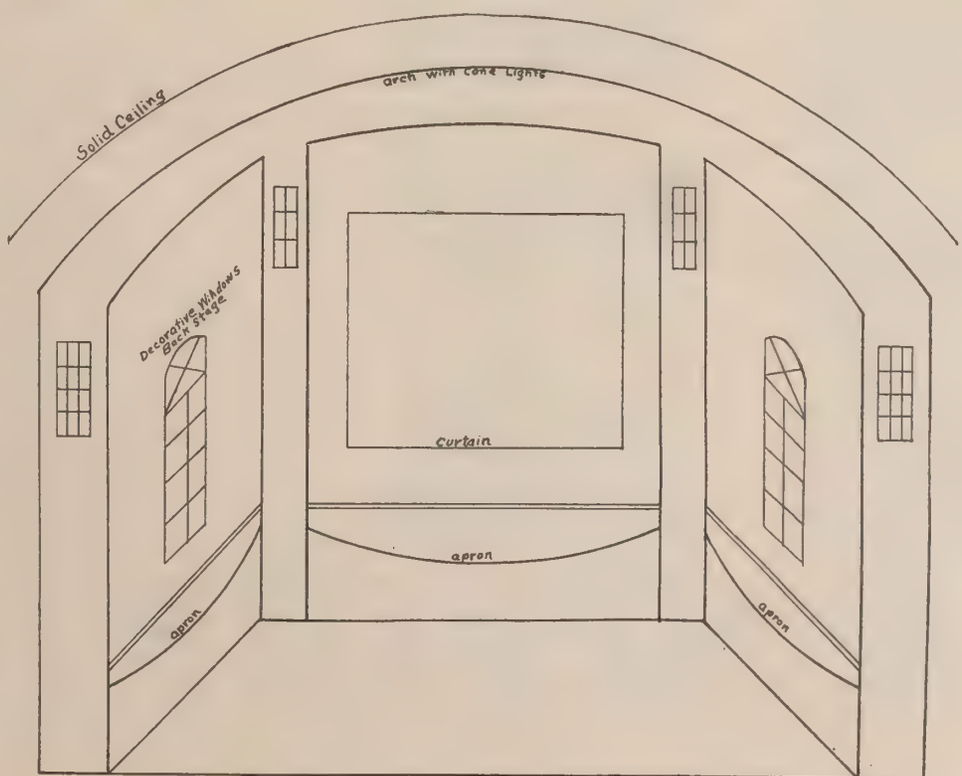
The ceiling should be solid and half round. This would act as an excellent sounding board for the orchestra, and with the use of X-ray cove lights some magnificent effects could be obtained.

In the way of further equipment, six Kliegl 1,000-watt lens lamps should be placed back of the columns of the smaller stages, three to a side. Six should also be placed back of the columns of the main stage, making twelve for this platform. Overhead, a canopy ceiling underneath the solid ceiling will aid in getting more artistic color effects. This canopy may be made of pineapple cloth, a fascinating thing as viewed from the auditorium, standing up well under any lights used.

On the steel bridge across the stage, four Mestrum 100-ampere spot lights may be placed. It is, of course, advisable that the regular equipment of foot lights and borders be on hand. In addition to the four Mestrum spots on the bridge, ten 1,000-watt Kliegl lens lamps may be used for soft lighting. About sixteen 1,000-watt open box lamps may be used for flooding purposes. In the dome of the theatre four 150-ampere Mestrum combination flood and spot lights may be utilized. This, of course, is taking it for granted that the proscenium arch is of sufficient height to allow the spots to hit any place on the stage. Eight 1,000-watt Kliegl lens lamps should be placed back stage for side lighting.

With a layout like this an exhibitor need not take a back seat for anyone, provided, of course, this equipment is used with a sense of showmanship. There is a magnificent theatre up-state which was built to typify the ideal theatre, and there should be ideal programs and presentations as well. But it is common knowledge that this house has not been utilized to the fullest. The equipment is there, and that is about all. It has been said that a singer who had been booked in for a specialty was asked when she went in for a rehearsal what kind of lighting she wanted for her "act." If lighting were left to singers and dancers, then it would probably be best to take out the equipment and run just the picture alone.

In striking contrast to this is the set of over forty color combinations that have been worked out by Hyman.



Layout for special stage which can be used for three separate stages, design by E. L. Hyman

New Aubert Theatre, a fine addition to St. Louis' motion picture houses

These lights must always fit the occasion, and not used merely to get a light on the singer, dancer or tableau. Maybe a singer has been singing for years in a spotlight only, but if she or he is fortunate to get a booking into the Brooklyn Mark Strand the chances are that their effectiveness will be improved greatly through the staging, costuming and lighting devised by Hyman. No "acts" are used.

A very effective novelty used recently at the Brooklyn Mark Strand was called "Call Me by Radio," a duet by Everett Clark and Edna Burhans. For this a drop was used painted deep blue to get night effect, and with landscape barely visible. At the upper left was a transparent window in a cottage, and at the lower right was a transparent opening behind which was a music room set. Between the two openings intermittent flashings gave a suggestion of radio. The front lighting on this curtain was blue. Two magenta entrance spots and two medium green were focused on the ceiling. The cove lights were blue. The whole suggested a soft, hazy night scene, with the wireless sparks adding a touch of the mechanical. The orchestra played the introductions, and then lights were turned up on the lower right transparency, revealing Everett Clark talking to a man seated at the piano. This man was the accompanist for the number, as the orchestra stopped after the introduction. Clark then sang the opening verse of "Call Me by Radio" into a broadcasting horn, which, for this occasion, was attached to Callophone loud speakers. The radio effect was perfect. At the close of the chorus the lights were turned up on the upper left transparency (the window) revealing the girl seated in her drawing room. She has evidently picked up the radio message and in answer sings the second verse direct to the audience. At the chorus both man and woman sing. The lyrics for "Call Me by Radio" were made to order for this number by the writer in collaboration with Hyman and Clark, and were set to the tune of "My Buddy," a very popular melody particularly suited to the number.

In view of the timeliness of such a specialty, this offers many ideas for theatres in all sections of the country. Select a tuneful number, preferably, and if possible use the man and woman, as a love melody will take better usually than a solo by one or the other. If the solo is used it is suggested the singer keep up the radio illusion by "singing to" some one, this "some one" being shown in tableau or not at all, if preferred.

Motiograph Reports Brisk Business

During the first two months of 1923, exhibitors have shown a healthy interest in better projection as a business builder in their houses, according to General Manager O. F. Spahr, of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, who states that as a result of this interest, Motiograph distributors throughout the country have been kept busy.

The Art Film Studios, Cleveland, Ohio, Motiograph dealers for Cleveland and surrounding territory, have made a number of installations in that district, the most recent being the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, in which theatre they installed two Motiograph De Luxe projectors equipped with H-I lamps.

The Amusement Supply Company of Chicago, Motiograph distributors for Illinois and Indiana, also report a number of Motiograph sales for 1923, among which were the following Chicago installations: Pershing theatre, Knickerbocker theatre, Wilson Avenue theatre, Logan Square theatre and Madison Square theatre.

News from Oklahoma and Texas

THE Idle Hour theatre, costing $30,000 was opened by Rob Snodgrass and Chester, owners, at Drumright, Okla., March 1, 1923, to pleased capacity business. The theatre is strictly modern, fireproof and up to date in every particular. The seating capacity is about 1,500.

The old Idle Hour theatre has been abandoned as a picture house and will be torn down to make way for business houses which will be erected on the site.

Plans for erection of a theatre at Birmingham, Ala., to cost approximately $1,000,000 by the Interstate Amusement Company of Dallas, Texas, was announced February 24th.

The Dallas Company, of which Karl Sabitzella is president, expects to build the Birmingham theatre on the lines of the company's house in Houston, Dallas and Wichita, Kansas, it was stated.

St. Louis Has Addition of Charming Moderate Sized House

THE Aubert theatre, 4949 Easton avenue, St. Louis, Mo., is a recent addition to first run theatres in St. Louis and one of the prettiest little theatres in the Middle West devoted to motion pictures.

The cost to complete is in the neighborhood of $250,000, and will seat upward of 2,000, and has been over six months in the building.

The Aubert represents a solid structure, the roof being tied to the foundation by steel columns, with the roof trusses reinforced two ways to eliminate wind vibration. The throw is 140 feet to a plaster paris screen.

Caldine No. 3 High Tex Range brick was used on all four sides. A beautiful marquee canopy 20 feet long projects 12 feet to outside.

The trusses are so constructed they will stand twice the weight of the roof, and the building is absolutely fireproof (concrete), with a monolithic roof. An 8-foot dead air space between ceiling and roof affords an even temperature, giving uniform warmth in winter and a cooling freshness in summer.

The heating design is unique, with two-unit furnaces (hot air blast) distributing by six-foot fans drawing cold air out of house at floor and forcing heated air into house nine feet above floor level, thereby aiding circulation and giving a uniform temperature at all levels of the auditorium. Another six-foot fan operating in conjunction with first fan during warm weather insures complete change of air every three minutes, eliminating necessity for wall fans. An innovation in the projection booth for the airdome (seating 2,000) is part of the building, same made of fireproof brick and concrete, where Powers 6-E machines will be used.

The seats are strong and sturdy, furnished by Heywood-Wakefield.

The Aubert theatre people are the first ones in St. Louis to install the Robert-Morton orchestral organ. The theatre is controlled by the Kingsberton Amusement Company, and will be under the management of Samuel D. Bromley, who also operates the Broadway and Chippewa theatres.

The Aubert will be operated as a popular price house, for which there is a demand in St. Louis. A chain of houses to be operated on this policy, it is claimed, will be acquired or built later on by the same people.

N. Y. Members of Dealers Ass'n Make Credit and Standardization Ratings

AN exceedingly important step has been taken by the New York zone members of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America through the formation by them of a local organization for the standardization of motion picture supplies.

The principle on which this sub-organization has been formed should prove a decided benefit to everyone who has any connection with motion picture supplies as it will tend to put this phase of the industry on a sound business basis. A movement such as this should be welcomed by the exhibitor as well as the supply dealers.

Hoy's Service has been retained by this local association in their effort to stabilize the credit which is to be given theatres and to accelerate the payment of overdue accounts which may be owing concerns belonging to the association. The interchange of credit information will also be available for the members. It is the intention of the local association to give theatres in the New York zone a credit rating in a general way according to their size and standing, thus placing the various theatres on the basis of an individual business concern.

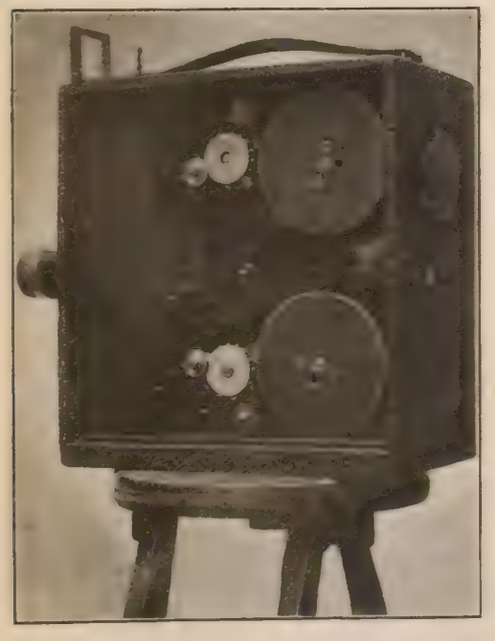
Also of decided advantage to the exhibitor is the fact that standard prices are to be maintained on standard equipment which will tend to assure the exhibitor of the real value of his purchases. In many instances this standardization of prices, it is reported, has made the universal accepted prices a reduction over those previously in vogue. Such standard practices should prove to the advantage of everyone concerned. Also a definite allowance on second hand supplies has been made by the national association so that various apparatus be valued for exchange purposes according to age and usage.

Mr. Hornstein of the Howells Cine Equipment Company has been appointed Director by the National Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America and has used his efforts in helping to organize the local association. The territory of the zone comprises all New York State, northern New Jersey and southern Connecticut. Active membership of the New York Zone consists of the following supply dealers: Howells Cine Equipment Company, 140 Seventh Ave., New York; Independent Movie Supply Company, 729 Seventh Ave., New York; United Theatre Equipment Corporation, 729 Seventh Ave., New York; Behrend Motion Picture Supply Company, 729 Seventh Ave., New York; Capitol Motion Picture Supply Company, 142 West 42nd St., New York; Crown Motion Picture Supply Co., 138 West 46th St., New York; Sam Kaplan, 729 Seventh Ave., New York and Otto Greenbaum, 436 Cornelius St., Brooklyn.

Among the Associate members are: Automatic Ticket Register Corp.; Hertner Electric Company; Minusa Cine Screen Corp.; Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company; Hugo Reisinger; Bio Carbon Corp.; International Ticket Company; Peter & Volt Chair Co.; Simplex Ticket Register Corp.; Moving Picture World and MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Officers of the local organization are M. G. Felder of the Bio Carbon Corp., President and J. C. Kroesen of the Edison Lamp Works, Treasurer. Officers of the National Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America are L. E. Dwyer, President, of the Theatre Supply Co., Cleveland, Ohio; H. J. Smith, 1st Vice-Pres., of Hollis, Smith, Morton Co., Pittsburg, Pa.; B. A. Benson, 2nd Vice-Pres., of the Amusement Supply Co., Chicago, Ill.; C. E. Cornwell, 3rd Vice-Pres., of the Charleston Elec. Supply Co., Charleston, W. Va.; Sid Louis, 4th Vice-Pres., of the Rialto Theatre Supply Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; Dr. Otto Dieckmann, Sec.-Treas., of Bwyer Bros. & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. The directors consist of Leo E. Dwyer, Henry Jay Smith, B. A. Benson, C. E. Cornwell, Sid Louis, Dr. Otto Dieckmann, Harry K. Lucas, Atlanta, R. L. Hosmer, Boston, and H. G. Mohrbacker, Denver.

Will H. Hays, Fred K. Landis, H. A. R. Dutton, D. C. Cookingham and others to be named later will make up the Advisory Board.



The new Regal Motion Picture Camera that has been developed by J. A. Le Roy, a pioneer in this field

New Motion Picture Camera

A new motion picture camera has been designed and built by J. A. LeRoy, a pioneer in the motion field. This new camera is called the "Regal" and it is claimed that it meets in a satisfactory way the important items such as cost, size, weight and at the same time registers exceedingly good pictures.

The Regal camera uses Eastman's Standard film and is daylight loading, the reels being of a 50 foot capacity and permits making 800 separate still pictures or continuous film of short scenes or complete scene of 50 feet in motion. An ordinary tripod of medium weight is employed, the light weight of the "Regal" making it convenient to be carried.

The focusing is done through a tube at the back of the camera and permits viewing an enlarged image of the scene after the required sharpness of the image is obtained. The threading of the machine is simple. It is claimed that the taking lens is rapid with a full opening of F.3.5. with a fixed stop of F.6.5 and a tubular shutter is employed which opens and closes from the center. A specially designed intermittent movement is employed.

It is claimed that this camera can be put to good use for local advertising, special events, news, manufacturer's processes, etc. It is also very well adapted for amateur photographers. The "Regal" camera is distributed and sold by the Acme Exchanges of 133 Third Avenue, New York City.

Eastern Equipment Publishes House Organ

The Eastern Theatre Equipment Company, a progressive motion picture supply house located in Boston, Mass., are now publishing a new house organ which is called the "Get-together." The first issue of this publication is extremely well edited and the various activities of that locality as well as various technical subjects on the motion picture supplies are therein contained. This publication is very much worth while reading and is edited by Robert L. Hosmer, General Manager of the Eastern Theatre Equipment Company.

A New Condenser System

S. Major & Company have reported that they have developed a new condenser system which consists of one unit instead of the common practice of two. Their claims for this system is that it tends to do away with spherical abberation due to its particular construction and shape, that the class of which the condensers are made is of such quality that it cuts down the effect of pitting and also that the system can be used to advantage on incandescent lamp projection. Mr. Major who is head of this concern, claims that a number of years has been devoted to the development of this particular type of condenser system.

Controlled Light A Feature

The stage switchboard in the theaters pictured here (as well as a great many more of the leading ones of the country) was not left to the suggestion of any inexperienced man or group of men who did not realize the tremendous importance of the light control in a modern theater. The equipment of these theaters is the Major System of Preselective Remote Control—a fact too great to overlook if you are contemplating building a new theater or remodeling your present one.

Features of the Major System:

Remote Control
Extended Remote Control
Cumulative Control
Pre-Selection
Flashless, noiseless switch operation
Minimum stage space
Unit construction
Experienced design
Perfect workmanship
Highest grade materials

Controlled light is a box office attraction—a permanent feature that doesn't entail a week-to-week high cost. It can only be accomplished by one proved system—The Major System.

The problem is not, it seems, whether you can afford it. Rather it is whether you can afford to operate without it.

CHAPTER III

UP to this point we have only considered light as it emanates from a point, but now we are ready to consider any object which may be reproduced by a lens as an image. In photography, practically all images that we have to consider are delineated or formed in one plane; that is, either upon the flat surface of a photographic plate or upon a film stretched flat or upon a piece of photographic paper, as in a photograph, or upon a screen in a moving picture theatre, so that no matter by what means we produce a photographic image it is practically always done upon a flat surface. Let us, for the purpose of our analysis, consider any object or any image as being composed of a collection of a vast number of small points of different degrees of illumination placed beside each other, forming an infinitely fine mosaic which delineates the object or image which we have under consideration. To make this point clearer, inspect very closely with the naked eye, or better still, with a small magnifying glass, any half-tone cut in this or any other book or paper and you will see that the entire picture is formed by small dots of varying sizes which make up the picture. In the same manner we may consider any object or image as consisting of an infinite number of small points not necessarily arranged in mechanical order as in a half-tone cut. This mechanical sequence in a half-tone is merely a method of surmounting certain mechanical difficulties in photo-mechanical reproduction, the size of the dot representing the intensity of illumination of that particular portion of the picture which it represents.

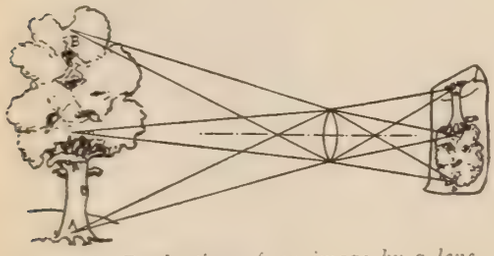

Fig. 14—Production of an image by a lens

There are many other processes of photogravure too complicated for ordinary book production in which the dots are arranged in irregular order or in which the light intensity is registered by other means, such as the Mosstype, the Albertype and various photogelatine and lithographic processes.

We have already seen that all objects reflect a certain percentage of light. If by means of a lens we can focus the luminous points which delineate an object upon a flat surface, we must necessarily obtain an image of that object upon the focal plane, as in Fig. 14.

This image is always reversed and inverted; that is, like a mirror reflection turned upside down. By again referring to Fig. 14 we see the reason for this. All of the light rays emanating from A on the tree which strike the lens are condensed and brought to a focus at the point a in the image. Likewise, all of the rays which strike the lens from the point B are focused at the point b in the image; in a like manner all of the other points on the surface of the tree are delineated on the screen without rendering the diagram too complicated by trying to reproduce the path of the light rays from all of the other points on the tree. If we move the screen a small distance in either direction from the focal plane the image becomes blurred and indistinct, since our points of illumination then become overlapping circles of confusion, as in Fig. 15. The image ab in Fig. 14 is termed a real image, because it may be focused upon a screen and to distinguish it from certain other images which we will consider later, which can be seen but which cannot be focused upon a screen and which are termed virtual images. This image may be again focused by another lens which again inverts the image, as in Fig. 16.

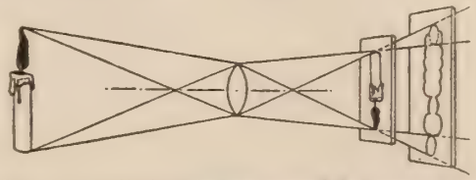

Fig. 15—Indistinct image caused by overlapping circles of confusion

In Fig. 17 we have a diagram in the ordinary telescope in which the real image has been twice enlarged, in order that the eye may see the enlarged image as an erect object. As it is of no consequence that the image be inverted in an astronomical telescope, it is provided with only two sets of lenses and the image is enlarged but once, the large lens, or objective, being made as large as possible in order to collect all of the possible light from dim and distant stars. The image formed by this large objective with great light collecting power being then examined by a magnifying eye-piece selected by the astronomer as being most suitable for whatever investigation he is conducting; large astronomical telescopes being provided with a number of eye-pieces of various degrees of magnification. When photographs are taken of heavenly bodies the eye-pieces are removed and the photographic plate inserted in the tube of the telescope at the proper focal distance.

In our experiments with the prism we learned that the glass of the prism had not only the power of refracting or bending the light, but also of dispersing or separating it into its component colors, and in our previous experiments with a single lens we will have noticed, if we have observed closely, that the images which we produced were fringed with prismatic color. In diagram 18 we see the reason for this, the blue and violet rays being refracted to a greater extent than those of the other end of the spectrum.

Very happily for photographic purposes, the light reflecting power and the dispersive power of different kinds of glass are very different and not interdependent so that we are able to produce by cementing together, as in Fig. 19, or sometimes only mounting together in a metallic mount, lenses from certain combinations of different kinds of glass in which one kind counteracts the dispersive power of another kind and thus the different colors are brought to a focus at the same point. It would be very inconvenient to make a mathematical calculation and a very fine readjustment of a ground glass from the visual focus to the actinic focus of a lens every time we wished to take a photograph. This correction for visual and actinic focus is thus very important and is one of the principal reasons an ordinary magnifying lens is not suitable for making photographs.

It is an unfortunate fact that there are on the market today some makes of cinematographic lenses which are not fully corrected for visual and actinic focus. The writer was at one time compelled through force of necessity, to use such a lens, and it was only after making many tests to obtain a focusing scale or by focusing upon an object at a certain ratio of distance nearer the lens, that he was able to produce pictures of satisfactory sharpness with it. As it is never necessary to change the focal distance from infinity in astronomical photography, no attempt is made to correct telescopic objectives since, when actinic focus is once obtained it is never necessary to change it.

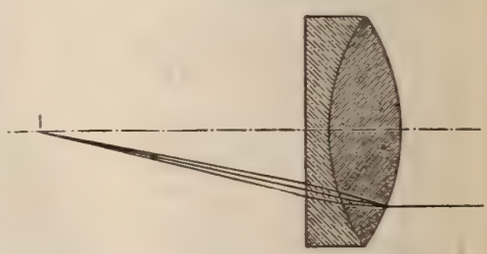

Fig. 19—Correction of dispersion by lens elements of different kinds of glass

The lens is the agent by which the light is directed to the right spot in forming the

Electrical Inductance

Lesson II—Part III

THE subject of induction plays an important part in electricity. In fact, the generation of electricity by means of dynamos would not be possible were it not for induction. Transformers rely on it for their operation; it is present in motors; its effects are seen when a switch, through which current is flowing, is opened; in fact, wherever current flows induction is almost certain to be present.

It has already been shown that if a piece of iron is placed near the pole of a magnet another pole will be induced in the iron which will be of opposite polarity to that of the magnet. That is, if the pole of the magnet is south, the induced pole will be north. This is described as magnetic induction.

It is also possible to induce voltages in conductors under certain conditions. In order to give a clear explanation of the action, a roundabout method will be used to describe it. Fig. 12-A shows a magnetic field set up between the poles of two magnets. The lines of force, as we have already learned, go from the north, across the air gap, to the south pole. To the right of this, Fig. 12-B shows the magnetic field set up by a wire carrying an electric current. As the black dot in the center of the wire indicates that the current is coming out, the lines of force, according to the rule of thumb, must move in the direction of the arrow. Now suppose we place this wire, surrounded by its magnetic field, between the two poles shown to the left. What happens?

The magnetic field on top of the wire is going to the left, the field between the two poles is going to the right, so that if the wire is placed in the position shown in Fig. 12-A, the field of the wire will buck that of the poles and tend to wipe it out. On the bottom, however, the two fields are moving in the same direction so they will add up and make a much stronger field. This is illustrated in Fig. 13, which shows the weak field on top and the strong one on bottom.

This figure shows the shape of the lines of force only at the instant the wire is placed in the field of the magnets. It will be noticed that the lines, after leaving the north pole, bend down under the wire and then curve up to enter the south pole. Now these lines, due to their odd shape, tend to straighten out and go back to their original position as shown in Fig. 12-A. They act just like rubber bands, stretched between the north and south poles, which have been drawn back, or rather down, by the wire. When the wire is released, the tension of the bands forces it up in the direction of the arrow.

This principle is used in the electric motor. When voltage is applied and current flows through the armature, the fields of the wires combine with the field of the poles, as shown in Fig. 13. The result is that the wires on one side of the armature are forced up while those on the opposite side are forced down and, since the armature is pivoted, it must revolve.

To summarize what has so far been said: If a conductor, carrying an electric current, is placed in a magnetic field, a force will be exerted on it which will cause the conductor to move in the direction of the weakest part of the field.

Electro-magnetic Induction

If a conductor, which is carrying no current due to an outside source of E. M. F., be moved through a magnetic field so as to cut the lines of force, an E. M. F. will be induced in it, and if the two ends of the wire are connected together while moving through the field a current will flow in the wire due to the induced E. M. F. or voltage. This is shown in detail in Fig.14, where the wire, represented by the circle, is moving across the lines of force flowing from the north to the south pole, in the direction of the arrow. The cross in the center of the wire indicates that the current is going into the wire and, hence, away from the reader. Compare this with Fig. 13. The direction of the field is the same in case; the wires are both moving in the same direction; but the current in Fig. 14 is going in the opposite direction to that in Fig. 13. This induced current will, in turn, set up a magnetic field which will move in the direction of the arrows on the dotted circle. This can be verified by applying the rule of thumb. The magnetic field is now strong on top of the wire and weak below it. This means, of course, that the wire will try to move in the direction of the weakest part of the field, which is down. But the wire is being forced up in the direction of the arrow, and hence work is being done in order to obtain this induced current in the wire.

This, in fact, is the principle of the electric generator. The armature, carrying the wires, must be turned between the poles in order to make it generate electricity. The electrical action just described is called electro-magnetic induction.

The law which governs induced currents is as follows: The induced E. M. F. tends to send an electric current in such a direction as to oppose the change of flux which produces it.

Self-Induction

It is not essential that the conductor be moved for a current to be induced in it. (When speaking of induced currents it should be remembered that the thing which is induced is the voltage and this, in turn, causes the current to flow.)

If the conductor is stationary and the lines of force, or magnetic field, around it changes, the same result will be obtained. That is, an induced current will flow in such a direction as to oppose the change in the magnetic field.

We can see from this, then, that since a wire, carrying an electric current, is surrounded by a magnetic field, every time the current changes in value an induced current flows in the wire in such a direction as to oppose the change in current. (The flux varies directly as the current, so what affects the current also affects the flux.) This is known as self-induction. In Fig. 15 are shown ten sections of the same wire. In number 1 no current is flowing and, hence, no flux surrounds the wire. In number 2 the switch has been closed and current is just beginning to flow. The flux is just commencing to increase. In numbers 3, 4 and 5 the flux is still increasing along with the current. Between 6 and 8 the current is constant, as is also the field around the wire. Then the switch is opened and 9 and 10 show the current and field decreasing to zero.

Now between 2 and 6, when the current is increasing the direction of the induced current in the same wire will be such as to try to prevent the current from increasing. In order to do this it can be easily seen that the induced current will flow in the opposite direction to that of the circuit current.

Between 6 and 8, when the current is constant, no current is induced because the flux is not changing; but from 9 on the current is decreasing, as is also the flux, so the induced current will flow in the same direction as the circuit current, in an effort to maintain the circuit current. It is this which causes flashing and arcing whenever a switch in a circuit is opened.

Something like this happens when you turn the crank of your projection machine. As the crank is first turned, the weight of the stationary gears, shutter, etc., try to hold back and prevent you from turning. When you once get up to speed, however, the crank turns easily. When you stop cranking, the weight of the moving parts carry the crank around several times, even though you have let go.
